Mr. REED. I do not think it will be possible to do any business until the attention of the country is called to this procedure.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And to the great big Pacific Railroad bill that is behind it.

Mr. WEAVER. And the cattle syndicates.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and there were—ayes 83, noes 22.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 72, nays 100, not voting 151; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER offered the following:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to telegraph all members who are absent, stating that the House of Representatives requests their attendance on Monday next.

The resolution was adopted—ayes 60, noes 41.

Mr. SPRINGER. I stated awhile ago that if this resolution were adopted I would move that the House adjourn, and I intend to make that motion, but I will first move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

FLAGS FOR INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. McKINLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the inaugural committee certain flags, etc.; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. McKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and empowered to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies the flags and bunting in the Government depots, for use in decorating the city of Washington on the 4th of March next: Provided, that if any loss or damage results from the use of said flags or bunting the said committee shall pay therefor.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I move to strike out the word "loan" and insert "lend."

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 247) proposing an amendment to the Constitution authorizing the Congress to make a uniform law of marriage and divorce; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. SPRINGER (at 2 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. FARQUHAR: A bill (H. R. 11972) for the relief of James W. Snyder—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. S. T. HOPKINS: A bill (H. R. 11973) granting a pension to Melissa V. Case—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: A bill (H. R. 11974) for the relief of Elizabeth Pillow—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11975) for the relief of Michael A. Dace—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROWER: Petition of Benjamin Daniel, late of Stewart County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BUCHANAN: Petition of citizens of Ocean County, New Jersey, in favor of increased pay for Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CHEADLE: Petition of George W. Campbell and 84 others, citizens of Centre, Ind., opposing the reduction of the revenues of the Government until all pensions are provided for—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KENNEDY: Petition of C. E. Sears and 30 others, citizens of Circleville, Ohio, for the enactment of a law authorizing the payment of a drawback on tin-plates imported into this country—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition of S. J. Zimmerman, of Frederick County, and of Aaron G. Showman, administrator of Catherine Showman, late of Washington County, Maryland, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Resolution of the Vessel Owners and Captains' Association, of Philadelphia, favoring such an appropriation as will extend the usefulness of the Hydrographic Department—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. RANDALL: Resolutions of Vessel Owners and Captains' Association, in favor of increased appropriation to the Hydrographic Department—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The following petitions against the passage of the international copyright bill were received, and severally referred to the Committee on Patents:

By Mr. DAVIS: Of William S. Robertson, of Fall River, Mass.

By Mr. KENNEDY: Of T. M. Gannier, of Urbana, Ohio.

By Mr. POST: Of C. E. Nixon, and of J. S. Barnum and others, citizens of Peoria, Ill.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 7, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

CERTIFICATES OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of February 3, 1887, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed by the States of Illinois, Tennessee, Colorado, and Nebraska; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying certificates, to lie on the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of New Mexico, praying that New Mexico be admitted into the Union as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Cass County, Territory of Dakota, praying for a submission to the States of a national prohibitory constitutional amendment; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of W. E. Bennett and other citizens of Clay County, Minnesota, praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of Klamath County, Oregon, praying that compensation be made to Joseph Pennig, of Linkville, Oregon, for personal injuries suffered by him at the hands of Indians in the Modoc war; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON presented resolutions adopted by the Vessel Owners and Captains' Association of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring an increased appropriation for a branch hydrographic office at Philadelphia; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the abolition of the entire system of internal-revenue taxation; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a petition of the corset-makers of the United States, praying for a change in the phraseology of paragraph 2503 of the pending substitute for bill for the revision of the tariff; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

TRIAL OF CAPITAL CAUSES.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3733) to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and to provide for writs of error in capital cases, and for other purposes, to report it favorably, with amendments.

I ask unanimous consent to make a statement about the bill, to which I desire to call the attention of the Senators from Arkansas.

A similar bill was passed at the last session of Congress. It was very carefully considered in both Houses, and very carefully considered by a conference committee. It becomes necessary to remove a difficulty which exists in the State of Arkansas and the territory lying west of Arkansas with reference to the trial of capital causes, in which, as the law now is, the exceptions in capital causes can only be argued before the district judge who sat at the trial. Everybody is agreed that there should be a remedy.

The bill failed to become a law by reason of not receiving the signature of the President before the adjournment. This bill has been compared with the bill heretofore passed, and is the same, verbatim et literatim, except that it substitutes the 1st of May next instead of the 1st of January last past for the time of its taking effect.

I desire that the bill shall now be put on its passage, and I ask that it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill just reported from the Committee on the Judiciary may be now considered. It will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The amendments proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 6, line 21, after the words "at the," to strike out "time" and insert "term;" so as to read:

Any such writ of error may be filed and docketed in said Supreme Court at any time in a term held prior to the term named in the citation as well as at the term so named; and all such writs of error shall be advanced to a speedy hearing on motion of either party.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 32, after the word "same," to strike out "time" and insert "term;" so as to read:

No such writ of error shall be sued out or granted unless a petition therefor shall be filed with the clerk of the court in which the trial shall have been had during the same term or within such time, not exceeding sixty days next after the expiration of the term of the court at which the trial shall have been had, as the court may for cause allow by order entered of record.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the word "That" in the beginning of section 7; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of May, A. D. 1889.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I report from the Committee on Foreign Relations a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting resolutions adopted October 31, 1888, at a conference of members of the British Parliament and the French Chambers in respect to international arbitration, and ask that an order to print the communication, with the accompanying papers, as a document be made, and that it be again referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be made, and the communication, with the accompanying papers, will be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

LAKE BORGNE OUTLET.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 742) to make the Lake Borgne outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ill., and incidentally to reclaim and protect the valley lands of the Mississippi River and tributaries from overflow without levees, and the bill (S. 3324) to make the Lake Borgne outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ill., and incidentally to reclaim and protect the valley lands of the Mississippi River and tributaries from overflow, heretofore reported by that committee; which was ordered to be printed.

LINCOLN LAND DISTRICT.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3676) to create the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico, have instructed me to report it back adversely, and in lieu of that bill to report another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill reported adversely will be indefinitely postponed if there be no objection, and the new bill reported by the committee will be read by its title.

The bill (S. 3778) to establish the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico was read the first time by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill is just the same as one that was reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands at the last session, which was passed by the Senate, passed by the House of Representatives, and went to the President, but did not reach him in time to be considered, and so was not acted upon.

I trust that the bill may now be taken up by unanimous consent and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read at length for information.

The bill was read the second time at length, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As I understood the language of the bill as it was read, it provides that the appointment shall be made with the advice of the Senate, but the words "and consent" are omitted.

Mr. COCKRELL. The second section provides that the appointment of register and receiver shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second section will be read as it appears in the bill.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States shall nominate and, by and with the advice of the Senate, appoint——

Mr. COCKRELL. The words "and consent" should be inserted. Their omission is a clerical error in drawing the bill. I thought the words were in. I move to amend by inserting them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries be, and is hereby, authorized to continue its investigation into existing and proposed methods of work, including the whole subject of the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries; that it be, and is hereby, authorized to sit during any recess of the Senate until the first Monday in December next, employ a clerk, a stenographer, and a messenger, send for persons and papers, and summon and examine witnesses; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3779) for the relief of Frederick N. Kress; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3780) to perfect the sanitary service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 3781) for the relief of George W. Bishop; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

MINING OPERATIONS IN NEVADA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no resolutions offered, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] coming over from a previous day.

The resolution submitted by Mr. STEWART January 5, 1889, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be instructed to inquire if any interruptions in mining or obstruction of mining operations have occurred in the State of Nevada on account of prosecutions recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and instituted in the name of the United States; and if so, to ascertain all the facts and circumstances connected with such prosecutions; and for that purpose said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. STEWART. The resolution is offered in consequence of a large number of prosecutions in Eastern Nevada of persons for cutting wood which they used for mining and domestic purposes. This action has occasioned the closing down of many mines and is creating great hardship. I desire to have the facts investigated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 122) declaring the sense of Congress in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America, which was pending on Saturday at the expiration of the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I offered on Saturday an amendment——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the Senator from Delaware proceeds, I move that on the consideration of the joint resolution the doors be closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a second to the motion?

Mr. HOAR and Mr. MORRILL. I second the motion.

Mr. GRAY. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that in the consideration of the joint resolution the doors of the Senate be closed. That motion is seconded by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. It is so ordered. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors of the Senate.

The doors of the Senate were closed for five hours and five minutes, during which time the joint resolution was considered. It was amended and ordered to a third reading in the following form:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America, and must regard any such connection or control as injurious to the just rights and interests of the United States and as a menace to their welfare.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate this expression of the views of the Government of the United States to the governments of the countries of Europe.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution declaring the sense of the government of the United States in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America."

The vote on the passage of the joint resolution was—yeas 49, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—49.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Eustis,	Manderson,	Sawyer,

Bowen,	Gray,	McPherson,	Stockbridge,
Butler,	Harris,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Call,	Hearst,	Reagan,	Voorhees.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called) stated that he was paired generally with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], but the question not being political he would vote in the affirmative, as he was informed that the Senator from Indiana would also vote in the affirmative if he were present.

A pair was announced between the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], the former being in favor of the resolution.

Mr. CHACE was stated to have a general pair with Mr. COLQUITT, and Mr. CAMERON with Mr. BUTLER; but how the respective Senators would vote on this question was not understood.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The doors having been opened,

Mr. SPOONER presented a memorial of citizens of Clear Lake and other places in Wisconsin, remonstrating against the passage of the international copyright bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented the petition of W. P. Atwell, late first lieutenant Company G, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, praying for the passage of a special act for his muster as captain of that company from November 18, 1864, to November 22, 1864, date of his discharge, in order to correct his military record; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3782) to amend an act entitled "An act declaring that certain water-reserve lands in the State of Wisconsin are and have been subject to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States,' approved March 3, 1875," approved September 10, 1888; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MRS. CHARLOTTE CRUMBAUGH.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask consent to withdraw from the Committee on Pensions the papers on file in the case of Mrs. Charlotte Crumbaugh.

There has been no report made in the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, it was Ordered, That the petition of citizens of Frankfort, Ky., for changing jurisdiction of Federal courts in certain counties, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate on leaving a copy with the Secretary.

LAKE BORGNE OUTLET.

Mr. PLUMB. On the 21st ultimo the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] reported from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River the bill (S. 742) to make the Lake Borgne outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ill., and incidentally to reclaim and protect the valley lands of the Mississippi River and tributaries from overflow without levees, and the bill (S. 3324) to make the Lake Borgne outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ill., and incidentally to reclaim and protect the valley lands of the Mississippi River and tributaries from overflow, and on his report and motion the bills were indefinitely postponed. I ask unanimous consent that that vote may be reconsidered with a view of asking that the bills go upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the adverse report?

Mr. CHANDLER. I object. Would it not serve the purpose of the Senator just as well to enter a motion to reconsider?

Mr. PLUMB. The trouble is that I can not do that except by unanimous consent, the regular time for such a motion having elapsed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rules require that a motion to reconsider be entered within the next two legislative days.

Mr. CHANDLER. By unanimous consent, I suppose, the motion may be entered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I prefer that the Senator should take that course, if he sees fit.

Mr. PLUMB. Why not let the bills go on the Calendar?

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to their going on the Calendar for reasons which I doubt not would be satisfactory to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well. If unanimous consent be given, I will enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly; there is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to reconsider the vote by which the bills S. 742 and S. 3324 were indefinitely postponed, the question of time being waived by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. And the motion is to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The motion is entered and lies over.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent, in pursuance of an understanding had with Senators on the other side, that one day's time may be added for the consideration of the tariff bill in view of the time consumed to-day in another matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. The understanding is to continue in all other respects.

Mr. ALLISON. It is understood, of course, that the order formerly made in all other respects shall continue as entered on the Journal.

Mr. CHANDLER. That makes the date the 22d instant for the final vote.

Mr. ALLISON. The 22d of January at 1 o'clock, instead of the 21st.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 8, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 7, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REED. Unless the Chair desires to submit some executive communication, I will call up the privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to lay before the House several personal requests of members.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. BOWDEN, for this week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. GUENTHER, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

CHANGE OF THE RULES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] calls up the privileged report which was under consideration at the last adjournment. The question is upon ordering the previous question on the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 22, not voting 189; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. MONTGOMERY with Mr. DE LANO, until further notice.

Mr. FORAN with Mr. PARKER, until further notice.

Mr. HOOKER with Mr. DORSEY, until further notice.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX in the chair). The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Maine for a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 72, noes 49.

So the motion was agreed to.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Arnold,	Dorsey,	Kelley,	Perry,
Belden,	Dougherty,	Laffoon,	Pidcock,
Bowden,	Dunham,	Lagan,	Plumb,
Bowen,	Dunn,	Laird,	Rockwell,

Dargan,	Hovey,	Payson,	Wise,
Darlington,	Jones,	Peel,	Yoder.
De Lano,	Kean,	Penington,	Yost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The doors will now be closed, and the names of the absentees called for excuses.

Mr. REED. What does the call disclose?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and twenty-six members have answered to their names.

Mr. REED. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. I think we had better have another vote.

The motion to dispense with further proceedings was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask in behalf of my friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. SCOTT——

Mr. REED. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is the regular order, and is a matter of courtesy to a fellow-member. I wish to state that I have received a telegram from Mr. SCOTT, stating that he is detained at home on account of sickness in his family, and I desire to ask an extension of his leave of absence. I ask also, on behalf of my colleague, Mr. WHITTHORNE, an extension of his leave of absence on account of sickness.

Mr. REED. But proceedings under the call have been dispensed with.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am aware of that, but I want the RECORD to show these facts; and the request has no connection with the present call.

There being no objection, the leave of absence in each case was granted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 74, noes 109.

Mr. HOLMAN. The yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-six gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McMILLIN and others. The other side.

The other side was counted.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 26 and noes 116—not a sufficient number.

Mr. BLOUNT. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. REED were appointed as tellers.

The tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 79; so the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 126, not voting 123; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call,

Mr. NELSON said: I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 74, the nays 126; the noes have it, and the motion is not agreed to. The question is now on the demand for the previous question, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Pending that, I move that when the House adjourn it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. REED. That motion is not in order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And pending that, I move that when the House adjourn it be to meet on Wednesday.

Mr. REED (to Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas). You are developing your tactics too soon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion that when the House adjourn it be to meet on Thursday is in order.

Mr. REED. When we had a vote pending?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And pending that I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make the two motions at the same time.

Mr. REED. I make the point of order that we were in the midst of a roll-call, which can not be interrupted by such a motion.

The SPEAKER. A motion to fix an hour or a day to which the House shall adjourn is of higher privilege than the simple motion to adjourn, and the Chair is bound to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REED. In the midst of a roll-call?

The SPEAKER. Unless the call of the roll is in process.

Mr. REED. But we were in the midst of a roll-call.

The SPEAKER. One roll-call has been completed and the House would next proceed to take a vote as ordered; but if a motion to adjourn can not be made the House could be held here indefinitely. Under the rules of the House, a motion to fix a day is of higher privilege than the motion to adjourn itself.

Mr. REED. I had supposed——

The SPEAKER. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 61.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed as tellers.

During the count,

Mr. SPRINGER said: Have we not the right to count the teller who is opposite in the affirmative?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Certainly not. The gentleman in the affirmative will vote when he pleases, and will not vote if he chooses.

The tellers reported—ayes none, noes 67.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. The yeas and nays, then.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will not take up time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAND. Pending that motion I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY). The motion to adjourn to Thursday is a question of higher privilege than the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 5, nays 172, not voting 146; as follows:

YEAS—5.

Bliss,	Henderson, N. C.	Laffoon,	Lehlbach.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3778) to establish the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico; and

A bill (S. 3733) to abolish the circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and provide writs of error in capital cases, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

So the motion of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Thursday next, was rejected.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object. If this farce is to go on, let us have the accompaniment.

The vote having been read, the result was announced as above stated.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. REED. What was the last vote?

The SPEAKER. The last vote was on the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We are now within ten minutes of 5 o'clock.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 54.

Mr. REED demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. REED and Mr. MCMILLIN were appointed.

The hour of 5 o'clock p. m. having arrived, in accordance with previous order the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

By Mr. SOWDEN: Of D. J. Goodshalk and other citizens of the Tenth district of Pennsylvania.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 8, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL—INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. SHERMAN. As something in the nature of a correction in the Journal, I will move that the amendments offered to the Senate joint resolution 122, which is printed as passed on the second page of the RECORD of to-day, be also printed, together with the vote upon them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the amendments that were proposed to the joint resolution (S. R. 122) declaring the sense of the Government of the United States in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and Central America be printed in the Journal and also in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the votes upon them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And the votes thereon. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. There were no yea-and-nay votes; it was simply a viva voce vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The action of the Senate thereon will be shown, and the Journal as thus amended will be approved.

NEW YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE SITE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in accordance with a resolution of December 19, 1888, certain information in regard to advertisements inviting proposals for the sale of a public building site to the United States in the city of New York, etc.; which was read.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the communication be printed, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I think that committee was charged with the investigation of certain similar questions the other day.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FAULKNER presented the petition of James L. Barbour and 1,030 other citizens and firms in the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of Senate bill 3673, for the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River from the foot of South Capitol street to Giesborough; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER presented resolutions adopted by the State Grange, Patrons of Industry, of Virginia, favoring additional protection to agricultural products and indorsing the tariff system of taxation; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of Oren Holmes, of Clackamas County, Oregon, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN. I present the petition of Bedney F. McDonald, of Gainesville, Ga., praying for an increase of his pension, and also statements in support of his application: one signed by General Henry R. Jackson, one by Judge C. C. Hammond, one by J. E. Redwine, one by John R. Winters, and another by Dr. J. M. Austin.

I move that the petition, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I present by request papers to be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims in connection with an old claim pending before that committee. I desire to say in behalf of those who are interested in the claim that though a very old one, it has been recognized by both Houses of Congress, having passed sundry times both Houses; at one session one House and at another session the other House. It is a very interesting claim. It is a claim originating out of the service rendered by Hugh Montgomery, a native of my State, in 1775, who was part owner of a vessel which was chartered by Robert Morris, then managing the financial affairs of the colonies.

In 1775 the vessel was sent to the West Indies with a cargo of flour, and returned with gunpowder and munitions of war. The vessel was overtaken and captured with her cargo of gunpowder near the capes of Delaware. The captain succeeded in landing 240 barrels of gunpowder, when he was attacked by British vessels, and had to abandon his vessel. He, however, laid a train of powder, and after leaving his vessel it was boarded by sailors of the English men-of-war. After they got aboard the fuse that had been laid exploded and blew up the vessel and the remainder of the cargo of powder and killed a number of British sailors.

Captain Montgomery's daughters subsequently filed a petition here, which has been pending perhaps for forty years. Various reports have been made upon it, copies of which I have in my hand. One is a favorable report of the Senate committee in 1856, I believe, recommending the passage of the bill. The war came on and the matter was suspended, and it has never yet been acted upon.

I make the statement with a view of calling the attention of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims to this particular case, which, according to the judgment of the committees that have examined it heretofore, is a very worthy claim.

I move the reference of the papers to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3463) granting a pension to Patrick H. McNamee, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2462) for the relief of Charlotte Crumbaugh; and

A bill (S. 3170) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte Crumbaugh.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3611) granting a pension to Anna W. Smith, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3618) granting a pension to Meryah Watts, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

SPECIAL-DELIVERY LETTERS.

Mr. SAWYER. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11794) to amend the postal laws of the United States in reference to letters bearing special-delivery stamps, to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3, chapter 342, of the act of Congress approved March 3, A. D. 1885, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to said section the following proviso:

"Provided, however, That the omission by the sender to place the lawful postage upon a letter bearing such special-delivery stamp and otherwise entitled to immediate delivery under the provisions of this section shall not hinder or delay the transmission and delivery thereof as provided herein, but such lawful postage shall be collected upon its delivery, in the manner now provided by law for the collection of deficient postage resulting from the overweight of letters."

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN P. MURDOCK.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Committee on Pensions at the last session reported adversely the bill (S. 2758) granting a pension to Susan P. Murdock, and it was indefinitely postponed. My attention was not attracted to the report until recently, when I received additional evidence in support of Mrs. Murdock's application for the passage of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate in indefinitely postponing the bill be reconsidered; that the bill be recommitted to the committee; and that there be referred to the committee the additional evidence I have in support of the claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been indefinitely postponed and the time for reconsideration having expired, the Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the vote by which it was indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, with the accompanying evidence filed by him to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 4th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1786) to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3783) to make and alter regulations as to the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to state that the bill has been prepared by a very able gentleman, familiar with the election laws of both Northern and Southern States. It is absolutely non-partisan in its character. It contains all the provisions, so far as I know, that have ever been suggested with a view to securing an absolutely fair and just election in every part of the United States. It is confined to the election of members of Congress. It is uniform, and modifies the regulations and laws of the several States so as to embody, I think, as perfect a form of election law as can be devised or gathered from the election laws of the several States. Many of its provisions are rather novel to me because they are founded upon the laws of the Southern States, with which I am not familiar, and many of its provisions are drawn from the laws of the Northern States, where they have been proven by experience to be necessary.

I am not at liberty to give the name of the author of the proposed law, because it is not material and he does not wish to be mentioned in connection with it. He lets the measure stand upon its own merits.

I merely make this statement to show that I am not entirely responsible for the bill, although I believe its merits are very marked and deserving of the consideration of the Senate. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3784) to refer the claim of the owners of the brig Tally-Ho to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3785) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be mustered William P. Atwell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COLQUITT introduced a bill (S. 3786) to change the date for the commencement of the March terms of the district court for the northern district of Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3787) granting a pension to Oren Holmes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DUTIES ON SUGAR.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to send forthwith to the Senate a complete copy of the manuscript report of frauds in sugar at New York and Philadelphia, dated November 1, 1887, and submitted by Special Treasury Officer T. Aubrey Byrne.

And that the Secretary of the Treasury be further directed forthwith to comply with the resolve of the Senate dated March 1, 1888, relative to the evasion of sugar duties in New York, or, if there be any reason for not complying with said resolve, to state the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether the word "forthwith," directing the Secretary of the Treasury to forthwith send papers here, is in the usual form. It seems to me that we have no right to issue a forthwith summons here upon the Secretary of the Treasury to produce papers. He ought to have such reasonable time as is in his judgment proper and right.

Mr. HOAR. A resolution was passed by the Senate at the last session, the date of which is mentioned in the resolve, March 1, 1888, asking the Secretary of the Treasury to send in certain information. The Secretary replied to that resolve that the information called for by the resolution would require the copying of numerous documents, that it would take several weeks, and that it would be sent in when the documents were copied. The resolution has not been answered further.

This resolution directs the Secretary of the Treasury to send in at once a particular document; that is all. That is the reason for the word "forthwith." It is not for the purpose of making any unusual emphasis in the direction of the Senate, but it is to indicate the desire of the Senate that that particular document, which contains a good deal of information on the subject, may be sent at once, without delaying for the other information which was requested in the former order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think the expression is a proper one to use as a direction to one of the Cabinet officers of the Government, and I move to strike out the word "forthwith."

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object, unless it is modified.

Mr. HOAR. The use of the word "forthwith" is, I understand, customary in such cases, but if the Senator from Delaware makes a point on it, I will consent to striking it out. I will modify the resolution by striking out the word "forthwith." I will substitute the words "as soon as may be," which perhaps will satisfy the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed modification will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the third line of the first paragraph, strike out the word "forthwith" and insert in lieu thereof the words "as soon as may be," and in the third line of the second paragraph, strike out the word "forthwith" and insert the words "as soon as may be."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These are not amendments, but are modifications by the original mover of the resolution. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 104) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1887, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following concurrent resolutions of the Senate:

A resolution of March 22, 1888, to print additional copies of the report of the Senate select committee appointed under resolution of March 3, 1887, to inquire into the methods of business in the several Executive Departments; and

A resolution of September 25, 1888, to print additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1887–'88.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had announced the appointment of Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, as one of the managers at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 858) to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State, in place of Mr. STOCKDALE, excused.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance as a substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

337. On collars and cuffs for men's wear, composed entirely of cotton, 15 cents per dozen pieces and 35 per cent. ad valorem; composed in whole or in part of linen, 30 cents per dozen pieces and 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I do not know how I can reach my objection to that paragraph by any vote, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that under the latter part of this paragraph on any collar which has in it any linen at all a duty is imposed of 30 cents a dozen pieces and 35 per cent. ad valorem.

It is a notorious fact that the larger portion of the collars that are used in this country have what are called linen facings. The body of the collar is composed entirely of cotton, but there is a very small portion of linen used upon the facing of the collar, and under this paragraph these would come in as linen collars with this tax of 30 cents a dozen and 35 per cent. ad valorem. It is unjust.

This provision, or one like it, is not in the present law, and it seems to me that it ought to be changed. I call the attention of the majority of the committee to what I have stated in regard to it, which is unquestionably the fact.

Mr. VANCE. I am informed by people who know that many of the goods named by the Senator from Missouri, partly linen and partly cotton, cost 30 cents a dozen, and the duty would be about 150 per cent. That is altogether too high and can answer no purpose in the world except the interest of certain manufacturers. I hope that purpose will be avowed and that we shall proceed with the bill.

I move to strike out, in line 1366, the words "30 cents per dozen pieces and 35 per cent. ad valorem" and to insert "40 per cent. ad valorem" in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1366, it is proposed to strike out the words——

Mr. VANCE. To save the time of the Senate, if in order, I will make one motion applicable to both the matters mentioned in paragraph 337. In line 1364 I move to strike out the words "15 cents per dozen pieces and 35 per cent. ad valorem," and in line 1366 the words "30 cents per dozen and 35 per cent. ad valorem," and substitute "40 per cent. ad. valorem" as the duty for the whole paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In both cases?

Mr. VANCE. In both cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the two amendments will be treated as one.

The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1364, after the word "cotton," it is proposed to strike out the words "15 cents per dozen pieces and 35 per cent. ad valorem," and to insert "40 per cent. ad valorem;" and in line 1366, after the word "linen," to strike out the words "30 cents per dozen pieces and 35 per cent. ad valorem," and to insert "40 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

337. On collars and cuffs for men's wear, composed entirely of cotton, 40 per cent. ad valorem; composed in whole or in part of linen, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will prevail. Cuffs and collars are a very small item, as a matter of course, but it will be seen that the duty proposed is 15 cents per dozen pieces, not per dozen pairs, and 30 cents per dozen pieces, not per dozen pairs, making this tax a heavy one. For instance, it is about 4 cents for each cotton collar, and in the last item 30 cents per dozen pieces, which seems to me to be excessive.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina will prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Not seeing him present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). During my absence my pair, I have been informed, has been changed several times. I do not know whether I am at liberty to vote. I ask those who have the management of the pairs whether I shall vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] is paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT], and has been for some time. The junior Senator from New Jersey is absent.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but will take the liberty of transferring that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. SABIN] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired generally with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] will transfer his pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] it will enable both the Senator from Nebraska and myself to vote.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will consent to that. I vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. The pair having been transferred, I vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL (after having voted in the negative). I wish to withdraw my vote, being paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I supposed the pair had been transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] announced a pair between the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. HALE. That pair has been already announced. If the Senator withdraws his vote, that leaves it right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote of the Senator from Vermont is withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Turpie,

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Allison,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Hale,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Chace,	Hawley,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Quay,	Teller,
Davis,	Hoar,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—33.

Beck,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,
Blair,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Frye,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	George,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Brown,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Call,	Gray,	Morrill,	Vest.
Cullom,	Hampton,	Palmer,
Edmunds,	Harris,	Pasco,
Eustis,	Hearst,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

338. Hemp or jute carpeting, 6 cents per square yard.

339. Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, jute, or jute-butts, valued at not more than 3 cents per pound, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In line 1371, after the words "jute-butts," I move to strike out the words "valued at not more than 3 cents per pound, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound," and to insert "shall be admitted free of duty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1371, after the word "butts," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the paragraph in the following words:

Valued at not more than 3 cents per pound, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

And to insert:

Shall be admitted free of duty.

So as to read:

339. Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, jute, or jute-butts, shall be admitted free of duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. My colleague [Mr. BERRY] desires to submit some remarks on this question, and I yield the floor to him, intending to resume it when he concludes what he has to say.

Mr. BERRY Mr. President, if I understand the amendment offered by my colleague, the proposition is to place bagging used for baling cotton upon the free-list.

The testimony taken before the Committee on Finance shows that there are about 50,000,000 yards of this cotton-bagging manufactured annually in the United States. There is at present a tariff duty or a custom-house tax of 3 cents per yard. The substitute reported by the committee proposes to make that 1½ cents a yard, reducing it one-half.

The testimony shows that there is none of this bagging used for baling cotton raised in America manufactured outside of the United States, but it is wholly manufactured here, as I understand it.

The testimony also shows that there are certain mills in India used for manufacturing other kinds of bagging, which, with a very little alteration at very little expense, could be made to manufacture this character of bagging, and that they would so manufacture it if the tariff duty was not prohibitory, as it is at present.

The testimony shows in addition to that that it could be manufactured at Calcutta, the freight paid on it, all charges and expenses of manufacture and every other charge, and delivered in the city of New Orleans for 4¼ cents per yard, and that the duty of 3 cents per yard now added to it makes it cost the importer 7¼ cents.

Mr. Murdoch, who represented the combined manufacturers of this cotton-bagging, and who appeared before the committee, testified that in making up the cost of this cotton-bagging delivered in New Orleans he added the 3 cents per yard tariff, making it 7¼ cents. He seems to have differed with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who said in his remarks some days ago that the duty did not enter into the price of protected articles; but Mr. Murdoch places as part of the cost of this article the 3 cents per yard. He testifies that in effect the present duty is absolutely prohibitory, and that this cotton-bagging is manufactured now wholly in the United States.

The Senator from Massachusetts stated that if the protective system was put in force so that the market could be occupied by American manufactures it would tend to cheapen the article sold rather than to increase the price. Here is a fair illustration of his idea. Here is a tax which has been prohibitory, by which this bagging is alone manufactured in the United States. Here is a representative of these manufacturers who testified that it could be manufactured abroad and placed in New Orleans at 4¼ cents a yard, and that during the last season the planters throughout the South paid to the American manufacturers, who now occupy the market, to use the language of the Senator from Massachusetts, 13, and I believe in some cases 14 cents per yard. That is the manner in which this protective system, when carried to its legitimate results, tends to cheapen the articles of which the Senator from Massachusetts has spoken.

This same witness in testifying in regard to this matter said that cotton-bagging was a charge against the planter. It is true that he at first tried to evade it, but finally when he was forced to answer the question by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], as I will now read from his testimony, he admitted that whatever this cost may be it comes out of the pockets of the planters and the laborers in the Southern States.

Senator BECK. Who pays for them? Somebody pays for them. There is 6 per cent. deducted for tare, who pays it?

Mr. MURDOCH. As you say, somebody pays it.

Senator BECK. Is it not deducted from the purchaser always? It must be. Everybody can tell that as well as you.

Mr. MURDOCH. It is the same way when they ship rice; they do not charge for the tierce.

Senator ALDRICH. In this country who pays the 40 cents if it is reduced?

Mr. MURDOCH. I suppose it would go to the planter.

Senator ALDRICH. How would it go to the planter? He sells his cotton for the same price.

Mr. MURDOCH. Yes; he gets the same price for his cotton. You can make a very nice argument about it, but it is so.

Senator HISCOCK. There is no doubt but it must affect the price of cotton.

Then the witness, after some other testimony, says:

When an article is sold it always carries the cost of the package. But when a planter puts 450 pounds of cotton into a bale, puts the bagging and ties on, and then has 475 pounds of stuff which he hauls 5 miles to market, and sells 475 pounds at 10 cents a pound, you can not persuade him that he is not being paid for his bagging and ties. You might argue with him for a year and it would not have the slightest effect on him.

Senator HISCOCK. He does not appreciate the fact that that is taken into consideration in establishing the price of the article?

Mr. MURDOCH. No; but of course that is so.

Or, in other words, this representative of these American manufacturers says that it is true that this tax comes out of the pockets of the cotton-planters of the South, but he says that the laborer is willing to pay it because he is ignorant of the fact and thinks he is getting 10 cents a pound, and therefore because he does not know that he is paying it they have the right to make this imposition upon him. That is the legitimate conclusion to be drawn from that testimony.

The cotton-planters in the South, the laborers of the South, are not so ignorant of their rights as Mr. Murdoch seems to think; but even if it were true, is it any excuse for him that this Government should use the law of the land to take from laborers that which belongs to them and deliver it to him because they may be ignorant of the effect of the law upon the product which they raise?

Here, as I said before, is a tax imposed upon this cotton-bagging which is levied directly upon the laborers of the South. The Senator from Massachusetts says that the protection thus extended goes throughout the entire country and benefits all parties and all sections; and yet here it is admitted that you impose by this Government, under the present law, 3 cents upon every yard of cotton-bagging manufactured in the United States, and the present bill proposes to continue it at 1½ cents, to take it directly from the laborers in the Southern States for the purpose of paying it to the cotton manufacturers.

But it is said by Senators on the other side of the Chamber that it does not go to the manufacturer; that it goes to those who are employed in laboring in these manufactories. Suppose that to be true (though it is not true), is there any reason why the laborer on the cotton plantation of the South should contribute part of his earnings to the laborer engaged in the manufacture of cotton-bagging? Is the labor performed in those manufactories any harder or more exhaustive than it is upon the farms of the South? It is known to every one that it is far less so. Do the laborers in these manufactories work more hours in the day than the laborers on the cotton plantations? Every one knows that they work far fewer hours. Are the wages paid to those engaged in the manufacture of cotton-bagging less than the amount paid to the man who works upon the cotton plantation where the cotton is raised? We all know that it now is at least double what the laborer upon the farm receives.

If that be true, by what rule of justice, even admitting that it was going to the laborers in these manufactories, can you say the laborer in the cotton-field shall pay 3 cents upon a yard or 1½ cents upon a yard for the purpose of taking that from his wages and giving it to the laborer engaged in some other pursuit?

Those who labor upon the cotton plantations labor from twelve to fourteen hours a day. They labor for the very smallest wages of any laborers throughout the United States. They have their families to protect and to provide for, and they have the same right, or at least should have under this great Government of ours, that is given to the laborers in any other pursuit of life. Why make a discrimination against these laborers and take from them that to which they are entitled for the purpose of giving it to other laborers? You can not say that this tax is for revenue purposes, because there is no revenue that comes in under the present tariff. Even if it was needed, the 3 cents a yard duty is absolutely prohibitory, and no benefit accrues to the Treasury of the United States under the present law. Then why levy this tax upon these poor laborers who labor far more than those engaged in the manufacture? Why take from them 3 cents a yard or 1½ cents?

The Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] some days ago, in speaking on the question of cotton-ties, said the amount was small. Can that argument be brought to bear in this particular case? Is that any reason? Under the present law it amounts to 21 cents upon every bale of cotton baled in the United States. Under the Senate bill it will amount to 10½ cents upon every bale of cotton baled in the United States. Six millions of bales at 10½ cents, I believe, would be $650,000. Add to that the 21 cents, the cost of ties, and we have $1,250,000 more to be added—$2,000,000 levied on those two items alone on the laborers and cotton-planters of the South. In addition to that, you levy a tax upon their plows, their hoes, their scrapers, their farm implements, the clothing that they wear, and the salt that goes into their bread. Is this justice? Is this the kind of justice that you say this Government should extend alike to all the laborers throughout the United States?

It does seem to me if there is any class of laborers who have the right to have their labor untaxed it is the farm laborers of this country. Then why not give them this cotton-bagging free of duty? And if it can be laid down in New Orleans at 4¼ cents a yard, why not permit them to purchase it at 5 or 6 cents, which would be the cost otherwise?

But this Mr. Murdoch, who represents these manufacturers, says if the tax is taken off they can not continue the manufacture; that they have large capital invested in it, and that they are entitled to the sympathy and protection of the Government and ought not to be interfered with. Mr. President, if the injury should fall alone upon those engaged in the manufacture of the cotton-bagging in the United States, I do not think that they should command the sympathy of any very large portion of our people. Only last year on an article which he swears to be manufactured here by them at 7 cents per yard, they combined and confederated together, being protected by the laws of the land, there being no mills in foreign countries operating in making this particular kind of bagging—these American manufacturers who now come to Congress and seem to have obtained the ear of the committee and command their sympathy united and by a combination put up the price of cotton-bagging until the cotton-planters of the South paid 13 and 14 cents a yard for it.

Is that class of men to be entitled to the sympathies of this Congress, and are we to legislate for them at the expense of those who work from twelve to fourteen hours a day upon the farms of the South? Have we the right under the law to take money direct from the pockets of these people and hand it over to those manufacturers?

I saw the other day—it was paraded through the papers of the country—that a delegation had come from the State of Alabama calling upon the President-elect advocating a high tariff. Mr. President, I can not conceive how any man who lives in the South and has any sympathy with the agricultural laborers and planters of the South could ask that their labor be taxed, that their life may be made more burdensome in order to take $2,000,000, or any other amount, out of the pockets of these poor laborers, both white and colored, and place it in the pockets of the men who show themselves willing by combination to force out of them during the last year at least two and one-half or three millions of dollars of their own hard-earned money.

I believe that this amendment ought to be adopted, and that these manufacturers should be taught a lesson, that when they have a tariff tax which is prohibitory in its character, and then are unwilling to take a fair and just profit, the Government should step in and say we will not continue a law that will enable you to fleece these laborers, whether they be engaged in farming or any other pursuit in which Americans engage.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. After what has been so well said by my colleague, it is scarcely necessary for me to say a word in explanation of the amendment, or of the reasons why I offered it.

The statement was made by members of the combination of bagging manufacturers who appeared before the Finance Committee when they were making the investigation of this trust some weeks ago that they expected to get enough during the season to pay them for their mills. I presume they have done so. I think if they had not frankly said what they expected to do that I could easily demonstrate that they have been fully paid for all their investments. When they bought these mills they shut some of them down, intending thereby to increase the price of bagging by decreasing production. Now that the cotton-growers have paid for all these bagging mills, as I presume they have, it seems to me there can be no reason why they should not be allowed in turn to shut them down if they choose. The cotton-growers should, if they desire it, have access to the markets of the world and be allowed to buy their cotton-bagging wherever they can get it cheapest, even if the result should be the closing of every cotton mill in the United States, because the property in these is certainly fairly their own. Whether the title is in them or not, having paid for them they fairly own them.

The operation of the tariff upon this article has been remarkable in some respects and plainly illustrates what we may look for in all other cases of the kind. We have had a tax of 3 cents a yard upon cotton-bagging, which the manufacturers state has given them a monopoly of the cotton-bagging production in the United States, so that the result of this tariff has been that the American manufacturers of this article produce all the bagging used in packing the cotton crop of the United States, and that there is practically no manufacture of this article anywhere else. The consequence was that the manufacturers were able to combine at the beginning of the last season and increase the price of this product to quite 14 cents a yard—twice its former price—thereby, as I believe, robbing the cotton-growers of this country of millions of dollars. The most extreme protectionists must admit that even if it should be held to be proper and right that a tax should be imposed by Government for the purpose of building up an industry, it ought never to carry that policy to the extent of allowing the wholesale robbing of one class of citizens by another.

The history of this transaction all the way through shows the most flagrant injustice. If the bagging manufacturers have been enabled by this tariff to increase the price of their product 3 cents a yard, the amount of the tariff, as it seems they have been, then the American people have been compelled to pay them annually, under the operation of this law, a million and a half of dollars over and above the amount of money which would have been necessary to buy their bagging if they had the liberty of buying it where they could buy cheapest. So about one million and a half of dollars has been given by the law to the manufacturers annually under the pretense that it was to enable them to pay high wages to their working people; yet an investigation will show, in my opinion, that the total amount of wages paid by all the manufacturers of this article in the United States in any one year will be found to be less than half a million dollars.

But assume, for the sake of argument, that the claim of the manufacturers themselves is correct and the cost of producing a yard of bagging in this country, including labor "and everything else of that sort," to use an expression of their own, is 2 cents a yard. That would make the total labor-cost of bagging a million dollars; and yet we have the fact that a million and a half dollars is paid by the farmers to the manufacturers on the pretense of increasing the wages paid to labor. If the farmers are to be compelled to pay this amount of money to the bagging manufacturers, I submit that an amendment like the one offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] the other day, requiring the manufacturers to pay increased wages to their laborers for whom it is pretended this tax is laid, ought to be adopted and enforced, and the manufacturers ought not to be allowed to collect a million and a half dollars for the increase of wages when the whole amount they pay on that account is only one million, according to their utmost claim.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] asks me how many laborers are engaged in the production of bagging. A letter was written last summer by the president of a bagging company, which I read at the time I offered a resolution here directing the Committee on Finance to inquire into this bagging trust. This letter was signed by A. Lehman, president of the Peru Bagging Company, dated March 10, 1888, and addressed "Hon. GEORGE W. STEELE, Washington, D. C.," and was read, I believe, in the House of Representatives. In this letter he states:

> Our factory employs at present over one hundred hands, and we turn out over 3,000,000 yards per annum, and we have an investment in this business of over a hundred thousand dollars.

I take it that this manufacturer has stated the case fully as much in his interest as he could. So we have one hundred hands producing 3,000,000 yards of bagging a year upon an investment of $100,000. If he is correct the 50,000,000 yards of bagging produced in this country could be produced by an investment of $1,600,000 and by the employment of sixteen hundred hands.

But Mr. Gratz, in the course of his testimony, stated that in one of the mills he was connected with they employed about two hundred hands; that they produced 4,000,000 yards of bagging a year. This would, if correct, indicate that twenty-five hundred hands are required to produce 50,000,000 yards of bagging.

Mr. Sturgis made quite a different statement, however, on this point. In answer to a question by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], which I will read, he said:

> Senator HARRIS. About how many people are engaged in the production of cotton-bagging?
> Mr. STURGIS. Between five and six thousand, I should think, with eighteen or twenty thousand dependent upon them—their families, wives and children.

Mr. GEORGE. How many hands?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Between five and six thousand, he stated. Mr. Gratz stated, as I have just read, that in a mill where they employed about two hundred hands the product was about 4,000,000 yards of bagging. This taken in connection with the statement of Mr. Lehman plainly shows that the claim of Mr. Sturgis that five or six thousand hands are employed is absurd, and I take the deduction that sixteen hundred hands all told are employed is correct.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a few of the statements made by these people themselves. In the examination of Mr. Sturgis, who appeared in the interest of these manufacturers, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] asked him this question, as will appear on page 7 of the testimony taken by the committee:

> Senator BECK. And still went to Congress to ask Congress to give them a monopoly in order that they might perpetuate this action; is not that so?
> Mr. STURGIS. No.
> Senator BECK. The present law would give it to you?
> Mr. STURGIS. The present law as it stands, yes. How long is that law going to stand?
> Senator BECK. As long as you can make it stand, I suppose.
> Mr. STURGIS. This movement is a temporary movement. It will be all over in a couple of months.
> Senator BECK. After you have sold the bagging for this crop?
> Mr. STURGIS. Yes; and you can not help it.

This was given in answer to a question asked these people about why it was that they had come to make this combination. They stated that they did it because of the threatened passage of the Mills bill, and that that would destroy their product, and therefore they went into the combination to raise the price, and defied the committee and Congress, admitting the conspiracy and the purpose, saying "Yes; and you can not help it."

On page 23 of the same report, Senator BECK, conducting the examination, says:

> Senator BECK. The cotton is now about to be moved, and there is no foreign bagging on hand?
> Mr. STURGIS. That is about it.
> Senator BECK. And by reason of that fact, in addition to your protection that prevents free competition, there is no bagging on hand to compete with you?
> Mr. STURGIS. That is true.
> Senator BECK. And that has grown out of the fact that you have had a monopoly in producing bagging for three-quarters of the cotton of the world, if I am correct in my figures.
> Mr. STURGIS. No; it has not grown out of that.
> Senator BECK. The foreign manufacturers could not made bagging for the cotton raised in America, could they?
> Mr. STURGIS. They could not, under the present tariff laws.
> Senator BECK. I am speaking of the laws as they exist. They could not make it under the present laws, and therefore they only make the bagging that is needed for the other one-quarter?
> Mr. STURGIS. Of course.
> Senator BECK. Therefore you caught them without any supplies?
> Mr. STURGIS. Yes.
> Senator BECK. This contract was made in April, was it not?
> Mr. STURGIS. Yes.
> Senator BECK. And you were here in July?
> Mr. STURGIS. In June.
> Senator BECK. And you kept the fact concealed from this committee, then?
> Mr. STURGIS. I did, and from everybody else I could.
> Senator BECK. And you did it on purpose to keep the people of the country from ascertaining the existence of your pool, so that no bagging could be made anywhere else?
> Mr. STURGIS. Most certainly. We were in to make money, as I have testified.
> Senator BECK. And you were in to conceal from this committee facts that they ought to know, were you not?
> Mr. STURGIS. No, sir. It was none of the committee's business.
> Senator BECK. You thought we had no business knowing it.
> Mr. STURGIS. That is so.
> Senator BECK. But now you have told us about this.
> Mr. STURGIS. You asked me to come before you on this subject, and by your invitation I have done so.
> Senator BECK. We asked you before to give us all the information you had about the business.

Mr. STURGIS. No; you asked us to come before you to give you facts in regard to the tariff.

Senator BECK. Did you come by invitation, or did you ask to be allowed to come?

Mr. STURGIS. I think we were invited to come.

Senator BECK. By whom?

Mr. STURGIS. I do not remember; perhaps Senator ALLISON can tell. I know we were invited to direct our attention to the tariff.

Senator ALDRICH. I think the hearing came about by the request of Senator BUTLER, from South Carolina, that we would hear one of his constituents.

Senator BECK. No matter how you came. Did you not understand, when you were requested or asked to come—whatever it was—that you were to tell us the whole situation, so as to enable us to legislate properly?

Mr. STURGIS. On the tariff business, yes, sir; but not on my private business.

Senator BECK. Your private business is protected by the tariff, is it not?

Mr. STURGIS. It is at the present time.

Senator BECK. That is true, is it not?

Mr. STURGIS. Yes, sir.

Senator BECK. Very well. You came here, or were invited to come, to advise us in regard to the tariff, were you not?

Mr. STURGIS. Yes, sir.

Senator BECK. And you had at that time formed a trust or combination, whatever you call it?

Mr. STURGIS. We had signed our contract.

Senator BECK. Months before; and yet you desired us, so far as you were concerned, to legislate in regard to the tariff as if no such trust existed?

Mr. GEORGE. He stated that?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It was a fact. He admitted it; he never denied it.

Mr. GEORGE. Who stated it?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have the answer to that question. Let me read it.

Mr. STURGIS. We desired legislation for the future, not for the present. The Mills bill will wipe us out of existence, just as I have stated, completely. What were we going to do as a body of sensible business men? We were going to do the best possible for ourselves. If you tread on a worm he will turn. If you drive a business man into a hole he will get out of it if he can.

The insincerity of this pretension that these people feared any unfair legislation is plainly shown by the fact that this combination was made weeks before they were here urging that the Mills bill be changed. They could not say that the Mills bill would not be changed. They knew perfectly well that that bill would not become a law, because there was a majority in this House of Congress that would not pass any such law, that would not pass any law reducing the burdens of taxation imposed by our tariff laws, and they as well understood that then as they understand it now. The fact is that they had put their money into the purchase of mills and the purchase of stocks of bagging, as they testified before the committee weeks before that time. They took the chances. They were deliberately going to make this combination with the purpose of letting it be developed, when it was so late that bagging could not be manufactured abroad and brought here and sold in competition with them.

They had a monopoly by reason of the tariff. They could not raise it above 8 cents unless they kept the mills of the outside world in ignorance of the facts, because the testimony here shows that whenever the price was raised above 7 cents foreign bagging came in. Their purpose, then, in concealing the matter when they were here urging both Houses of Congress to legislate in their interest, when they were here making piteous appeals, presenting petitions of workingmen asking that they should not be sacrificed by the Mills bill, they were conspiring, every single man of them, to get control of the bagging of the country, and keeping that knowledge from the public, from Congress, until it was so late that foreign producers could not manufacture the bagging and send it here in time to be used for the crop of last year.

It seems to me when they did this they put themselves in such a position that they have no right to ask any favors at the hands of the American Congress. You placed the power in their hands of making this combination by giving them such a protective tariff as to drive out all other bagging mills and giving them the monopoly of the bagging production in this country; and after giving them that all they had to do was to make a combination quietly and secretly, to be done in so short a time before the cotton crop came that the foreign bagging-makers would have no notice and could not enter into competition with them. When they have put themselves outside of the law, when they have undertaken by this iniquitous and unjust combination to rob a large class of the people of this country, it seems to me that the Congress of the United States ought not longer to extend to them any sort of protection. But if you are to give them any protection at all, I submit that it ought not to be of the same nature and character as that which they have had for years past.

There are some other statements made by these people, however, upon this question of their combination and the purpose and intention of it, that I wish to call to the attention of the Senate. On page 27, Mr. Sturgis was questioned by Senator JONES, of Nevada:

Senator JONES. Under existing circumstances and under the existing tariff laws could this arrangement be made at all perpetual?

Mr. STURGIS. No, sir; not under any circumstances.

Senator JONES. It could not be made to last?

Mr. STURGIS. No, sir.

Senator ALDRICH. It is only intended to cover the consumption of the present year?

Mr. STURGIS. That is it. If it will last two months longer we will be satisfied.

And they state in another part of the testimony that they intended to raise the price about high enough to pay them out of last year's crop for all their mills.

On page 28, Senator BECK conducting the examination, this occurred:

Senator BECK. I want to bring out just what you are squeezing out of the American cotton-planters under the operation of a law that you say protects American labor.

Mr. STURGIS. We are going to get back a little of the money squeezed out of us during the last two years, when we were obliged to sell below cost.

Senator BECK. During all that time you had a protection that was an absolute prohibition as you say?

Mr. STURGIS. It resulted in so many American mills that they cut each others' throats, and ran the price of the cloth down until we had to sell it below cost.

Senator BECK. You ran the price down with an absolute monopoly against foreign competition?

Mr. STURGIS. For the good of the American planter, but we do not propose to do it forever.

Senator BECK. That was a sympathetic movement in favor of the cotton-planter and not the result of the law, then? Your sympathies were with the people, but did not remain there.

Mr. STURGIS. We needed the sympathies ourselves, and didn't have any to spare for anybody else. This year we shall not need so much sympathy.

Senator JONES. You sold at a loss in former years, and are getting back some of the money now?

Mr. STURGIS. That is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. President, there could not be a more complete answer to the theory presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] the other day, that the purpose of protection was to increase production in this country and by increased production to decrease the price to the consumers of goods. Here we have an instance of a high protective tariff increasing the production of cotton-bagging to an enormous extent and that increased production resulting in a decreased price, and that reduction in price resulting in its turn in a combination of manufacturers which put the price back away beyond what it was even by a high protective tariff. In other words, you devise a system of protection under the pretense of building up industries and impose a higher cost of goods on the consumers of the country to carry out your plan, and when the mills are built and a temporary reduction in price comes about, they are permitted by your high protective tariff to organize a combination among the producers and the price is put back beyond and higher than it was before the inception of the original high tariff. That is the result of the operation, and here it is shown as plainly as can be in this case, and I respectfully submit it will always be the case in every effort of the same kind.

On page 40, the chairman of the subcommittee asked Mr. Gratz, who was a witness upon this question, a St. Louis man, this:

The CHAIRMAN. What is the price of bagging now? I believe I have not asked that.

Mr. GRATZ. Twelve and one-half cents a yard to-day; will be one-fourth of a cent higher Monday.

The CHAIRMAN. What is occurring to advance the price?

Mr. GRATZ. We thought we could get that much more.

Senator BECK. You have the market effectually cornered?

Mr. GRATZ. We have it effectually cornered, and there is no power on earth can stop us except some of us die or turn thieves on the rest.

It seems to me that that was almost a confession on the part of Mr. Gratz that so far as the rest of the country was concerned they were all occupying at least an equivocal position, and the only danger to their combination was that they should turn thieves on each other, and they stated further that they intended to continue it, for he used this language:

Mr. GRATZ. After buying enough bagging and securing control of enough mills to get two-thirds of all the bagging required for this year's crop, we waited to see whether the Mills bill would give us a rate of protection sufficient to enable us to continue in business another year. It was agreed that in case there was protection sufficient to insure us the continuance of our business the price of bagging would not be materially raised; that, however, in case no sufficient protection was left, we would advance the price of bagging from time to time as much as was deemed advisable, in order to get out of the business this year as nearly as possible enough money to pay for our machinery. This policy has been pursued to this day, and we hope and expect to continue it.

Now, Mr. President, I believe that the present tariff of three-fourths of a cent a yard is more than ought to be allowed upon this article, even if we are determined to keep it on the tariff-list. I think I have shown sufficiently why there should be no protection whatever to these people, why they have forfeited all claim to any protection from the United States Government. But if you should protect them, if you intend to protect them to the extent of the difference between the amount they pay for labor and what their competitors have to pay abroad, then the Mills bill proposes as high a tariff as there ought to be, or even higher.

I want to show in just a minute or two, if the Senate will indulge me, what the difference in this cost is. Fifty million yards of bagging are produced in this country. If that is increased in price a cent and a half a yard, as it would be under the operation of this bill, it will be an increase of $750,000 annually.

I do not believe, as I said in the beginning, that the total amount of labor in the production of 50,000,000 yards of cotton-bagging in this country costs more than half a million dollars, because if, as the letter which I have read from Mr. Lehman, the president of the Peru Cotton Mills says, 100 hands can produce in twelve months 3,000,000 yards of bagging, 1,600 hands would produce 50,000,000 yards in twelve months. If these hands were paid at the rate of a dollar a day—and a dollar a day is a fair average price for them, because the testimony of Mr. Gratz, of Mr. Sturgis, and the other witnesses who were examined was that 85 per cent. of the labor employed in the mills in the production of cotton-bagging was that of women and boys, and that they paid from 50 cents to $1.10 a day for hands; that there were a few hands who got $2 to $2.50 a day, mechanics and so on, but the testimony shows that a dollar a day would be a fair average for the number of hands they have employed in the production of this article—then $300 a year is the averate of wages of each hand, and $300 a year for 1,600 hands would amount to $480,000 a year, the total amount of wages paid for the production of 50,000,000 yards of bagging. And the testimony of Mr. Murdock, who appeared before the committee for the American manufacturers, was that the labor cost to the India manufacturer was 7.2 cents per yard, which would give as the actual labor cost of 50,000,000 yards of bagging in India $360,000, or only $120,000 less than the labor cost here, while to compensate for this we authorize the collection of $750,000, as shown above.

It will appear that $500,000 is a fair estimate of labor cost in this country by considering this matter in another aspect. Mr. Gratz's statement that two hundred hands in his mill produced 4,000,000 yards makes about 20,000 yards per hand per year; and the statement made by the Peru Mills, by Mr. Lehman, its president, that about one hundred hands produced about 3,000,000 yards would make 30,000 yards to the hand in a year. Then, if Mr. Gratz paid $200 per year for his hands, or if the Peru Mills paid $300 for a year's wages, this would amount to 1 cent per yard as the labor cost, or an aggregate of $500,000 for the entire production of 50,000,000 yards.

The cost of the material used by these people in this country and in India can not vary very much. On page 103 is a statement made by Mr. Murdoch to the committee investigating this question, in which he says:

Jute is exclusively a product of India and is marketed as long or "loose" jute in and near Calcutta.

Jute-butts are the root or "butt" end of the jute-stalk cut off because of unfitness for fine work.

American cotton-bagging is made from jute-butts.

Loose jute is marketed in the Calcutta native bazaar, and is worth 25 cents per 100 pounds, or one-quarter cent per pound less than jute baled and ready for shipment.

Loose jute is brought down the rivers by the natives in small quantities and bought by large packers.

We have the statement that loose jute is worth 25 cents a hundred pounds in India, and when packed for shipment one-fourth cent per pound more; that would be about $12 a ton for jute-butts in India. Estimate ocean freight at the same amount, and the raw material of this product costs, laid down in New York, $26 per ton. The statement was made by Mr. Gratz, I believe, that the loss in jute in the manufacture of bagging was about 10 per cent. In the manufacture, then, of 3,000,000 yards of bagging, weighing 6,000,000 pounds, if 10 per cent. was lost the weight of the jute required would be 6,600,000 pounds of jute. Divide that by 2,200, in round numbers, as the number of pounds in a ton, and you have 3,000 tons as the quantity of jute-butts necessary to produce the 3,000,000 yards of bagging made at the Peru Mills. That would cost, then, putting the prime cost at $13 a ton and adding $13 for freight, $26 a ton delivered in New York. Twenty-six dollars a ton is a fair price, as shown by the testimony here.

Mr. DURFEE. Jute is now $40 a ton, and jute-butts are now $27 a ton.

Senator BECK. Where?

Mr. DURFEE. That is the foreign price of them.

Senator BECK. Is that price made up from the price in London and Liverpool or where the stuff grows?

Mr. GRATZ. It is Calcutta jute and jute-butts.

Mr. DURFEE. It is the English markets that govern, I presume.

This statement shows that $26 a ton would be a fair price for the butts delivered in New York. Add, then, to the $78,000 which the jute-butts would be worth in New York $9,000 for domestic transportation from New York to Muncy, Ill.—and that is what Mr. Gratz stated it to be—then add 2 cents per yard for labor, etc., their own statement, and we get the total cost for the manufacture of 3,000,000 yards of bagging, $147,000, or less than 5 cents a yard cost in the United States. Mr. Gratz's statement of domestic freight and cost of manufacture is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember what the freight is on a ton of jute from New York to Muncie?

Mr. GRATZ. Let us call it by the hundred-weight, and I can get at it.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. GRATZ. It is about 15 cents per hundred pounds by way of the canal.

Senator BECK. That is a pretty high price.

The CHAIRMAN. Is not that pretty high?

Mr. GRATZ. That is the lowest transportation known in the world by rail. Fifteen cents per hundred pounds is $3 a ton.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, I see.

Mr. GRATZ. When you figure on it it is pretty cheap.

The CHAIRMAN. Three dollars a ton is $30 a car of 10 tons?

Mr. GRATZ. Yes, sir; that is compressed to a very close capacity, and they load it on an average about 30,000 pounds on a car.

Senator BECK. That would be 15 tons at 2,000 pounds to the ton. About 15 net tons?

Mr. GRATZ. It measures 40 pounds to the cubic foot.

The CHAIRMAN. Forty pounds to the cubic foot as it is compressed?

Mr. GRATZ. As it is compressed.

The CHAIRMAN. It is compressed in Calcutta and sent in that way?

Mr. GRATZ. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it also baled?

Mr. GRATZ. It is baled in Calcutta in very closely compressed bales, and measuring 10 cubic feet to each bale, and weighing 400 pounds to each bale; and so that it is an expensive and difficult process to open these bales.

The CHAIRMAN. What are they bound with; with iron?

Mr. GRATZ. With ropes, and when the ropes are taken off the bale is about as hard to split as a pine log. It has been packed so long and so hard it is matted together.

Again, on pages 34 and 35:

The CHAIRMAN. What do you say would be the cost, including pretty much everything—management at St. Louis, and cost of selling at a fair estimate?

Mr. GRATZ. We figure that if we can get over and above the cost of the raw material 1¾ to 2 cents a yard for the Muncie mill we are getting out even or a little better. But then we have to pay a little more freight than if we were located elsewhere and where first cost is higher. There are mills that make their bagging at a cost of 2½ cents nearly, and some at a cost of 2 and 2½ cents per yard. In going through and getting information on that subject this year we set the price as being 2 cents a yard, that being low enough to cover in absolute good faith a well-located, good mill, and being high enough to make a reasonable showing.

The CHAIRMAN. Two cents a yard added to the cost of your material?

Mr. GRATZ. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, the 2 cents a yard would be the cost of labor?

Mr. GRATZ. Labor, supplies, and all those things that come in, and a reasonable allowance for wear and tear.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the cost of the raw material, say at Muncie?

Mr. GRATZ. The raw material varies always.

The CHAIRMAN. Two pounds to a yard; how much raw jute would that take?

Mr. GRATZ. It is estimated that jute loses 10 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. It would take 2 pounds and two-tenths of a pound of jute, then?

Mr. GRATZ. Two and four-tenths on that basis.

The CHAIRMAN. He will lose one-tenth?

Mr. GRATZ. Yes; you are right. We drew up for you last year and submitted an estimate of the cost of making bagging and delivering it at the markets. Muncie is not a market.

The CHAIRMAN. Delivered at New Orleans?

Mr. GRATZ. Delivered at New Orleans; and that is as nearly fair and accurate as an estimate can be made.

The CHAIRMAN. That was 7.08 cents.

Mr. GRATZ. Seven and eight-hundredths cents a yard on 2-pound bagging at the markets.

The CHAIRMAN. That included, of course, transportation from Muncie to New Orleans or St. Louis?

He states 2 cents as the labor cost, and says he includes in the labor, the "labor, supplies, and all those things that enter into it, and makes a reasonable allowance for wear and tear." Then, allowing 2 cents a yard, which includes everything in addition to the actual labor costs you have the cost of this product to the manufacturers in the United States less than 5 cents a yard. All these facts show that a tariff of three-eighths of a cent a pound, as proposed in the Mills bill by the House of Representatives, is ample protection, and would give $30,000 more than the difference between the cost paid to labor in the United States and that paid in India, even when you accept as true the statement of the American manufacturers of the labor cost of their product.

There are a number of things that might be referred to in this connection, but I will content myself with a reference to one or two other points.

The spirit with which these witnesses appear before the committee, is one that, it strikes me, will not make a favorable impression upon the Senate. Mr. Gratz made this statement in reply to a question put by the chairman of the subcommittee:

The additional price now being charged amounts to about 35 cents a bale on cotton, and as the average cotton-planter raises about five bales annually, the additional tax on the average planter amounts to $1.75 a year; somewhere in the neighborhood of the same amount of money he spends per month for tobacco.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, if he uses it?

Mr. GRATZ. He mostly uses it, and mixes it with whisky.

This man testifies that he had been engaged in this trade for years. It has been, I suppose, a business in which he has made his living, and perhaps a fortune. Those to whom he has been selling his goods for all these years, and with whom he has been having these business relations, he sees fit to appear before a committee of the Senate of the United States and to slander in this infamous way. A viler slander never fell from the lips of any human being. The awful warning in the case of Ananias seems to have been lost upon him. I do not believe there is any more sober, any more industrious, or any more honest people in the United States, or on the face of the earth, than are these people; and when this man goes out of his way to attempt to traduce them, and gratuitously attacks them, as he does here, he degrades himself, if he is capable of degradation, but he does not hurt the men whom he slanders. He further says, and I ask the attention of the Senate to this expression by this same dealer who has been living off these cotton-planters all these years:

But in this country the cotton is baled and laid on the ground for perhaps a month; then it stands out in the rain until it gets sufficiently wet to market it; it is then driven to market carefully on a damp day and sold there. The buyer stands it on the sidewalk or delivers it at the railroad station, where it is exposed to the rain again on the platform.

There is an evident purpose on the part of this man to have the committee of the Senate believe that it was the deliberate practice of the cotton-planters to put their cotton out and have it rained on to make it wet for the purpose of increasing its weight and thereby robbing the purchaser. That man knew when he uttered it that he was uttering as base a slander as any human being ever originated on the face of the globe. He knew and I hope the committee knew well enough that it would be nonsense to undertake to impose on dealers wet cotton. Cotton must unavoidably become damp and wet sometimes. There is no doubt about that. But when this man intimated that these people deliberately put their cotton in this condition for the purpose of wetting it he uttered a slander that ought to call upon his head the anathema of every intelligent man in the cotton country. I hope he will be remembered by the people he has sought an opportunity to defame.

There is one bright spot to this ugly picture. The Ludlow cotton mill, I believe, situated in Boston, Mass., refused to enter this combination and stood outside of it, as I understand. I do not know that it is true, but I understand they sold their product at about the old prices. I take very great pleasure in mentioning that mill by name, and I hope that it too will be remembered. I hope their conduct will command the respect and admiration of this whole country, as it deserves to do.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the name of that mill?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Ludlow mill, of Boston, Mass. I understand that is the name and location. I am not sure of it, but I understand they refused to raise the price of their product and sold it at the regular price. The owners and managers of that mill ought to be treated with respect and consideration as honest men, and I should sincerely regret any injury done them in legislation or otherwise; but I believe if there is any way to reach the others who entered into this combination to raise the price of cotton-bagging, if there is any way to punish them or of preventing a repetition of their rascality I am in favor of doing it.

If the committee are unwilling to place this article on the free-list, I respectfully submit that the amount of the tariff in the Mills bill is ample, and, as I have shown, more than enough to pay the labor cost between this product in India and in the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I represent in part a State which produces more cotton than any similar area of land in the world, the largest cotton-producing State in the Union except Texas, which has, I believe, about five times the area of Mississippi. This imposes upon me, Mr. President, the duty of saying something on the subject of the particular question now before the Senate, and if I can have, which I am sure I shall not have, the attention of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to a plain statement of the facts which ought to be considered by the Senate, I should have some hope at least that this great injustice done to the laborers of the South would not be perpetrated.

I have listened with pleasure to the very instructive and interesting debate upon this subject from the Senators from Arkansas, whose State is also largely interested in this question. They have given us facts and figures of a most interesting character and well calculated to stop the majority of the Senate in its purpose to pass this bill as it now stands.

I had the curiosity, Mr. President, whilst that debate was going on, to cast my eyes over the other side of the Chamber to see if there was one single Senator charged with the high duty of passing upon this question which interests so many people, as I will show before I sit down, who was paying the slightest attention to what was being said. I failed to discover any Senator upon that side who was not either reading or writing or engaged in conversation. So I take it that the very interesting and the very able presentation of the side of the question in favor of free bagging has not been heard and will therefore not be considered by the majority of the Senate.

I do not expect a better fate than was accorded to the Senators from Arkansas, yet I believe the facts are such that if all were considered calmly and fairly there would be a unanimous judgment of this Senate in favor of the relief asked by the Senators from Arkansas.

I do not intend to make a partisan speech, Mr. President, though there is great provocation for doing so. If anybody upon the other side will do me the honor of listening to what I say, I shall say nothing to offend his sensibilities, and all I can say will be to persuade him from doing this injustice.

I understand that it is the theory upon which protective duties are levied that we wish to benefit American labor. So far as benefit can come to the American laborer from an imposition of duties upon foreign products it has my sympathy. If I can be persuaded——

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, may——

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want to be interrupted now.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator——

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want to be interrupted now. If I can be persuaded that it is for the benefit of the great mass of the toilers of the United States, the toilers in the factories, the toilers in the mines, the toilers in the fields, that protective duties should be levied, I for one shall cast my vote for protective duties.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator now allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; I want to get through.

This tax of three-quarters of a cent a yard is levied in the name of American labor. It is justified, because, as I understand it, the great mass of American labor will be benefited by the levy of the tax. I am willing to try the question before the Senate upon the simple proposition, does this tax, not the general protective system, but does this particular tax benefit the American laborer? I say that so far from benefiting the American laborer, it is to the extent of the tax levied an onerous and an unjust imposition upon American labor. I asked the Senator from Arkansas who last addressed the Senate, and who had gone to the pains of gathering and presenting to the Senate a large mass of useful information upon this subject, how many laborers in the United States were engaged in manufacturing jute-bagging. He assured me 1,600. Put it at 5,000; I will take the largest number claimed by the men who in the name and under color, the dishonest color, of these laborers come before the American Congress and ask for the imposition of this tax. How many laborers are taxed? I will give you 5,000 as the number of the men interested as laborers in making this bagging, and I go further, and against the truth of the case, too, as I understand it, I will admit that these 5,000 laborers are benefited by the tax, though I believe only the manufacturers are benefited by it, but I will concede that. How many laborers on the other side contribute to this tax?

The cotton crop of the United States last year was a little over 7,000,000 bales. This year it will be in that neighborhood; I mean this fiscal year, this cotton year; I mean the year 1889. The estimates are in the neighborhood of 7,000,000 bales. I undertake to say, and I will verify it by the experience of every Senator in this Chamber who has any knowledge of cotton-planting, that three bales to the laborer, that is, to the person who works on the farm and raises cotton, though he may raise other things, is a large estimate; that is to say, for every three bales of cotton raised there is a laborer in the Southern States of this country. directly engaged in producing. Divide 7,000,000 by 3 and you have 2,333,333 laborers engaged in raising cotton, upon every one of whom is imposed this tax.

But Senators may think that it is the cotton-planter, that it is the man who owns the land, who is the person that pays it. I will state now in the hearing of the Senate and before the public of the South, who are to judge of the correctness of my statements, that more than one-half, largely more than one-half, of the 7,000,000 bales of cotton is raised by men who work with their own hands in its production and who are the owners of the cotton after it is raised; or in other words, of the 2,333,333 laborers engaged in the production, more than one million and a quarter of them plant the cotton as their own, raise it as their own, gather it as their own, and pay all the expenses of ginning it as their own, and therefore pay this tax directly. If gentlemen suppose that there exist in the South to any appreciable extent—I put it in that way—men with large plantations who employ labor for wages to raise cotton for them, the cotton being the property of the owner of the land in all its stages from the time it is planted to the time that it is sold—I say if gentlemen suppose that state of affairs to exist to any appreciable extent. they are mistaken.

I speak from personal observation, from a long familiarity with the raising of cotton in the richest cotton district in the world, where nine-tenths of the cotton raised in that district from the time the seed goes into the ground until the time the cotton is ginned and baled is the property of the man, of the child, of the woman, who raised it. I happen to have a small interest in some plantations, which produce probably 1,500 bales of cotton, and not one bale, not one pound, not one lock, of that cotton belongs to the owner of the plantation. It all belongs to the laborer.

So then I want the Senate to understand when they impose this tax upon bagging they are imposing it directly, not indirectly; immediately, not mediately, through circumventions and all that sort of thing, but directly upon the man, or the woman, or the child—I use all these terms because men, women, and children are engaged in the production of cotton—who furnishes the manual labor to make the cotton. So we come to this point: Assume that the Senator from Arkansas was mistaken in supposing that only 1,600 hands were engaged in the manufacture of jute bagging, and that the witness from whom he read was correct—that there were 5,000—and then assume, in addition to that, contrary to the facts of the case as he read (because they only got from 85 cents to $1.10 a day), that these 5,000 laborers receive the benefit of this tax in that they get from 85 cents to $1.10 a day, then you impose this burden upon more than a million and a quarter of laborers who, I am sorry to say, in many instances where the land is not productive, do not earn by their work when they are working for themselves as much as 85 cents, $1, or $1.10 per day.

I appeal to Senators, are you now going, in the false name of labor, to impose this unjust tax upon this large mass of poor men and poor women and poor children who are engaged in the raising of cotton? I think you will do it; I am afraid you will do it; but when you do it you will, in the plainest and most unequivocal manner, put your hands into the pockets of poor, struggling, laboring people to the number of more than a million and a quarter, for what? To give 5,000 men higher wages than the average of the laborers who pay the tax.

If these 5,000 men got it all I might be content; but there is not a man on this floor who does not know that the laborers, these 5,000 laborers, do not get it all. They get a small part of it. Whom, then, do you benefit? And if I can not call the attention of Senators on the other side to that interesting fact I will take the liberty of calling the attention of the country to it. If you have determined in your caucus that you will put this bill through without reference to its justice, that you will "steal the livery of heaven," the garb of the 5,000 laborers, for the purpose of serving the devil, the robbery of the million and a quarter laborers in the South, I will tell the country where it has gone. I need not tell the South; I need not tell any of the poor laborers in the South, many of whom you upon the other side assume a special wardship and guardianship for—I need not tell them for whose benefit it is.

You have heard the story of the cotton-bagging trust as it was so fully and so truthfully expounded by the Senator from Arkansas. Why, sir, these poor laborers, a million and a quarter of them directly interested, had been in the habit of getting the cotton-bagging to clothe their cotton in at from 8 to 9 cents by retail. They paid it. Last year something happened that has been detailed by the Senator from Arkansas; a secret combination was made between the manufacturers of bagging, whose interests you are now endeavoring to advance and further at the expense of the millions of the laborers of the South, by which they shut up a large portion of the mills. Was there any benefit to the laborers in the mills that were closed up? They were discharged; they were turned out to take care of themselves in an overcrowded labor market, or possibly subsisting on the cold charities of the millionaire manufacturers of the North. They were not protected. They went out. Cotton-bagging was raised in price just about 100 per cent., and they did it, and I want the country to understand that. I would like Senators upon the other side to give it a little reflection if they would do me the honor and the poor people of the South engaged in raising cotton and for whom they are legislating the honor to consider a moment about this matter.

These men formed their trust; they shut down the mills; they raised the price of bagging 100 per cent. at a time when it was impossible for the people of the South, the laborers of the South, to take any steps to counteract the robbery. It was robbery, pure, simple, undisguised. If there is a man on the other side of the Chamber who believes that this cotton-bagging trust was not robbery, when I get through I invite him to make that declaration to the country at large. They were robbers; they were conspirators. They met together in secret; they signed a bond to rob the laborers of the South in secret. They came before the Committee on Finance of the Senate with that bond signed and sealed in their pockets, but refused to make known the conspiracy in which they were engaged, and they made their millions. They stopped part of the factories; they threw out on the cold charities of the world a large number of laborers, and then under the name, the false pretenses of benefiting the laborers who had been turned out on the streets, they came before the Finance Committee concealing their conspiracy and at the proper time proceeded to go through with the oppression of the rest of the laborers of the country. They robbed half of their own and then proceeded to the delicate and interesting, shall I say Christian-like, patriotic—because I believe, sir, everything is patriotic and everything is Christian-like that is on the side of a protective tariff and everything is devilish and mean which is on the other side—then they proceeded deliberately to rob more than a million, more than a million and a quarter of laborers, in the South; and they come here now and ask what? That is the point. They ask what? In the name of the laborers whom they have thus outraged and robbed they claim from the American Senate—mark what I say—they claim from the American Senate the means, the instrument, by which they can repeat the robbery in the future.

That is where the thing stands. Having been convicted by their own confessions as well as by the current history of the country for the last three or four months of the most infernal and most infamous conspiracy against the rights of the poor laborers of this country, North and South, they ask the American Senate to furnish them with the means, to give them the opportunity of continuing the robbery in the future.

Mr. President, is the American Senate ready for that sort of an operation? I hope not. If you are to become the aiders and abettors of these conspiracies, you are just as guilty as they of this robbery, with less excuse. They rob that they may put pelf in their pockets. If we do it we must do it because we like the principle upon which the operation is performed. That is the way that thing stands. Are you ready for it? Are you ready, because the million and a quarter of laborers whom you pillage live in the South, to rob them in order that the fortunes of a few conspirators, every one of whom ought to be in the penitentiary and would be there under any system of just and wise economic laws, may be still further built up? You rob this million and a quarter that these culprits, these conspirators may enhance their profits by the million. The 85-cents-a-day man, the dollar-a-day man, and the dollar-and-a-quarter-a-day man out of their little hard earnings must be made to contribute to the overgrown fortunes of a set of infernal conspirators against the welfare of the people of the United States. That is the attitude of this question.

So, sir, I believe that if Senators upon the other side could dismiss party feeling, dismiss party prejudice, would open their eyes, honest, good men as I believe you are, sympathetic men for the misfortunes of the unfortunate as I believe you are, there would be but one voice in the Senate and that voice would be that for the future, from this day forth, the laborers of the country should not be made the subject of piracy and robbery by the conspirators in the cotton-bagging trust.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] began his argument on this question by an unjust and gratuitous fling at this side of the Chamber by calling attention to the alleged fact that we had not listened to all the arguments made by the two Senators from Arkansas. If he considers that a proper and decorous course of debate in this Chamber, he is welcome to his opinions upon that subject. I listened with interest to the statements made by the Senators from Arkansas on this question. It is not a question without some difficulty. The Committee on Finance examined it with as much care as they could during the last session, with a view to fix a proper rate of duty upon this particular article. The present duty is 1½ cents per pound. The proposed duty in the substitute is one-half of that, or three-fourths of a cent. A part of this reduction was made because under this bill we provide that the raw material of this manufacture shall come in free of duty, that raw material being jute-butts, now paying $5 per ton.

I think, taking this testimony by and large, taking all the statements made by all the persons who appeared before the committee, it is plain that this rate of duty proposed in the committee's substitute is the lowest rate that can be fixed by the bill if cotton-bagging is to be made in the United States. I will say that every manufacturer of cotton-bagging unites in the statement that this duty is too low as placed here by the Committee on Finance, and my own judgment is that it is rather lower than it ought to be fixed at. I think another eighth of a cent per pound perhaps would be necessary in order to enable the manufacturers in this country to compete successfully with manufacturers in others. So this question is one that practically relates not to this paragraph alone but to every paragraph in the bill. If you will take the arguments of the two Senators from Arkansas, and notably the argument, or statement, rather, of the Senator from Mississippi, this bill in detail would be cut off and destroyed.

This is not a question of contest between five thousand laborers on one side, if you please, and a million of laborers on the other. It is a question whether or not under existing conditions it is wise for all these laborers to have cotton-bagging and other things manufactured in this country, or whether it is wiser for us in detail to root up every manufacturing industry in the country and have all these things manufactured elsewhere. That is all there is in this question; and when Senators argue upon cotton-bagging they are simply illustrating the case with an example which applies practically to the whole system of schedules in the bill. Therefore, I accept the gage laid down by the Senator from Mississippi; and will say to him that in the judgment of this side of the Chamber it is wise to have this article manufactured in our own country rather than have it wholly manufactured in other countries, because we believe (certainly I believe) that it is wiser and better and more profitable to the millions of people who are engaged in producing cotton that this industry should exist here rather than that it should be destroyed, as the Senators from Arkansas and the Senator from Mississippi boldly avow their intention to do.

The raw material of cotton-bagging is not produced in this country practically, although I believe it is stated that there is some jute now produced in Texas. I do not know how that fact may be. It is so claimed, I believe, by gentlemen who have been before the Committee on Finance. This is a raw material produced exclusively in India. It enters largely into the consumption of every civilized country. This manufacture on the whole amounts to many millions of dollars. This manufacture has grown up in this country, so that there is now machinery sufficient to produce twice the amount of cotton-bagging needed for the covering of all the cotton in the United States, and up to this last year competition in this product was so close that the manufacturers sold their product practically at a loss, or at least without profit.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senator state at what price they sold that was without a profit?

Mr. ALLISON. The price was from 7½, I believe, to 8 cents per yard.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Does the Senator state that that was without a profit?

Mr. ALLISON. I said that I believed it was without profit, upon the representations made to the committee on this subject and statements made before it. I will come to the Senator's figures later on as to the cost.

Mr. FRYE. Let me say right there that in my own city there is a cotton-bag mill which has been lying idle now for four years and can not manufacture and make a profit by any possibility.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Was that cotton-bagging mill idle as a part of the agreement of this recent conspiracy, or because it would not pay to make cotton-bagging?

Mr. FRYE. It di-appeared from business four years ago, and has not started up since. It was recently offered for sale at $90,000, when its original cost was $800,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I repeat that prior to last year, as appeared at least to the satisfaction of Senators upon the Committee on Finance, cotton-bagging was produced at a loss in this country, owing to the sharp competition between our own manufacturers. Now, the Senators from Arkansas say that it is wise for them to utterly destroy this manufacture in our country. What will become of them when that is done? They will be relegated back to the situation before these manufacturers produced cotton-bagging, when they paid from 12 to 18 cents a yard for what they have been getting for the last five or six years at from 7 to 8.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator allow me——

Mr. ALLISON. In a moment. They will be relegated not to a trust in the United States that can be controlled at will if we have the resolution to do it, but they will be relegated to a trust that is now in existence 10,000 miles away, who can then impose such charges upon this cotton-bagging as they may choose to impose by combinations which now exist in Calcutta as well as in the United States. Instead of having two competitors at least, they will have turned over this great industry (for it is a great industry as applied to our people) to a foreign people 10,000 miles away, to impose upon them just such conditions as they choose. That is the alternative that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas presents to the American Senate.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator stated that the bagging which is now used had formerly been sold at 12 or 14 cents a yard. That, I believe, was the statement.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated from 12 to 18 cents.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Senator if that was not a wholly different character of bagging, much more expensive than the present bagging that is used; and is not the bagging used now a different bagging? At that price it was made of hemp and made a different way; not so coarse, and more expensive in the making. I ask, further, if the manufacturers who appeared before this committee did not so testify?

Mr. ALLISON. I state without fear of contradiction that bagging made of jute and hemp, whether it was a different bagging or not—they are improving these articles all the time—that the covering for cotton cost from 12 to 18 cents a yard until this industry was developed in the United States, and then it was reduced to from 7 to 8 cents per yard.

Now, we have reduced this duty one-half, and I have stated also—which is a matter perfectly well known—that there is a combination or trust in Calcutta which is the competitor of our manufacturers of this article, which combination is as close a compact as was the unjust combination made by these manufacturers in our own country last year, and which regulates the amount of output of bagging in Calcutta and fixes the price; and but for the competition in this country it would impose a much higher rate upon the cotton-planters and cotton-producers of the South.

Now, because we impose here a moderate duty of three-fourths of a cent a pound in order to enable our own manufactures to exist in this country, the Senator from Mississippi rises up in his place in absolute indignation at the idea that American labor shall be protected in this industry.

Why, Mr. President, in the making of this bill we have not marshaled men on one side or the other. We have believed and do believe that there is sufficient enterprise, and energy, and activity among sixty-five millions of people to induce proper competition in the production of these articles and make them as cheap as they naturally would be to the consumers of them. That is the difference between this side of the Chamber and that. The Senator from Mississippi would cut off this industry. The next industry that he would cut off, if possible, would be cutlery, the next another, and thus he would higgle at this tariff until every industry in this country would be destroyed in detail. That is what the Senator from Mississippi proposes in his argument. That is his meaning and purpose, because he is a free-trader. He believes in destroying our industries one by one, and begins at cotton-bagging.

Mr. President, I have just one word to say as respects the combination of last year——

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him before he takes his seat, as he has made a reference to me about my opinions? And I just want to say that he has no authority for the statement he has made—none in the world.

Mr. ALLISON. I have as much authority derived from the argument of the Senator as he has to say to me that I had not listened to the argument he put on record, that I did not listen to the argument of the two Senators from Arkansas.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not observe the Senator, and I looked over there. If the Senator was listening, I omitted to see it. I am sorry for it.

Mr. PLATT. Let me say a word.

Mr. ALLISON. Just one word, and I shall yield to the Senator.

The Senator from Mississippi says he wants to put cotton-bagging on the free-list. That is free trade in cotton-bagging and the destruction of the industry in the United States. I say, taking his own illustration as an example, he is a free-trader.

Mr. PLATT. I know——

Mr. GEORGE. All the Senator wants to put——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The Senator from Connecticut is recognized, the Senator from Iowa yielding to him.

Mr. PLATT. If I have the floor I propose to keep it.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut first.

Mr. PLATT. I avail myself of the courtesy of the Senator from Iowa to say what the Senator from Mississippi would not let me say when he was making his speech, and that is that I do not wish it to go in the RECORD that I did not listen to the statements of the Senators from Arkansas. I think I heard every word that either of them said.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Iowa says I am a free-trader because I want cotton-bagging to come in free of duty. I am pro tanto a free-trader. By the same argument the Senator is a free-trader, because he wants jute-butts to come in free.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator argues in a curious circle. The Senator wants cotton-bagging to come in free, the inevitable effect of which will be to destroy the cotton-bagging industry in this country; and no man knows it better than he does, if he knows anything about it, because it is as plain as a pike-staff. Now he says, by the same argument, because I am for letting jute-butts in free, I am also a free-trader. I am for letting jute-butts in free because that is a raw material necessary to this manufacture which is not produced in this country and which will not be produced in this country. I am for making that raw material free in order that the price of cotton-bagging may be reduced to the people who consume cotton-bagging, and that the cost of production may be reduced so as to compete with those who are producing this article in Calcutta, and, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] very well remarks, in order to preserve our labor system.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator one moment to ask him, carrying out the logic of his own position that he would impose a tax upon jute-butts, if he does not think that the American people might be stimulated to go into the cultivation of jute in this country? It can be made here.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from South Carolina, who is familiar with these matters, would assure me that in his opinion jute can be produced in this country in a sufficient quantity within a reasonable time for the uses of our country, I might entertain that proposition; but for myself I do not believe jute will be or can be produced economically in this country.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no doubt about the fact that jute can be produced in this country, and if the Senator will give me reasonable time I think it very likely I can give him the assurance that quite a sufficient quantity will be produced here to make all the bagging necessary to wrap the cotton crop in this country.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to hear the Senator say so. We have had a duty upon these articles for a great many years, and I have not heard of the successful production here. I paused to hear of the success of this industry in Texas. No response came from the Senators from Texas, and therefore I went on with my argument on the assumption that jute is not produced in this country.

Mr. President, I wish to say a word respecting the combination of last year. I think it was a combination that every good man ought to condemn. It was a combination of speculators in an article which they knew they could corner. That is all there was about it. They came to this city; undertook to have a hearing elsewhere as respects this subject. As they stated in the testimony, they saw a bill proposed which would absolutely destroy their industry and the money they had invested in it. They said, as an excuse (which was no excuse, I admit), that because they saw a disposition in Congress to destroy their industry, coming as they supposed from the locality where this article was most used, they did make a combination for the time being to advance the price of the article.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator has just stated that these speculators saw the possibility of a corner in this article. I wish to ask him if that did not result from the previous tariff that had been imposed for years on this article by the Government? Did not that possibly result from the tariff?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; it had no more relation to the existing tariff than the Koran had. They produced the article in this country, having a duty of 1½ cents a pound, and as fast as any appeared in the market for sale they purchased it until they had accumulated in this combination the entire stock, and then when the period for importation had passed they raised the price 5 cents a yard, or at the rate of 10 cents a pound, when the duty was only 1½ cents a pound. To make a pretense that the tariff had anything to do with that combination and corner is about as great an absurdity as I know of.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator knows that the witnesses who were manufacturing this article testified in the presence of his committee that it was because the present tariff had given them a monopoly of the production of the article that the combination was possible.

Mr. ALLISON. Nobody stated that, or if any one did every man who investigated the question would have known that it was an absurdity. They raised 10 cents a pound to the consumer or the purchaser of an article which was only taxed at 1½ cents a pound. To say that that combination was the result of the tariff, it seems to me, can not be sustained for a moment, because if the planters had known that this combination was to be made they could have imported the bagging at the rate of 9 cents a pound, or 8 cents a pound, and paid the duty. But the manufacturers kept concealed the fact that they had this combination until it was impossible for the planters to draw cotton-bagging from Calcutta, 10,000 or 15,000 miles away.

It was the fact that the only competitor of these manufacturers was in Calcutta that enabled them temporarily to levy this tribute upon the cotton-producers; and now the Senators want us to destroy these manufactures and all others in our country and relegate their whole constituency to the combination in Calcutta, which is 10,000 miles away. In other words, they want to put themselves in the power of a combination 10,000 miles away, because temporarily a few men combined to raise the price of cotton-bagging here last year.

That never can occur again. That combination never can be made again. I undertake to say that the Senators from Arkansas and the Senator from Mississippi for his 1,500 bales of cotton can now buy all the cotton-bagging necessary to cover it for 8 cents a pound. That was an exceptional situation which never can occur again. Nobody, it seems to me, ought to have any doubt upon that subject.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Why not, I should like to ask the Senator? Why not?

Mr. ALLISON. That situation is not likely to occur again, because the men who consume cotton-bagging will not let it occur again. Do you suppose that the Senator from Mississippi will sleep and lie by until next year and allow these men to combine? What does it cost to put up a jute-mill? Will not the cotton planters and producers put up mills of their own which will not enter into such a combination? It is perfectly absurd to suppose that an interest of this magnitude is going to lie by for any considerable number of years and allow four or five men to pocket a million dollars or two million dollars per annum. To state that is to show its absurdity.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator a few minutes ago stated that the combination did not result from the tariff laws. If he will permit me, I should like to read half a page of the testimony taken before the Committee on Finance on the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the Senator reading it, and I will yield to him in a moment. I will not yield to him just now. I said that no matter who states that the combination resulted from the tariff, the very nature of things shows that it could not have resulted from the tariff; that a tariff duty of 1½ cents a pound certainly could not be the reason or excuse for raising the cost of an article 10 cents a pound.

The matter is perfectly clear to me. It may not be to the Senator from Mississippi. It may be that the cotton-planters will fold their arms and allow the combination of last year to get them in a corner again, as Mr. Hutchinson, of Chicago, a few weeks ago got into a corner every man who had sold wheat on 'change there. These corners at successive intervals come in, but they are never repeated except to the loss of the men who make the attempt. Therefore, I say, in the ordinary course of events the combination of which the Senator speaks is not likely to occur again.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me one word?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has alluded to me as having an interest in preventing these combinations. I thought I stated, if I did not I will state now, that the recent high price of bagging, owing to the cotton-bagging trust, never affected me. It did not affect my personal interest to the amount of one cent.

Mr. ALLISON. I made no such intimation, or it never occurred to my mind that it did. The Senator stated awhile ago that he was interested in the production of 1,500 bales of cotton. I merely alluded to that statement for the purpose of showing that a man who was interested in the production of 1,500 bales of cotton would not be likely to lie by again until October or November before he purchased his cotton-covering; that he would purchase it within a reasonable time in order that he should not be duped by a set of men who had combined on it at the last moment.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator misunderstood me. I said I had a small interest in a plantation on which 1,500 bales of cotton were raised, and that no owner interested in the plantation had the slightest interest in one pound or even one lock of cotton raised. That was my statement. It all belonged to the laborers.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Whoever the cotton belonged to, here are seven or eight million bales of cotton produced annually; a few men bought up the cotton-bagging, and when it was too late to purchase it from other men, they squeezed the planters, just as people have been squeezed about wheat and about other productions. For Senators to say that that is likely to occur again is to say that the men who produce 7,000,000 bales of cotton do not know what they are about. They will buy this cotton-bagging in the market, either at home or abroad, by importing it before the time comes to put it around the cotton which they are picking. That is all I mean to say, and that is all there is in this question.

I have occupied a longer time on this subject than I intended, but I repeat that the rate of duty which we have imposed here is the lowest possible rate to allow the industry to exist in this country. I believe myself, and the majority of the Finance Committee believe, that it is wise for the producers of cotton to have home competition in the article which they must purchase, and not relegate all the consumers and purchasers to Calcutta for their product.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator before he takes his seat to state to the Senate why he believes that three-quarters of a cent a pound is as low a tariff duty as ought to be placed on this article, and is as low as is consistent with the interest of the manufacturer of cotton-bagging in view of the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], the other day, that the witnesses examined by the committee were not entirely reliable, and that they were to be regarded with a good deal of suspicion. I should like to know how he comes to that conclusion, and why the ipse dixit of those witnesses should be sufficient to satisfy him after the witnesses have been discredited by a member of the committee, as they were the other day.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what the Senator from Rhode Island said the other day.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not say so.

Mr. ALLISON I did not hear him say what the Senator from Arkansas refers to, but he may have said something on the subject. I simply state that in this matter of cotton-bagging, knowing the great interest that was felt in it by Senators from Southern States, knowing that it was a matter of great interest to our people, and especially in the face of the combination of last year, the committee took great pains to put the rate of duty at the lowest possible point consistent with the existence of the industry in this country. Without going into detail about this testimony (it is all here in print; Senators can read it), I am satisfied that we have placed the duty at the lowest possible rate, and I will say that it is a quarter of a cent a pound below the rate which the producers of this article say they can produce it for in competition with Calcutta. That is my statement in brief.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator if he made an investigation to satisfy his own mind as to what it cost the American manufacturers to produce this article?

Mr. ALLISON. Such an investigation was made as the committee could make. Of course I did not go to any of these manufactories, nor did the committee. I did not go to Peru, Ind., or to Charleston, S. C., or to Alabama, or to St. Louis, where these industries are located. We simply took the statements of these men, as we supposed honest and reasonably fair statements, making due allowance, of course, for their interest in the matter, and we were satisfied that the rate we have fixed here is the lowest possible rate under which they can exist.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Taking the statements made by these witnesses I am satisfied that the rate is entirely too high.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the Senator will vote against the proposition of the committee, of course.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yes, sir; I shall vote against it, and I shall also give the Senate my reasons for believing that the rate fixed is too high. I shall not make the statement simply in a round way that I believe it, but I shall give my reasons for thinking so.

I stated a short time ago that the testimony of the witnesses examined by the committee was that the price of loose jute in Calcutta was 25 cents a hundred pounds, and that that was one-fourth of a cent less than the price of it after it was baled. If that is correct, the cost of jute in India is about $12 less than $12 a ton. I showed that the cost of the jute brought to this country, with the domestic transportation added from New York to the mills, together with the amount which they claim that they paid to labor for the manufacture of this article, including in the word "labor" not only what is legitimately labor, but also all those things that enter into the manufacture of it, as they say, would amount to less than 5 cents a yard.

If that is true, if it can be produced in this country at the rate of 5 cents a yard, the cost as given by the same witnesses examined by the committee as the cost in India, it is clear that three-fourths of a cent per pound is too great a difference between the foreign and domestic cost of this article, if you propose only to provide for the difference in labor entering into the domestic and foreign manufacture. I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, if he can give me his attention for a sufficient time, to answer the question whether he proposes to do more by this tariff tax than to cover the difference in labor in the United States and abroad?

Mr. ALLISON. The language of the Senator is, "difference in labor." That is only one of the elements. The allowance is made by considering the cost of plant, the rate of interest, insurance, and all the incidents that are necessary to the maintenance of an industry here and elsewhere. Taking those things into account we do not propose, in this paragraph or any other, to make a higher rate of duty than will put our own people on a par or give them a slight advantage over the people who are working elsewhere, equalizing all the conditions in the situation.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The statement has been recently made by protectionists and by Republicans that the purpose of a tariff was simply to equalize the labor between the United States and foreign countries. We have always believed that that was not a sincere profession on their part. We have always believed that the intention of a protective tariff was to give to the capital invested in the production of manufactured articles in this country some sort of an advantage over capital invested abroad.

Appeals have been made to the laborers of this country to the effect that the intention of this whole business was to take care of them; that the whole purpose of a protective tariff was to enable the American manufacturers to pay high wages to American workingmen, as has been again and again stated in resolutions adopted by Republican conventions. I have never believed that to be true. I have always believed that the other purpose entered into it, and the figures in this case amply justify the declaration just made by the chairman of the subcommittee, and I am glad that at last we have the frank declaration from one in authority that the intention is to protect the capital of our manufacturers.

But I respectfully submit to the Senate that the tax levied in this case gives an unreasonable profit to these manufacturers. They stated to the subcommittee, when asked what sort of profit they thought they ought to be allowed to make, that they ought to have a cent in a pound profit, and if they could sell for 7 or 8 cents a yard they could get that profit. I have just stated to the Senate my reasons for believing that this product may be produced by American manufacturers for less than 5 cents a yard, and that a duty of 1½ cents a yard would give them an unreasonable profit. A profit of 2 cents per yard would yield to the entire manufacture in this country a profit of $1,000,000—a million dollars profit per year upon an investment of $1,600,000, if the calculation which I submitted some time ago is reasonable, and I submit that it is amply justified by the statement of the Peru Mills.

Again, allowing a liberal amount for every claim that the manufacturers make, the total amount of wages paid is less than half a million dollars, and the amount of tariff collected is somewhere in the neighborhood of a million and a half dollars a year as the tariff now stands. But if the reduction is made as proposed by the committee, and you levy a tax of 1½ cents a yard instead of 3 cents a yard, you will then collect $750,000 a year by this tariff tax out of the producers of cotton in this country, to be paid to the manufacturers of cotton-bagging, when the total amount of wages they pay their labor is less than half a million dollars. You have the very same principle involved as when you paid them a million and a half a year, and you stand in danger of a repetition of the same combination you had last summer every succeeding year as long as you keep up this system of tariff taxation, which will give a larger profit to the manufacturers than the total amount paid by them for labor.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas in the course of his remarks stated that I sought the other day to discredit the testimony of the gentlemen who appeared before the committee in behalf of the manufacturers of jute bagging.

I said nothing that could possibly be construed into a statement of that kind. The Senator from Arkansas, at the time to which he alludes, read from a statement made by a manufacturer of bags as to the cost of burlaps in Dundee. I stated inferentially that I did not think that statement was correct; and the man himself who made the statement has since appeared before the committee and admitted it was not and that he misapprehended the question, or else there is a misprint in the testimony of "yards" for "pounds."

The Senator must see, in the first place, that the subject then under consideration and upon which the witness was examined was entirely foreign to this. Burlaps are made from jute and not from jute-butts. They are used in making grain-bags and for other purposes and not in covering cotton, and the subject was as distinct from that now under consideration as would be the question of cotton manufacture.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me I will say with a great deal of pleasure that it was altogether upon a matter that we had under discussion at the time. When I was rash enough to quote from the testimony taken by the committee, the Senator from Rhode Island asked, with the manner that is peculiar to that Senator, "Does the Senator from Arkansas believe everything that these witnesses state?" or words to that effect. By his manner and by his method of speaking of the witness at the time, he created distinctly the impression upon my mind that that witness at least was not to be believed. I asked if the witnesses were sworn, to find what degree of credibility was to be given to the testimony, and the chairman of the subcommittee stated that they were not. I certainly understood the general tenor of the Senator's criticism at that time to reflect upon the witnesses examined by the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator misunderstood me. I do not see how he could possibly have inferred any such thing either from my manner or from what I said. The Senator from Arkansas has constantly repeated in the hearing of the Senate that the people who appeared before the Committee on Finance were manufacturers, interested parties, and that their testimony was not to be taken on this account, and it appeared strange to me that because one witness had made a statement which seemed to agree with his own peculiar views he should bring before the Senate the statements of that witness to confront the committee, and assert that the testimony of this witness was conclusive evidence upon the point.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think I have the right at any time to construe the testimony of a witness most strongly against himself. That is a principle well recognized by lawyers everywhere, and I have a right to take the testimony of a witness most strongly against his own interest. That is what I did in that case, and that I have a right to do in any case.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the witness was not testifying upon the cost of cotton-bagging or upon anything which had anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the question now before the Senate. So the Senator was entirely mistaken in saying that I undertook to discredit the witness upon this particular question.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will excuse me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will yield for a question.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is one peculiarity in the arguments which have been made this morning by the Senators from Arkansas and Mississippi, who appear as the special representatives and advocates of the colored laborers of the South, which I think deserves the attention of the Senate. These Senators state with more or less distinctness that the duty upon cotton-bagging fixed in the bill at three-quarters of a cent a pound, increases the cost of cotton-bagging to the purchaser in this country, and that that additional cost is paid ultimately either by the cotton-planter or by the colored field laborers.

Now, let us examine this claim. I admit that the question of the incidence of tariff taxation is an intricate one, but the President of the United States has distinctly stated in his famous message a doctrine which has been followed, so far as I have observed, by Democratic speakers and by Democratic writers. That doctrine is this: That tariff taxes, as they call them, increase the cost alike of imported and domestic products, and are paid by the ultimate consumers. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], who is now honoring me with his attention, has made the Senate resonant with his eloquence in statements that these taxes are all paid by the people, which he assumes the right to represent, who are the consumers of these articles. Take the question of wool, for instance. He will undoubtedly tell us to-day or to-morrow, whenever the woolen schedule is reached, that the duty levied upon wool is not paid by the woolen manufacturers, that it is not paid by the operatives in the woolen mills, but that it is paid by the person who buys clothing; that the ultimate burden falls upon the consumer.

If this is a sound doctrine, how does it happen that in this case this particular tax is paid either by the cotton-planter or by the laborer? Why is not this tax paid by the consumer? How does it happen, if this particular tax is paid by the laborer in the cotton-fields of the South, that the tax upon wool is not paid by the operative in the woolen mills of the North? Have you one kind of philosophy to apply to articles that are affected by your own interest and another to apply to articles that are manufactured north of Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the cotton-growers are the consumers of this article, and they pay for it, and there is the end of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not by any means.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course they are.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not by any means.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think there are very few people who will deny that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Here is one who denies it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I knew that the Senator had denied it for a good many years, but your own witnesses on your own side stated again and again that the planter got nothing whatever from this duty on cotton-bagging.

Mr. ALDRICH. How can the Senator say that the cotton-planter or the laborer in the cotton-field is the consumer of cotton-bagging?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Because he consumes it.

Mr. ALDRICH. He consumes it in a certain sense. He purchases it and uses it for a certain purpose as the woolen manufacturer purchases and uses wool for certain purposes. The laborer in the cotton-fields does not use it or consume it. The laborer in the press-room puts it about the bales of cotton and sends it to New England and we pay 10 cents a pound for it. Whether we buy our cotton cheaper than the Englishman on this account is an intricate question, but certainly the man who labors in the field does not consume the cotton-bagging. He may never see a pound of it except he sees it through the windows of the press-room at the cotton-press.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the difference between the cases he states is that when the woolen manufacturer consumes the wool and it enters into clothing he sells that identical thing again; but when the cotton-grower takes the cotton-bagging and puts it around his cotton bale he does not sell it, as has been plainly shown here again and again. While as a matter of fact the cotton is weighed and paid for pound by pound for the amount of bagging put on the cotton, the price of the cotton, which is fixed by the Liverpool price, as protectionists have again and again testified in your committee, makes the price that much lower by reason of the fact that 26 pounds of it have to come off as tare, and you pay that much less per pound because the tare goes on it, and because the price is fixed for less is the reason why you do not deduct it. That is very well known to everybody.

Mr. ALDRICH. It happens that jute or jute-butts are used not only for cotton-bagging but for wrapping cotton of various grades and fabrics at the cotton mills of the North. Will any Senator on the other side undertake to tell me that because jute bagging is used to wrap print cloths, for instance, the operative in the print-cloth mill pays that tax?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. He does.

Mr. BUTLER. He does not sell by the pound.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly they sell by the pound. That is the basis of the price.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will yield to me I will state that one man in this country ought to know who pays this duty or tax, and that man is the gentleman who constructed this cotton-bagging trust, Mr. Gratz, one of my constituents. He swore before your committee that the average production of cotton in the South was five bales to the man, and he said he made 35 cents a bale, which would be $1.75 on each one of these cotton-planters; and he said that that was no more than they would consume in a month for tobacco.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri will permit me to say that I am not now discussing the question as to whether when the manufacturer buys a bale of cotton and pays for 8, 9, or 10 pounds of bagging, as the case may be, at 10 cents a pound, he has an equivalent reduction somewhere of the price which will offset that addition, but I am discussing the question as to where the incident of the tariff tax rests, whether it is, as the President says, and as you say, upon the consumer, or whether it is upon some intermediate purchaser, as the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Mississippi now say. I want to see whether this new doctrine, which has been promulgated here to-day, is to receive the assent of all Senators upon the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. VEST. It is not a new doctrine.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is an entirely new one.

Mr. VEST. The man who ultimately pays the cost is for the purposes of the argument the consumer.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the cost comes from the consumer, does it not come from the consumer who in the end uses the article?

Mr. VEST. In this case it does not, for the simple reason that the cotton-planter loses the price of the cotton-ties. We have proved that here beyond any question.

Mr. HISCOCK. It adds so much to the cost of cotton, and in the end, if there is anything in the Senator's theory, it comes from the man or woman who wears the goods.

Mr. VEST. But this theory does not apply to the manufacture. This is an exceptional case in the entire range of commerce, it being well established in the discussion had here before, beyond any sort of successful contradiction, that the cotton-planter loses the cost of his ties.

Mr. ALDRICH. Who pays it in the case of print cloths? Who consumes it when it is used in the production of print cloths? Does the cotton manufacturer pay it, or the operative in the mill? That is one of the cases where there is an additional cost involved on account of duty.

Mr. VEST. I know nothing about the commerce usages in regard to print cloth, but as to cotton-bagging and ties, if the same rule prevails, then the man who uses the cotton does not pay for them.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is a difference in this regard, that the man who sells print cloths does not get pay from the next purchaser for the cotton-bagging as bagging, while the man who sells the cotton does get his pay ten times over out of the next purchaser. Whether it comes back to him in any other form or not I shall not stop here to argue, but I want the Senators on the other side to say why a different rule applies and why all this sympathy breaks forth this morning for the poor colored people of the South, who, they claim, pay ultimately and finally this tax upon cotton-bagging and cotton-ties, when in every other case they say it is the poor consumer, the people, who pay it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Again and again witnesses stated to the Committee on Finance that the wrappings do not enter into the price. That has been again and again stated, and it is exactly the case with the cotton bale as it is with anything else of that character. The man who puts up the cotton bale buys the cotton-tie and the bagging, and he consumes it. It is not sold as an article of commerce afterwards; it is mere bagging, like the hogsheads that carry sugar and like the wrapping of all other baggage; it is simply rubbish or waste. It is cotton sold, and not bagging; it is cotton sold, and not ties, just as if a man buys a hogshead of sugar he may use the hogshead for kindling wood, or make any other disposition of it. The hogshead does not enter into the price of the sugar.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator who pays the freight.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The consumer pays it in every instance.

Mr. HISCOCK. But ultimately, whom do you call the consumer?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The man who buys the cotton bale and who buys the cotton-bagging that was put on the cotton bale puts it to its last use.

Mr. HISCOCK. Its last use is the wearing of the cotton.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. No; the wrapping of the cotton is its last use.

Mr. HISCOCK. The man who wears the shirt or the woman who wears the dress makes the last use of it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Shirts are not made out of bagging; shirts are made out of cotton.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will take the very illustration which the Senator from Arkansas has now alluded to. Take hogsheads which were used in packing sugar. They do not use them in these days, but they did years ago. We will suppose that you put a tariff tax upon hogsheads which doubles the price of sugar hogsheads; who pays that additional tax? Is it the sugar-planter or the men who work upon the sugar plantation? The Senators on the other side will not make such an absurd claim as that. It would be adding to the cost of sugar, and it would be paid by the consumer of sugar. There can be no sort of question about that. The man who paid in the first instance would collect it from the next purchaser, and so on.

Mr. EUSTIS. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then you have absolutely given up the doctrine that tariff taxation ultimately rests upon the consumer. Take the article of wool. How does the Senator explain that? If the manufacturer who pays the duty upon wool in the first instance is the man who pays it ultimately, why do you say that consumers are badly treated by an increase in the duty upon wool? Where do you draw the line as between these different products? Is it a question of locality or of section?

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are thrashing over some old straw that we sufficiently thrashed out when we were discussing the question of cotton-ties. It was certainly established to the satisfaction of everybody on that occasion that the tare was deducted from the Liverpool price of the cotton.

I am somewhat familiar with the methods by which cotton is sold in the Southern country. At the offices of the cotton dealers in any of our Southern cities every morning telegrams are received from Liverpool by way of New York, giving the quotation of the Liverpool prices the day before, and then the prices which are paid for the article at home are sufficiently far below the Liverpool price to embrace the tare, the transportation, the insurance, etc. When a bale of cotton thus sold arrives at Liverpool it is stripped stark naked, with only one tie or fastening to keep the bale in shape, and then it is weighed, after sampling to ascertain its quality, and the naked piece of cotton is paid for, and all the loss of transportation, insurance, tare, etc., is deducted before the article is paid for in Memphis, New Orleans, Mobile, or wherever it is sent from.

For that reason, the planter, beyond any question or doubt, must be supported by the old-fashioned rules of mathematics, and the planter alone pays for the wrappings of his cotton, and it is his loss.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose that the Senator from North Carolina will admit that cotton-bagging and cotton-ties are elements of cost in producing cotton.

Mr. VANCE. I deny that it should be.

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, it is.

Mr. VANCE. It is not sold as cotton. It is not sold at all. The ties and the wrappings are the perquisites of the man who strips the bale naked in Liverpool.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are elements of cost to the producers of cotton?

Mr. VANCE. As a matter of course it is one of the elements of cost to the producer of cotton. He has to prepare his article for market. It is one of the elements of cost, just as much as hauling it from his gin-house on the plantation into town to sell is a part of the cost of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I am to infer that a duty which adds to the cost of manufacturing or producing any article must be paid by the manufacturer or the labor he employs.

Mr. VANCE. In this case I think it does.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is an exception, then.

Mr. VANCE. Here the cost is made not by the production of cotton-ties, mind you. Far from it. Not by the producer of jute bagging, mind you. Very far from it. The man who produces cotton is the consumer of cotton-ties. He buys that much to put his article in a marketable shape, and that much is deducted from the price of his article when he sells it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand that all the Senators on the other side are willing to concede that this is an exceptional case, and that it is taken out of the usual rule?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is not exceptional at all.

Mr. VANCE. It is not an exceptional case, but it is exceptional as the Senator undertakes to make it by confounding the producer of the cotton and the consumer of the article which wraps the cotton for market. That is where the Senator undertakes to confound the question.

Mr. ALDRICH. He is no more a consumer than the man who buys wool for manufacturing purposes is a consumer of wool. He is no more a consumer than the man who buys cloth and makes it into clothing is a consumer of cloth.

Mr. VANCE. Is not the man who buys wool and makes it up into cloth a consumer of the wool, and would you not call the man who wears the cloth a consumer of wool?

Mr. ALDRICH. The question at issue is whether he is the consumer who ultimately pays the tax.

Mr. VANCE. He is the consumer who pays ultimately all the taxes accumulating up to that stage of the existence of the article. Then the man to whom he sells the cloth is the consumer of the cloth, and he pays all the taxes that are imposed upon that stage of the article.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is that true as to cotton, then? Does the man who produces the cotton and sells it pass it on to the next man, or is there an exception in this case? There is the whole question at issue.

Mr. VANCE. We are talking about the tax upon the article that wraps the cotton, of which the cotton-producer is the consumer.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator can evade my question if he wants to do so.

Mr. VANCE. No, sir; I am not trying to evade the Senator's question. I am trying to make the Senator comprehend a very plain matter, which I declare I have not the ability to do, and so I shall quit.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, let us follow it up and see. The Senator from North Carolina says that the man who purchases wool is a consumer of wool for the purpose of making it into cloth; and the manufacturer who buys the cloth is a consumer of cloth for the purpose of making it into clothing, and that he pays the added cost which there may be up to that time, but that he passes it on to the man who purchases from him.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not care to be interrupted just now. I will ask, if that be true as to the manufacture of clothing is it or is it not true as to the production of cotton? Does the producer of cotton, who is a consumer of cotton-bagging, pass the cost on to the next man, or does it rest with him?

Mr. VANCE. If I could make the Senator understand the difference between the iron ties and the jute bagging and the cotton that is inside of the bagging, I might perhaps be able to answer his question. The man who eventually consumes the cotton that is in the first place consumed by the cotton mill of course pays all charges that have been accumulated upon that cotton in the course of its commercial history. So the man who consumes and puts out of existence as a commercial article these cotton-ties and this bagging pays all the taxes that have accumulated upon those cotton-ties and that bagging in the history of their commercial existence; and there is the end of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Perhaps I can make myself a little plainer to the Senator from North Carolina if I illustrate it by another phase of woolen manufacture. Take olive-oil, for instance, which is largely used in the manufacture of worsted goods, and which disappears entirely in the process of manufacture. Suppose the duty upon olive-oil which the manufacturer consumes is increased, thus creating an additional cost on that article, does the woolen manufacturer or the laborer in woolen mills pay that additional cost, or does it appear afterwards in the additional cost of cloth or of clothing, to be paid by the ultimate consumers?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUTLER. It has not been answered yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1371, after the word "butts," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "pound," in line 1373, as follows:

Valued at not more than 3 cents per pound, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

And to insert:

Shall be admitted free of duty.

So as to read:

339. Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, jute, or jute-butts, shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the manufacture of jute bagging is one of the industries of our country, and the manufacturers of that article ought to be protected precisely like any other manufacturers. I think the gentlemen representing the Southern States greatly misrepresent the interests of their section in proposing such an amendment as this. In my judgment, their remedy is not in having cotton-bagging admitted duty free and thus destroying the industry in this country, but their efforts should be directed to producing in their favored land ramie and jute, which can be produced there as cheaply as in India. I have some information upon the subject derived from friendly sources in the South, which surprised me and perhaps will be somewhat new to them, although it can not be entirely so to the Senators from Texas.

I believe if a reasonable duty were put upon ramie and jute-butts in the rudest forms and maintained, that under the present condition of things all the raw material would be produced in the South and it would be one of the most valuable industries of that country. It is certainly the interest of the Northern people and the interest of the whole country that the South be enlisted in manufacturing as well as the North. Indeed, every development of manufactures in any branch of industry in the South is just as beneficial to the whole country as if it was developed in New England or the Eastern States.

It is perfectly obvious by the facts which have been made public recently that in the South, especially in Texas, they have the means of raising jute and ramie to an extent amounting to millions of dollars a year. That industry has been started upon by enterprising men of the South, and if they will only give the same energy to the development of that industry that they do to the propagation of cotton and the increase of the cotton supply they will have a source of wealth in the South that is almost incalculable, probably almost as valuable as that which has been developed in Alabama at Birmingham.

I will read a letter from a gentleman of very high standing in St. Louis, who, I believe, is connected with the Washington University, the president of it, or a professor in it at least. This letter will give the facts much better than I can state them, and I shall fortify it also by some other references:

The fatuity of Southern statesmen is only equaled by the inertness of Southern planters.

Senators will pardon the criticism at the beginning.

Great textile wealth is the easy reward of Southern enterprise, yet a false theory of political economy and the natural sluggishness of the people regard the prize with indifference. My chief hope now lies in Northern men and European immigrants. A few days ago a wealthy young man from Milwaukee called on me. He has since gone to Texas to make the culture of fibers his life-work. He is above the need of labor, and chooses this business because he thinks it will be publicly useful. The man who is most actively promoting the success of textile industries in the South is an educated German. He was formerly the editor of a journal on fibers in Germany, and later of a similar publication in New York. He is now in Texas and doing efficient work in urging the German planters to engage in the new industries. He is connected with an organized company which only need larger capital to be sure of success. Doubtless after the cultivation of jute and ramie has become a profitable business, etc.

I shall omit parts of it.

Heretofore these efforts in raising jute and ramie have been mostly experimental. In my last letter mention was made of a crop of 400 acres of jute. The plants were as fine as ever grew in India, but the whole harvest was lost because the unthrifty planter delayed to get a defibrator till the stalks had become too woody to treat. Thus far almost every crop has been lost by the ignorance or improvidence of the cultivator. But next year the business will be differently managed. Intelligence will direct every step of the process. A company enlightened by experience and guided by skillful supervision will undertake the cultivation of jute and ramie in Texas. When one recollects the discouragements which for many years disheartened the culture of cotton in the United States he need feel no despair with regard to the success of jute and ramie. There are now better machines for the decortication of these fibers than have ever before existed, and recently improved processes of extraordinary efficiency have been invented.

He refers to an invention, but I shall not read what he says about it, as the invention has probably not yet been developed. He then proceeds as follows:

I was in India in 1872. At that date less than 1,000,000 acres were devoted to the culture of jute; but the product brought an annual revenue of many millions, and encircled the commerce of the world. What would 1,000,000 acres be in Texas alone? It would only be a small spot on the surface of that great State. The range of lands suitable to this tillage extends from the Rio Grande to North Carolina. Jute has grown to the height of 8 feet in St. Louis. It was not supposed that the seed would even germinate so far north. Still, the plant can be profitably cultivated only in a warmer climate than that of this latitude.

He writes from St. Louis.

You may place implicit confidence in my statements. If they are inexact, it is generally because an excess of caution leads me to make assertions which are weaker than the facts would warrant. In the face of this avowal, it is my firm belief, based upon personal observation in India and China, that our Gulf States can annually raise at least $100,000,000 from each of these new industries. This aggregate is not mere extravagant conjecture; it is an estimate justified by sober calculations upon known facts. But a publication of this statement might be impolitic.

That is one of the statements which I have omitted. It is in regard to the discoveries which have been made in treating jute. He proceeds:

Jute is every year growing more important and various in its range of uses. It is now one of the great elements and facilities of the world's commerce. But the value of this textile has been fully set forth in documents which have already been sent to you. Later facts only prove its increasing importance.

Here is what he says as to ramie:

But raime is one of the most beautiful and extraordinary fibers in the world. According to one scientific authority, it is nearly three times as strong as hemp, four times as strong as linen, more than six times as strong as silk, and more than eight times as strong as cotton. In almost every country on the globe where the climate permits its growth, the government has encouraged its cultivation. Prizes, in some cases as high as $25,000, have been offered to stimulate inventors and planters. Emperors, kings, prime ministers, heads of departments, and church dignitaries have promoted its culture by their powerful patronage. But the Congress of the United States, singular in its impolicy and lack of statesmanly sagacity, not only does not seek to develop so fruitful a source of national wealth by new encouragements, but is strenuously trying to abolish those which now exist.

Articles of exquisite beauty are made of ramie. Inclosed is a bit of ramie plush worth $20 a yard.

It is evidently a very fine and beautiful fabric, although I have but a small specimen of it. [Exhibiting.]

The nap does not pull out, insects do not attack it, and the cloth wears almost like fibers of steel. In many respects it is superior to seal-skin plush. There is no published statement with regard to ramie. I have recently written an article on this subject, but it has been sent away for publication. It may not be printed in season for your use. If it is, a copy will at once be forwarded to you. This letter has been too hastily written for public use, but I have no objection to your showing it, etc.

I was very deeply interested in this statement from a gentleman whom I know——

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows whether the writer of that letter was ever south of St. Louis?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will now read another letter, and the question will probably be answered as I go on. Being interested in this statement, which is a very important one if true, I wrote to the gentleman not only for further information on the subject but for details as to the location and as to the persons who are raising and developing this industry, and I have this letter which goes into details. The Senator from Texas must be familiar with some of these facts, and he can state as to the matter. This gentleman says:

I have never attempted to ascertain the exact amount of jute planted in the Southern States, but since my last letter to you several facts have been communicated to me. Had I known your desire for specific information on this point, it would have been easy for me to add a long list of similar statistics. It may be well to state that in India jute ordinarily grows to a height of 7 to 10 feet.

G. A. Doss, Rockdale, Milan County, Texas, says that in 1888 several farmers in his vicinity raised 7 or 8 acres of jute each.

The jute grown by Friedrich Natho, Yorktown, DeWitt County, Texas, was 9 or 10 feet in height. If my memory serves me, Mr. Natho planted about 20 acres. This was last year's acreage. In 1889 he will, besides cultivating jute, plant 7 acres of ramie.

In 1888, F. L. Marshall, of Weatherford, Tex., raised 20 acres of jute, the stalks of which were grown 7 to 9 feet high.

George P. Levy, president of the Jute Planting Company, Parker County, Texas, states that last year his company planted 20 acres of jute. The stems grew to a height of 7 to 9 feet. He adds the important fact that the crop was profitable.

The jute which was raised by Mr. Stuebner, of Stuebner, Tex., reached the height of 15 feet.

There are twenty-three jute factories in the United States, chiefly employed in the manufacture of the coarser grades of goods. Cotton-baling is the main product of these mills. As soon as domestic jute is produced in sufficient quantities, factories will doubtless be erected for the manufacture of finer fabrics.

France now consumes about $25,000,000 worth of ramie. One ramie factory has already been built in this country. It is situated in New York.

F. O. Matthiessen, president of the New York Ramie Spinning Company, offers to buy at $80 a ton all the ramie which the Southern States produce.

A few years ago Senator Ferry, of France—

A very eminent man, as we know, as a matter of course—

made through the agency of the American minister a formal proposition to Southern planters to purchase of them at stipulated rates 20,000,000 pounds of ramie a month. But the indifference of Southern farmers, and the inefficiency of the defibrators which then existed, prevented an acceptance of the overture.

The following facts will show how rapidly ramie grows in Texas:

"Late in the summer of 1887 several thousand ramie plants were set on the plantation of Mr. Natho. The very next year, in spite of a drought of nine weeks of great intensity, the mass of roots of a single plant were in some instances 2½ feet across and the number of shoots from a single root was frequently from 100 to 150. In one case it was by actual count 168. In France, even on the oldest plantations, the number of stems from a single root rarely exceeds 40, and the average is 25 or 30. In fourteen days after the stalks on Mr. Natho's plantation were cut the new sprouts were 30 inches high."

It seems to me to be extremely important to enlist farmers in the defense of a political policy by such Congressional legislation as will effectively promote the great agricultural interests of the nation.

If this be true, it does seem to me that the real interest not only of the South but of this whole country would be to encourage the production of these two important textile fibers in the South. The South is the great producer of cotton, the people there can compete with all the countries in the world. Protection to cotton would be nothing, but protection to these fibers would have the same influence as protection to cotton in the early growth of cotton, for it must not be forgotten that cotton was for years protected in the South like any other production of the country.

I say if the policy of this country is to be pursued on a broad and sure foundation, the course would be to encourage, to protect, to foster even by premiums and by bounties and by protective duties the growth of these important fibers.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me just one moment in connection with the statement he has just read?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to say that I have no doubt that ramie at least can be cultivated in very many portions of the South as well perhaps as in India, and I think it very likely that jute could also be cultivated, particularly in the old rice-fields on the seacoast in my State, in North Carolina, and in Georgia, and I dare say in Texas. A good many experiments have been made in that direction. I heard of one within the last ten days in the neighborhood of Beaufort, S. C., in the direction of cultivating ramie, and those who have embarked in it are perfectly satisfied that they can grow the ramie as cheaply and as well perhaps as it can be grown anywhere else.

But the trouble is that no process has yet been discovered by which it can be what is called decorticated; that is, by which the fiber can be separated from the bark. In India, as I understand, where they make jute, it is put into vats or ponds of water, and there it goes through a partial decomposition, and the natives go into the water up to their necks almost and twist it out. That could not be done in this country. So the difficulty has been that no method has been found by which this decortication can take place within such limits as to justify its large cultivation. Possibly something will be invented, as I very much hope, which will obviate that difficulty.

I will state further to the Senate in this connection that the simple ocher stalk, which will make, I am told, as much as from two to three tons of fiber per acre, would make as fine matting, as fine bagging for cotton as jute bagging, but the same difficulty presents itself there. A friend of mine in my own county has sent me some of the fiber twisted up from the inside bark of the common ocher, which is very much like the cotton stalk, by the way, and grows wherever cotton will grow, and at a very great height where the land is rich. That may be utilized for the purpose the Senator is now referring to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me finish my statement, and then I will give way.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought he had finished.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I will go on and finish my statement before the Senator from Texas proceeds, because it will be by way of explanation. The Senator from Texas no doubt knows a great deal about this industry.

There is no difficulty about invention. Invention always follows production. This gentleman, in a part of the letter which I did not read because I did not know but that it might affect interests which are being developed, refers to several important discoveries in the process of eliminating or separating the fiber from the straw.

Mr. CHACE. Decorticating.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is too big a word for me to learn quickly. At any rate, he states that inventions have been made that would solve that problem. But whatever any nation in the world can do Americans can do. There is no task of invention, or no mystery of production, or no process of manufacture that the Americans can not improve upon. Certainly they can adopt any. There is no mystery about it at all.

As to the labor, the labor in the South is admirably adapted for this product; and I have no doubt myself that every pound of ramie and the coarser material of jute could be sold for exportation, if necessary, until processes were discovered. I assure you if you let the Yankee understand that he can go down there and by machinery and with the use of capital make money out of separating the fiber from the raw product, when your jute-butts and your ramie grow, he will be there by the hundred, with plenty of money to help you.

Mr. BUTLER. The Yankee has been notified and we would be delighted to see him, but he has not turned up yet.

Mr. SHERMAN. He will not come until he sees a chance to make money. Then he will come. There is no trouble about that.

The gentleman who writes me is evidently, as you see by his letter, a man of intelligence. Now, there is the road to prosperity. Instead of breaking down our protective system, the time will soon come, I hope, when the Southern Senators will be here not only seeking protection on sugar and rice but on a thousand other things in their country, when they may manufacture to a large extent their own cotton, when they may adapt themselves to these new discoveries and raise other fibers which their semi-tropical climate enables them to do. In that way they will advance the interests of their section far more than by an abortive effort to break down the manufacture of cotton-bagging.

Sir, if you developed these industries mills would be established in the neighborhood of these raw materials, capital would go there and invention would follow, and then you would have these things manufactured in your midst. In the mean time it may be very vital to these starting industries to be protected by a reasonable duty on cotton-bagging, and also upon the coarse fibers.

I wish only to say that now is not the proper time to do it, but if Senators from the South where these raw materials can be produced desire jute-butts or ramie to be put upon the dutiable-list I shall very cheerfully vote for it. It seems to me that is the direction in which they should move. I should rather see the Senator from Arkansas with his energy and zeal rise up here and offer a reasonable duty, I do not care what it is, on jute-butts and on ramie, and I would vote for it with great pleasure with a certainty that his section would not only in a short time produce these raw materials, but that they would have establishments among themselves at home where it could to be used for the manufacture of all the cotton-bagging that is necessary for binding 7,000,000 bales of cotton, which is an immense market in itself. In that way they can beat the Yankee, and only in that way. They can not do it by growling about protective duties, because the area of protective duties is settled upon and the policy is settled upon, and they should seek to avail themselves of the advantages of that policy.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, there is no trouble about the growth of ramie and jute in Texas. The soil and the climate there are adapted to it, but there is no capital there employed in such factories as would be necessary to make the cultivation of these plants profitable. The capital is not there. Those who would engage in the cultivation of these plants of course are deterred from it because there is no way to realize from it. They are commencing in several places in Texas to build factories for the manufacture of bagging, and these will be followed by the planting and raising of enough of the textile products to keep them going. As factories are erected, and as capital is invested in the manufacture of these plants, agriculture will not be behind in furnishing the material to operate them.

The Senator from Ohio says that the Senators from the South are grumbling; that we had better go to work and emulate Yankee energy and enterprise and be producers ourselves. He suggests that he would be glad to vote for a protective duty on jute and ramie and plants of this sort that may be cultivated in the South. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that if he has been an observer of the recent industrial statistics of this country, he knows that the South is not lagging in industrial development, and has not been since the war. In the South all values were destroyed; all prosperity was banished. The wealth that had accumulated for generations was sunk by the result of the war.

No people were ever so prostrated as were the people of the South by the result of the great civil war. After we obtained some sort of government in which we have some voice, we went to work, and the statistics show that no other people have ever accomplished so much in so short a time as have the people of the South. Agriculture, manufacturing, mining, every branch of human industry has grown as it has never grown before in other countries since we commenced to recuperate after the war.

The Senator from Ohio ought not to make flings at us. We have had a poor chance, but we have done splendidly with it and we are doing well now. Let him travel down South, and where there was desolation fifteen years ago he will be greeted with productive, wide-spread, highly-cultivated fields. He will find mining, he will find manufactures, he will find cotton and woolen factories and iron foundries. Mr. President, this thing has just commenced to get under way in the South. We shall develop the South. We shall make it the great country that nature intended it should be. We have vast, unlimited, unrivaled resources, and we have the blood, the energy, and the brain that will develop and show to the world what can be done with them.

We have Yankees in the South, plenty of them. They are coming down there every day and becoming of us. We can not do everything in a day, or in a year, or in five years. We have done more already than any other people ever did in so short a time, commencing upon such a basis. We have plenty of energy there and plenty of live Southern and Yankee people. We have a great deal to do there, and while we have not ramie and jute factories and plantations, we are beginning to have them, and we will have them, and we shall not come to Congress for a bounty nor for a protective duty either. All we want is low taxes and honest government, and the balance we will do for ourselves. We want no tariff duty for our protection. We desire to pay our taxes for the support of the Government, and pay them through the custom-house, if you please, but we desire to pay no more than is absolutely necessary for an economical support of the Government. We do not wish to accumulate a surplus in the Treasury. We desire to have the money in circulation among the people as a help and an aid to industry and to enterprise, and as an encouragement to energy and development.

The Senator says he is willing to vote for a duty to protect us in the raising of ramie and jute. For one, representing in part one great State, I say I thank you. We shall cultivate these products in due time. We shall get to them after awhile. We are doing other things right now that are more profitable. We shall get to them in a little while, and we shall make them without a protective tariff and without the aid of the Government.

All we ask of the Government is to keep your hands off of us and let us alone, and we shall do the rest; we want no protective tariff. The tariff is no protection to us. It adds nothing to our wealth; it subtracts every time. We are taxed on everything and in every way. The taxes on the ties that go around our cotton have been increased from 35 per cent. to 108 per cent. ad valorem. We are bearing all this taxation, and yet we are doing well, and we will continue to do well.

Mr. President, the South has learned a great deal. She has been through a great period of adversity. She has seen all her idols cast down. She has seen her wealth depart. She has seen everything except the honor of her men and her women destroyed, and she has had to commence a new career on a new basis. If you will only deal justly we ask no liberality, we ask no concession, we ask no protection. If you will only take from us what is necessary for the support of the Government it is all we ask; we will be satisfied; we shall do the rest; and we will bring the Southern section of this country proudly up abreast with the East and West and North in industrial and material development, and contribute our full quota to the honor and glory and well-being of the Government and people.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have often had occasion to admire the ability and the skill of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in debate. His ability and his skill in debate are fully recognized in this part of the Chamber, as I presume they are throughout this entire country. It does not need an illustration of that ability and skill in this discussion, because the country has already acknowledged it, and it will acknowledge it hereafter; but the Senator from Ohio saw that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] was being pressed in the discussion of the question of cotton-bagging and cotton-ties, and with that ability and that skill in debate which have been observed of him heretofore he deliberately switches off this discussion upon another issue. It was able, it was skillful; but what has the question of raising jute 30 feet high to do with the question of whether a tax upon cotton-bagging is proper or not? What has all the advice which the Senator from Ohio volunteers to the people of the South in reference to their interests to do with the simple question of whether this tax upon cotton-bagging should be continued or not? It was ingenious in the Senator from Ohio to divert attention from the iniquitous proposition in this bill as to the duty upon cotton-bagging, but it adds nothing to the proper discussion of this question for the Senator to rise in his place and tell us about the ability of the South to produce jute and to manufacture jute hereafter and to become the recipient of the protective policy which he advocates.

If anything is capable of being demonstrated, or if any argument is capable of demonstrating it, it has been demonstrated clearly in this debate that the tax proposed upon cotton-bagging is a tax upon the labor of the South; that that labor never can remunerate itself in the sale of the cotton because the bagging is stripped from the cotton itself and is a complete loss to the labor that produces the cotton. That demonstration has been made to the satisfaction of every one who has listened to the arguments of my friends from North Carolina and from Arkansas. If that is true, what becomes of your argument that the protective policy is for the purpose of protecting labor?

I said in a few remarks that I made some time ago that it was impossible by legislation to protect labor, and I hold to that doctrine yet. You can increase the price of the manufactured product, but you can not increase the price of labor, for that is to be determined by the supply and demand for it in every avocation and calling of life, not only in the agricultural communities, but in the manufacturing communities. Labor will be procured at the cheapest rates that it can be by employers in every calling and avocation of life. Whilst it is true that by your protective system you give greater profits to all the manufacturing interests of the country and thus enable them, if they are so disposed, to increase the wages of their employés, yet have not human experience and the observation of everybody demonstrated that they do not do it? Why do strikes exist if your laboring interests have been properly remunerated?

You may legislate until doomsday, and unless you have the power to fix the wages and determine what should be given to the employer and the employé, respectively, all your legislation so far as labor is concerned is but trivial and vain.

Mr. President, this very item demonstrates the unsoundness of the view which has been advocated by the protectionists. Here is one interest employing two million and a quarter of laborers, according to the estimates and calculations of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and yet you propose to burden that two million and a quarter of laborers with a tax under the pretense that you are legislating in the interest of labor.

I simply rose to call the attention of the Senate to the question at issue, and not have it diverted by the ingenious and able views presented by the Senator from Ohio, for he is always able and I always listen to him with a great deal of pleasure, but I could not fail to detect the ingenuity by which this debate was to be led away from the question pending in the Senate to an issue which is not before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I must have been very unhappy in what I said, certainly unintentionally so, that I stirred up my friend from Texas [Mr. COKE] to the defense of the South, which was a very eloquent and beautiful description of her progress, etc. I appreciate that as much as any one. I have had the pleasure since the war of traveling through every Southern State, and everywhere I noticed signs of progress and prosperity. I said nothing to the contrary.

My friend from Texas made one or two remarks which nearly led me to believe that he looked upon the South almost as a separate country from ours. The South is a part of our country, and will be forever, no doubt. Whatever else we may differ about, there is no doubt about the unity, power, and greatness of our country; and, therefore, I take as much pride in the prosperity of the South as I do in that of New England or Ohio or the Northwest, with its marvelous prosperity. What I meant, and what I intended to say, was that different ideas of political economy—a different line of public policy—would tend to promote the interest of the South more even than the North. The Senator and I differ as to that line of policy; but if ever in the world a political-economic proposition was plain, it is that the South, a section of the country that for two centuries at least was a region with a single occupation—that of agriculture—where manufactures were scarcely developed and whose commerce was not developed except by the use of great natural rivers, should change that policy. It was a country of raw resources, where cotton and wool and various articles of that kind, the rawest material and the basis of manufactures, were produced in great abundance and at great cheapness and with great ease, as is the case now; and there labor abounds to a great extent. In such a district the economic theories that I believe in would be better for that country.

It was not in the least to underrate or to lower the standard of Southern pride or Southern feeling that I made that remark, but simply to point out to you my conviction that had you not been trained in that school which taught you that you should not look to the Government of the country for protection and support to aid in your development but should look alone to yourselves, but if you had been trained to believe that you have a right to look to your country and claim the support and aid that has developed the North, your condition would be better to-day. You sometimes complain that this system of public policy is beneficial to the North only and that you do not get the benefit of it. Why? It is because you turn your backs upon it. The gentlemen of the old school down South, who still adhere to the economic ideas and traditions of their fathers, still stick to the old idea that they must go on raising cotton and sending it to Europe and buying from Europe or any other country the cheapest possible form of their supplies, may think that that is a line of public policy which will develop a country.

That is not my idea. My idea is that in a country separated from the rest of mankind by a separate form of government, distinct in its character, it is the right and the duty of the people to so conduct their affairs as to develop the resources of their whole country. Our business here in Congress is not what may benefit England or other portions of the world, or to indulge in notions of free-trade for the good of mankind, but rather we ought to develop the resources and power and strength of the United States of America, North and South, East and West, and that by a line of public policy which will protect and foster the industries of all portions of this country, whether of agriculture, manufactures, or commerce.

If that is a wise line of public policy it should be fairly and justly applied to all sections. Any line of policy that would be beneficial only to the North would be unjust and wrong. Therefore it is that every opportunity to extend this policy in the South meets with my most hearty approval and sincere support.

Now, I do believe that the time is not far distant—this generation may pass away meanwhile—when in the South there will be men of different ideas, and perhaps the older men of the present age may catch the spirit of the future that is coming upon us; when the South will not only be rich in agriculture—it never can be excelled in agriculture in those articles which her climate enables her to produce so bountifully—but also in manufactures, when the jute-mills and the ramie-mills will be side by side in the same region where the cotton is grown, where the bountiful fruits of nature, richer by far than in almost any other portion of the world, will be produced and furnished to the markets of the world. In the mean time, until they are able to sell in competition with the production of other countries, they should be supported by a reasonable and proper duty.

Now, let me say to my friend from Texas that a duty on ramie would undoubtedly start in the South the growth of ramie. It is sometimes said that there was a duty on jute for several years, but it was at a period of time when the South was not prepared for this development, when the South was coming out of that crucible of fire which the Senator from Texas described, and it was not prepared to engage in the production of these articles; but now all that is past and gone. There is overflowing wealth there, notwithstanding the plea of poverty sometimes held up to us, because there is the wealth of nature, there are bountiful fields, productive of rich harvests and crops almost unknown before the war, where 7,000,000 bales of cotton are produced in a single year. There are the sources of wealth.

Why should we not adopt a policy which will induce your people and turn the minds of your people to the manufacture of your cotton and other raw products in the South?

Mr. President, I certainly have no desire to do anything that is unjust to the Southern people, either white or black, but I should be glad to see them all prosper. Their road to prosperity is the same road that the people of Great Britain have traveled, that the people of France have traveled, that the people of Germany are now traveling, and that the people of the North have traveled—by diversifying their industries and availing themselves of every opportunity furnished by nature or discovery to enrich and add value to the productions of their soil, to diversify their industries and mingle manufactures with agriculture, so that their commerce may bear not only to the North but to all the nations of the world the richest fruits of a bountiful progress.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, for one, as a Southern man, I am obliged to the Senator from Ohio for his good advice. He talks wisely and talks well, but in the language of Captain Bunsby "the point of his observations lies in the application on them;" and the whole is a soothing dose to keep the South quiet under this system of taxation by which the pockets of his constituents are filled. That is the meaning of it all. So long as we will be quiet and believe that taxation increases our wealth and that it is the only road to wealth, we shall satisfy him.

As to the sincerity of the advice which is constantly given us on that side of the Chamber, that we must emulate them by manufacturing everything that we consume and buy nothing from anybody else, I would simply ask the very pertiment question, suppose we did that, what would become of them? There was a fellow once during the war who in a burst of patriotism volunteered, and he went home and told his wife about it, and she burst into tears. "Why, John," said she, "suppose you get killed, what will become of me?" "Become of you! The devil," says John, "you had better ask what will become of me." [Laughter.]

Suppose we were to manufacture all that we use, suppose we were to boycott your patent medicines and your hair-dyes and your wooden hams and hickory nutmegs, your left-handed razors, your double-bladed gimlets, and all the contrivances of Yankee ingenuity, which you protect from home competition by patents and from all the world by protective duties; what would become of you and how long would it be before there would come a change o'er the spirit of your dreams, and the things which delighted you once would afford you no longer any pleasure? As the Englishman said about his horse, you would be off your feet, and would clamor for a change.

Mr. President, I am tired of that paternal advice; I am tired of seeing the spirit of it carried into the Government and enacted into law. When it is found necessary to teach people their own interests, when it is found necessary to tell the Southern planter, for instance, that he must abandon making cotton on which he can make a profit of $50 per acre and go to raising ramie that is worth but a quarter of a cent a hundred pounds, with competition with India labor at 8 cents a day, I am tired of being advised that instead of devoting the energy and genius of our people to the production of those things which will give labor from a dollar to two dollars per day, and make the pauper labor of the world contribute to us, we should drop that and emulate the labor which yields to the pauper 8 cents a day. There is no sincerity in that kind of advice; there is no philosophy in it; there is no wisdom in it; there is no statesmanship in it.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VANCE. Anything you please.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the benefit of his opinion, which he seems now to have matured.

We have in Massachusetts 262,000 male persons out of 450,000 of our total males over twenty-one years old who are engaged in factories, earning wages. Now, what occupation does the Senator recommend that they shall engage in? If these industries of which he has spoken are closed and left to their competitors abroad, what is the business they had better do, according to the Senator's judgment?

Mr. VANCE. Does the Senator give way for an answer? Does he want an answer now, or is he through?

Mr. HOAR. I meant to ask the Senator a courteous question.

Mr. VANCE. I am ready to answer it courteously, of course; but I did not know whether the Senator was through with his question or not.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; I am through with the question.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator asks me what those people ought to do. I say, in the first place, they ought to attend to their own business, and that business is manufacturing. But the Senator's question goes upon the supposition that they could not manufacture anything and they must all starve to death or have to leave the country and seek other employment, unless I and my constitutents are taxed to support them. That is the basis of his question. Now, my advice to the Senator and to his constitutents is never to engage in any kind of business that will not pay its own way, that will not furnish its own lubrication, and whenever he sees a business that he thinks will enable his people to make a living honestly by their own exertions, I would advise them by all means to go into it and stick to it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the fact that he does not answer the question I put? These persons are engaged in these protected industries now. The Senator, as I understand, thinks that is a species of robbery, at any rate that it is an injustice to his constituents and the rest of the country.

Mr. VANCE. I do.

Mr. HOAR. These industries are protected. Our side of that argument, of course, has been debated over and over again. What I want to know, if I can get it from the Senator from North Carolina, is what he thinks is the business they should engage in? He says they had better mind their own business. That, I suppose, is a jocose remark. What I want to know is what they had better manufacture? What is the business which they had better mind when they give up this protected business? Suppose we all agree with the Senator now that this is robbery and that we repent, what shall we do? What has he got in his mind that these men can get their living by beneficially to themselves and this country? That is the question I should like to have an answer to.

Mr. VANCE. I thought I had at least intimated my answer to the Senator's question, if I had not given it directly. I said if they found manufacturing profitable to continue at it. If they find manufacturing cotton profitable, continue at it.

I showed the other day, as I thought, from sufficient authority that you could manufacture cotton cheaper than the English, or the Germans, or the Swiss, and therefore you did not need to tax us. I expect to be able to show when the wool schedule is reached that you could manufacture wool, but for the tax on the raw material itself, cheaper than other people, and so with many other things.

I admit the Senator's country is not an agricultural country, that it is not adapted to agriculture, and perhaps if all its population were engaged in that line they could scarcely support the people of the State, and therefore they must manufacture, they must do something else besides engaging in agriculture.

I object to being put in the position—which is constantly undertaken by that side of the Chamber—that I am an enemy to manufactures. I am only anxious that the manufacturing interests of this country shall be conducted on their own expense and not on mine, just as the agricultural interests of my country are conducted on their own expense and bearing likewise yours. That is the objection that I have.

As a matter of course, manufactures are absolutely necessary not only to the welfare but to the civilization of mankind; and every argument made on that side assumes, as a matter of course, that if any attempt is made to reduce this taxation it is an utter destruction to all these manufactures; every one of them will die, so they say, if these duties are reduced.

Well, if they can not live upon such a reduction as is proposed by the House bill which is before us, then they ought to die, and no threat of any lingering pauper in the poor-house, if the overseers do not give him turtle-soup and venison he will die, will ever have the effect on the keepers of the poor-house to make them give him turtle-soup and venison. I shall never be diverted from my intention to support every reasonable reduction of taxes by a threat that the men who are supported by those taxes are going to die if I do so. It has no terrors for me—none in the world. I occupy in that respect somewhat the position of an absentee landlord whose agent represented to him that he could not collect the rents and said that everywhere he tried to collect them he did so at the risk of his life; that even yesterday he had a bullet shot through his hat and one through the sleeve of his coat, and "I can not collect the rents;" whereupon the landlord replied to him, "Collect those rents, I tell you, and tell those fellows who refuse to pay that no amount of shooting at you is going to scare me." [Laughter.] I want to say to the Senators on that side that no amount of threats to die is going to scare me from my duty in these matters, which is to reduce these rates as far as it is possible and safe to do so with due regard to vested rights and to the great changes which would follow any violent or considerable reduction of the taxes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BROWN. Before the vote is taken, as I have not participated in the discussion I desire to ask one question of the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill. What is the present rate of duty on bagging for cotton?

Mr. ALLISON. The present duty is 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. BROWN. What is the proposition of this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. This bill is to reduce it to three-fourths of a cent per pound.

Mr. BROWN. Then the bill proposes to reduce the tariff just one-half of what it now is.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; but before the vote is taken I think that I should add one other word.

I was interested in the letters which were read by the Senator from Ohio as respects these fibers, though I had the pleasure of knowing many of the details before. The committee have put jute-butts on the free-list, which accounts for a small portion of the reduction, I will say to the Senator from Georgia. Now, whilst I have no doubt that the jute itself can be produced in many of the Southern States, the real difficulty thus far is not in the production of the jute, but the jute fiber. I know of no other country now except India where the fiber can be recovered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here is a piece of it made in Texas that is more than 2 feet long. [Exhibiting.]

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. This fiber, or the jute, is put in water and allowed to soak there for some time, and then the persons who strip it go into the water and strip it with great care. It is all done by hand, and therefore it is done in different parts of India where their canal system has been developed and where the reservoirs are near the place of production, and where, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] very properly says, labor is 2 cents a day, or certainly not exceeding 8 cents.

This is a very frail fiber, and therefore the stripping can only be done in water. It has been stated that machines have been or will be invented to do the stripping. Those who appeared before the Finance Committee, who were most familiar with this subject, doubted whether any machine can be produced that will strip this fiber from the bark without destroying its tenacity. Therefore the committee have put jute-butts on the free-list, believing that until some machine can be discovered to do the stripping, which is now done entirely by hand in the water, it will not be produced in this country to any great extent.

Mr. BROWN. What is the difference between jute and jute-butts?

Mr. ALLISON. The jute-butts are the stumps of the jute. The jute itself is cut off about 15 inches from the ground, the lower fiber, or that nearest the ground, being too coarse for the ordinary fabrics that are now made of jute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Having much more wood in its composition?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. Jute-butts are used entirely for the manufacture of the coarser bagging and for paper-making, as cotton-bags and paper stocking. This fiber is separated in the interior of India, and it is brought down loosely to the great cities like Calcutta, and there it is made, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas. So the difficulty is not in raising the jute, but the difficulty is in separating it under our system here as it is separated in India, and it comes in as a very cheap fiber for the purposes for which it is now used.

Under these conditions and with this information the committee have put raw jute or jute-butts upon the free-list in the hope of inducing the manufacture of the article here. If at any time, as this intelligent gentleman writes, it shall appear that this stripping can be done by machinery, then I see no reason why that industry can not be carried on here with great profit to our people; but until that time comes I doubt very much whether we can produce the raw jute or jute-butts here, and that is the reason why the committee have proposed in this bill the placing of jute-butts on the free-list.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator a question before he sits down. I find in an English publication commenting upon the jute manufacture in this country, which I accidentally have on my table, this statement:

> During the American fiscal year 1884 upwards of $33,000,000 worth of flax, hemp, and jute were imported into the United States either in a raw or manufactured state. More than 120,000 tons of these materials were imported in an unmanufactured condition, and more than three-fourths of the whole supply were received from the United Kingdom.

I want to ask the Senator what he understands about the unmanufactured jute.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the unmanufactured is the jute fiber, such as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] now has in his hands, which is baled in Calcutta.

Mr. TELLER. You understand that it has already gone through a process?

Mr. ALLISON. That is entirely done in India. There are large jute mills in Scotland, in Dundee, where perhaps ten or twelve or fifteen million dollars' worth of jute is manufactured each year, but they draw from India entirely the fiber from which the manufactures are made, and so it is with every other country so far as I know.

I know the writer of this letter believes that it will be practicable to invent a machine whereby this stripping can be done, and when that time arrives I think we can make a prosperous industry in this country.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, we heard a great deal in the last canvass about the doctrinaires and the college professors, and we were told that the Republican party wanted markets and not maxims, and yet the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] brings in to-day letters from a doctrinaire, a gentleman who believes that this country will go to utter ruin unless the highest possible duties are placed upon all the products of the United States. He knows nothing about the South. He is a mere theorist, and he pretends or thinks—I will do him the justice to say he thinks—he has made a discovery as to the production of jute and ramie in this country when that matter was discussed fifteen years ago and experiments have been going on for the last fifteen years in different parts of the South, and it has been ascertained beyond any question that jute and ramie can be produced; but no machine has ever been discovered, after repeated attempts, that could take the place of the hand labor of India.

If that gentleman, the president of a college—I know him—had simply gone back even as far as the evidence taken by the Tariff Commission in 1882, he would have discovered that all his theory amounts to nothing. There is no trouble about the raising of jute and ramie in this country, but there has never been a machine discovered which could do the work of separating the fiber and take the place of the cheap hand labor near Calcutta.

In the first volume of the report of the Tariff Commission here is the testimony of Mr. John Sloane, who has given his immediate attention to this matter. Mr. John Sloane is of the Dolphin Manufacturing Company, of Paterson, N. J. He says:

> Q. Where is the jute culture in the United States carried on most extensively?

This is in 1882.

> A. There have thus far only been experiments made. I understand from a friend who has a plantation in Mississippi that he has this year planted some 12 or 15 acres as an experiment. Heretofore, for a year or two past, there have been only small patches of a quarter of an acre or so planted to see if it would grow. They have demonstrated the fact that the plant can grow, and grow well, and that the climate and soil of America are more favorable for its growth than the climate and soil of India. The whole question, however, arises after the plant is grown. So far, there has been no mechanical device suggested to cheapen the process of getting the fiber. Jute is a cane with wood inside, and the fiber is the inside of the bark. The whole question is a question of labor to get that fiber separated and put in merchantable condition. By hand labor they all confess in this country, wherever it has been tried, that it can not be done. The lowest-priced labor in the South will not compete with the low-priced labor of India, were from 10 to 15 cents is a fair day's wages.
> Q. Do you know of any one who is experimenting and devoting attention to the preparation of machinery which would hackle it or separate the fiber?
> A. I have heard of one or more machines that are either invented or in process of invention by which they hope to overcome that difficulty, and I sincerely hope they will be able to do it.
> Q. The only difficulty, then, is in preparing it for the manufacture after it is grown?
> A. Wholly.

And so on. And here is the evidence of another witness before the same Tariff Commission, and twenty-five or thirty gentlemen testified in regard to it that for ten years prior to 1882 they had endeavored to invent one of these machines, but on account of the peculiar nature of this fiber it could not be done and has not been done. Upon that commission was Duncan F. Kenner, one of the most advanced men in the South, and he devoted himself to this question of raising jute in Louisiana, and the result was that about 15 or 20 acres were raised there with great success, but at an absolute loss to the man who raised it, because no machine could be found to take the place of the cheap labor of India.

We have heard a great deal of this sort of sympathy for the South and its backwardness and lagging behind. I have heard a great deal of it in regard to my own State, which happens to be a Democratic State, and opposed to free trade. Why, sir, in Southeast Missouri we are to-day utilizing every particle of the timber grown there which has heretofore been considered worthless. We are taking the gums, the sweet-gums and the red-gums, and making them into furniture which rivals the best furniture made anywhere in the world. We are even utilizing the cottonwood, which has heretofore been considered an absolute nuisance, and it is found to make the best fruit-boxes in the world. I visited not long since, just after the election, a stave factory in Southeast Missouri, employing four hundred and fifty men, and the superintendent told me he had just entered into a contract with the manufacturer of Bass's ale to supply him with all his casks for some nine months to come, that he was exporting his casks to the West Indies and sending them to California for their wines and their California brandies. I asked him then, "Do you need protection?" "Not one cent." That stave factory has been built up there without the assistance of this high protective duty, built up in poor old Missouri, and yet we are told by the Senator from Ohio that the people of the South are lagging behind and false to themselves because they do not adopt this system and rush frantically in to secure their portion of its benefits!

Mr. President, we attack the system because it is unjust to the people of this country. We attack it upon principle, because we believe that, instead of being equal in its operation upon all sections and upon all the people of this country, it is unjust and unequal, and no sort of temptation will induce us to give up that opinion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Nevada, was called). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore can not vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] is paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. COCKRELL. I was paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], who is now absent from the Chamber, but I understand from the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that the Senator from Virginia is paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT], who is absent. I will therefore vote, and announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT].

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	Eustis,	Payne,	Vance,
Berry,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move, in line 1372, paragraph 339, that the words "three-fourths" be stricken out and the words "three-eighths" substituted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 339, line 1372, after the word "pound," it is proposed to strike out "three-fourths" and insert "three-eighths;" so as to read:

339. Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, jute, or jute-butts, valued at not more than 3 cents per pound, three-eighths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I call for the yeas and nays on the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and therefore am not at liberty to vote.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. SPOONER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. As I understand he has not voted, I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi is not recorded.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] is absent from the Senate attending a committee of conference.

Mr. TELLER. The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] is paired with my colleague [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say, once for all, that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] are paired.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. FARWELL] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Payne,	Vance,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senators in charge of this bill to the words in lines 1371 and 1372 of paragraph 339, "valued at not more than 3 cents per pound."

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, to make it perfectly certain and that there may be no mistake about that, I will suggest an amendment of 3½ cents, or I might make it 4.

Mr. VEST. I was going to ask the Senator to make it 4 cents. I would suggest that that be made 4 cents.

Mr. ALLISON. Three and a half cents, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] reminds me, may cover another class.

Mr. ALDRICH. It may cover burlaps in some conditions.

Mr. ALLISON. Three and a-half cents will unquestionably cover every question as respects cotton-bagging.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will make that 4 cents I shall be satisfied.

Mr. ALLISON. I will make it 3½ cents, and will move that amendment if the Senator will yield for that purpose.

Mr. VEST. Of course, for I can not help myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield the floor?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 339, line 1372, after the word "three," it is proposed to insert "and one-half;" so as to read:

339. Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, jute, or jute-butts, valued at not more than 3½ cents per pound, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

Mr. VEST. Before we proceed, with the consent of the Senate I wish to go back to paragraph 334, relating to burlaps.

We have heard a great deal to-day about a portion of my constituents who have been engaged in the cotton-bagging trust, and who have certainly succeeded admirably in making what our friends on the other side call "a corner" upon cotton-bagging. I saw in a paper a St. Louis dispatch the day before yesterday about this combine, or, as one of the gentlemen who fabricated it said before the committee, "the sympathetic movement." He was asked whether it was a trust or a combine. "Oh, no." "Well," said the Senator who was interrogating him, "what do you call this thing, then?" "Well," he said, "I would call it a sympathetic movement." Well, the "sympathetic movement" has terminated, and a division of profits was made on the 1st day of January. The "sympathetic movement" came to an end by virtue of no defect in its construction, but by the terms of the limitation in the articles of agreement, which I have before me and can read if necessary, which put an end to this "sympathetic movement" on the 1st day of January.

The principal gentleman engaged in it said in this interview in St. Louis that they had divided the profits, that they were not as large as they had fondly anticipated, but they would do, and intimated pretty strongly that on the next cotton crop another "sympathetic movement" would be inaugurated in the same direction.

Now, from a portion of my constituency in St. Louis I have a telegram directed to my colleague, which is as follows:

ST. LOUIS, January 7, 1889.

HON. F. M. COCKRELL:

A material reduction in duties on burlaps is strongly advocated by all interested irrespective of party, including bag manufacturers. We look for your hearty co-operation.

E. O. STANARD,
S. W. COBB,
D. P. GRIER,
HENRY C. HAARSTICK,
J. W. KAUFMAN.

I want to commend this telegram to the kind consideration of the gentlemen in charge of this bill, who have absolutely the control of these provisions. These bagging manufacturers now ask for a reduction of the duty on burlaps; and when I propose in a spirit of fairness, and I think of equity, to the managers of this bill to put the value at 4 cents instead of 3, in paragraph 339, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] objects, because he says it might include burlaps. If I have understood the argument here to-day in regard to cotton-bagging, it is in favor of American manufacturers, and the very men who control this movement, who manipulate it, who divided the profits on the 1st of January—some of them, at any rate—now ask their party associates here to reduce the duty on burlaps in their interest, in the interest of the American manufacturers.

When this matter was up in the House of Representatives we were told that more than one-half of the cotton-bagging manufactured in the United States was manufactured in the city of St. Louis, and that 1,500 operatives were engaged in that manufacture; and it is interesting in this connection to know the opinion of Mr. Gratz, how he was enabled to manipulate that "sympathetic movement" and divide the profits on the 1st of January. I do not propose to go over the whole testimony, but here is what he said in answer to interrogatories, and I give it for what it is worth:

Q. And I suppose you simply began an investigation of this arrangement?

A. I know I myself refused to go into any kind of an arrangement, and I would not do anything, and I stated that I would be for buying and starting for myself if they would make a combination in bagging. Further than that, a year ago I found there was a desire to make an arrangement in bagging, and I had a friend who was the editor of the Missouri Republican, and I went to him and told him that the only way to avoid trusts was to make articles that went into combinations free by the mere act of combination, and if such a law could be passed through Congress it would absolutely destroy chances for trusts, and I got him to publish an editorial at one time advocating the passage of a law by Congress making the mere proof of a combination of 75 per cent. of an article of commerce sufficient to remove the duty for twelve months after that combination was dissolved. If you will do that now you will get rid of combines.

Q. Suppose this bill should not become a law, would this association dissolve?

A. This association dissolves itself the 1st of January, whether there is a law or not.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] argued this afternoon with great force that the tariff had nothing to do with this "sympathetic movement," using the language of the principal fabricator; that whether there was a high or low tariff these "corners," as he expressed it, would be made upon all articles of commerce throughout the country. We heard in the late canvass from the most distinguished authority that these trusts were not a public matter, but a matter entirely of private management and private concern, and afterwards the same distinguished leader of the Republican party declared that trusts existed in Great Britain, "in free-trade England," as he called it, and therefore the tariff had nothing to do with them, differing entirely with Mr. Gratz, who is a gentleman of the largest experimental knowledge on the subject, having just carried out the most successful "sympathetic movement" that has ever been known in this country.

Permit me to observe, without any elaboration of the argument, that the difference between trusts in "free-trade England" and in the high protected-tariff United States is simply this: That the English syndicates who attempt to make a trust or a "sympathetic movement" must corner the product of the entire world, and it takes almost a fabulous amount of capital for them to carry out their project as did Mr. Gratz. But the tariff is an adjunct to the system of trusts; it is the most valuable auxiliary they can have, for this simple reason, that when it comes to be an exclusive duty, as it is on cotton-bagging, according to the testimony of men engaged in it, it excludes foreign competition, and thereby enables a smaller amount of capital and a smaller syndicate to carry through successfully their "sympathetic movement," and under the same tariff these same gentlemen can corner the next cotton crop, and continue to do so at their own sweet will and pleasure.

Now, sir, I move to reduce the duty upon burlaps.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. VEST). Why not state who Mr. Stanard is?

Mr. VEST. Governor Stanard has a national reputation. He was a Republican lieutenant-governor of my State, and afterwards a Republican member of Congress, and is one of the acknowledged leaders of the Republican party in Missouri. Governor E. O. Stanard has a national reputation in the Republican party. Mr. Grier is also a very prominent Republican, although his reputation is hardly as extensive as that of Governor Stanard.

I move to strike out "30 per cent. ad valorem" upon burlaps, and insert the word "free." It will then read:

Burlaps, not exceeding 60 inches in width, of flax, jute, or hemp, or of which flax, jute, or hemp, or either of them, shall be the component material of chief value (except such as may be suitable for bagging for cotton), free.

On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 334, line 1352, it is proposed to strike out "30 per cent. ad valorem" and insert in lieu thereof the word "free."

Mr. ALLISON. Under the existing tariff, which is 20 per cent. ad valorem, a very small amount of what are known as burlaps has been manufactured in this country. The entire consumption of burlaps in this country is made by those who manufacture what is called bagging. These burlaps are chiefly made now in Dundee, Scotland. Though I have not the figures before me, I think the importations are very large and increasing.

The reason they have not been made in this country is that with the existing rate of duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem on raw jute, which is the raw material, it has been impossible to manufacture these burlaps under the existing rate of duty. It was so stated by those who engaged in the business and who are familiar with the subject.

With free jute and 30 per cent. ad valorem, the committee believe that burlaps can be manufactured in this country, although the jute manufacturers say that the margin is too close. I am aware that the cotton-bagging manufacturers who have a protection under the existing law of 40 per cent. ad valorem, and who, of course, under this proposed bill, if it becomes a law, will also have 40 per cent., very much prefer to import their burlaps. It is one of those beautiful illustrations of how men of high character in the disposition of a bill look very carefully at their own interests. The men who are engaged in the manufacture of bagging being protected by existing law with a duty of 40 per cent., find a very fair protection in that, so that no bags are imported, or very few, but their raw material, burlaps, are imported very largely. The committee in making up this schedule believed that the rate proposed in this paragraph was a fair rate to encourage the manufacture of burlaps in our own country, and that is what it is designed for.

The reason that the cotton-bagging manufacturers, largely in the city of St. Louis, are in doubt about this 30 per cent. on burlaps is that they are afraid that the men who make burlaps will also make bagging, and thus the bagging industry will have an impetus that they do not care to encourage.

So I think on the whole the general interests will be better subserved by leaving the rate of duty as it now exists in the substitute, and unless some rate certainly very nearly approaching this tax shall be adopted, then I shall follow the Senator from Missouri and put burlaps on the free-list, because under existing conditions and under the existing law burlaps are now made in Dundee and not in the United States practically, and we are building up and have built up in the last ten or twelve years a great city and an enormous industry in Scotland. If it is wiser and better that we should continue to prosper Dundee rather than our own country, then burlaps ought to be put on the free-list absolutely. If we intend to make it possible to manufacture burlaps in this country and thus make our own country prosperous instead of Dundee, Scotland, then the present rate of duty, 30 per cent., on burlaps ought to be maintained in this bill. That is all I have to say.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not think in all my experience, which has been rather extensive on this tariff question, that I have ever heard a better illustration of the whole tariff business than that given by my friend from Iowa. The rule is that which seems to be derived from the ocean, that the big fish are continually eating up the little ones, and every fish is taking care of itself, feeding for itself, without regard to the remainder.

The gentlemen who sent this telegram—two of them at least—are most distinguished Republicans. No men stand higher in the Republican party, and they are both estimable gentlemen—Governor Stanard and Colonel Grier—and yet, according to my friend from Iowa, like all the balance, they are looking, not to the general interests of the country in a broad spirit of patriotism, but they are simply looking to their own pockets and to their own interests.

I do not know that we are building up any great city in Scotland. I confess very frankly that my entire interest in this matter is for the consumers of this country. I avow very frankly that I am opposed to this protective system, as our friends on the other side propose to put it upon us without limitation, and from my standpoint, without regard to the personnel of these manufacturers, I am for cutting down duties because they are now far beyond any legitimate limits, and if this bill passes we shall have thrown away entirely everything like restrictions, and we shall be upon the broad, open ocean of protection, without any sort of regard to the place where we shall land or what will become of the vessel.

I present here a telegram from these gentlemen of high character, manufacturers, protectionists per se, and I ask their friends on the other side of the Chamber either to regard their petition or to disregard it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, the testimony taken by the Finance Committee upon this question shows that in the opinion of some, at least, of the manufacturers a difference in duty between the raw material and the manufactured burlaps of 15 per cent. is enough to promote the manufacture of that article in this country. It was so stated, and the statement has been made that they have not been manufactured heretofore because the tax on the raw material, jute, was only 10 per cent. below the tax on burlaps.

Now, you have the raw material made free absolutely, with 30 per cent. on the burlaps, which gives a difference between the raw material and the burlaps of 30 per cent.; whereas the statement made to the committee by the manufacturers was that 15 per cent. was enough.

But while this matter is under consideration, it may not be out of place to call the attention of the Senate to another fact that this particularly bears upon, and that is in the paragraph previous to the one under consideration you have provided a tax of 2 cents per pound on the bags which are made from these burlaps, and you have a protection of 30 per cent. on the burlaps, which is equivalent to three-fourths of a cent a yard.

The testimony of manufacturers of bags before the committee was that the expense of making a thousand bags from burlaps was $5. One thousand bags weigh 1,000 pounds. So we have a tariff, a protection of $20, on a thousand burlap bags. The bag manufacturer importing his burlaps pays upon them three-quarters of a cent a pound, or $7.50 for the material used in 1,000 bags. Deduct this $7.50 from the $20 on a thousand bags and you have $12.50 of net protection allowed to the manufacturer of a thousand burlap bags, who pays but $5 for the total expense of manufacture, including labor.

In other words, you give him in protection 250 per cent. on the total cost of his manufacture, and this under the pretense of enabling him to increase the wages of his operatives. On the theory that the committee proceeds upon a tariff of 15 per cent. on burlaps is ample, and it will succeed in building up that industry, and then a tax upon bags of three-eighths of a cent in excess of the tariff on burlaps the bag manufacturers say is enough for them, so a tariff three-fourths of a cent a pound would be ample on bags, with 15 per cent. on burlaps, and this reduction would give the farmers of the West grain-bags $10 to $12.50 per thousand cheaper than under the proposed rates.

I have no idea that any change will be made or that these arguments will make any difference with the committee, but it is proper that the attention of the Senate and the country should be called to these facts. The people may take notice of what the committee will not, and unjust stewards may yet be called to account.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I do not see him present.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but I have transferred that pair to the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], and therefore vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] asked me last night, if he should be absent at any time during the next few days, if I would not pair with him, to which I assented. I have voted once or twice and I am afraid the Senator has been absent depending upon that pair. I decline to vote, therefore.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I should vote "nay" but that I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] who is absent on a conference committee, but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], and I vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] and I having agreed to transfer our pairs, and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Berry,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Pugh,	Voorhees.

Cameron,	Harris,	Plumb,	Walthall.
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Ransom,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

340. Oil-cloth for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, including linoleum, corticene, cork carpets, figured or plain, and on all other oil-cloth (except silk oil-cloth), and on water-proof cloth, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 10 cents per square yard and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish the Senator from Iowa would kindly yield to one or two matters of current business.

Mr. ALLISON. If there are no amendments to be offered to paragraph 340, so that we can understand that the flax, hemp, and jute schedule is now disposed of, I will yield. Then I will ask that Schedule K be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And that the reading be resumed where?

Mr. ALLISON. At "Schedule L, silk and silk goods;" and if the Secretary will read paragraph 372, so that Senators may know that that is the schedule to be considered to-morrow——

Mr. VANCE. Before we pass from the flax and jute and hemp schedule, I desire to offer an amendment to the last paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed to paragraph 340 by the Senator from North Carolina.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to paragraph 340 the following proviso:

Provided, That the duty on no article mentioned in this schedule shall exceed the rate of 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. When the paragraph embracing embroideries, cuffs, collars, etc., was under consideration, the opinion was expressed that it would on the cheaper grades increase the duties very largely, over 100 per cent., and in confirmation of that I have received a letter from a large importing house in New York giving the rates of duty, the cost of the articles abroad, etc., which I will ask the Secretary to read in support of my motion. Fifty per cent. is the largest rate which has been ascertained, or calculated, by the Treasury officials, and I presume it is not desirable, if the higher-class goods come in at 50 per cent., that the lower class should be charged one hundred and odd per cent., and therefore this proviso will effectually cure that damage to the cheaper articles or that heavy imposition on the cheaper article.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the reading of the paper proceeds I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if it is his purpose to insist upon a yea-and-nay vote upon this amendment he now proposes?

Mr. VANCE. I presume so. I regard it as an important proviso.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, if it will be satisfactory to the Senator from North Carolina, I suggest that that letter be printed in the RECORD, so that Senators can see it to-morrow, and then I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who desires to take up some business.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand that the silk schedule is to come up to-morrow?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; but I find it is impossible to dispose of this schedule to-night if the Senator from North Carolina insists on his amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I am willing to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa and let the letter be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK, January 4, 1889.

DEAR SIR: I beg to inclose a calculation showing how the proposed new tariff would affect this commodity. The bulk of imported hosiery ($6,000,000 annually) ranges from 2.50 to 6 marks, and under the new tariff the ad valorem duty would be as follows:

On goods costing—	Per cent.
$0.48	120
.72	103
.96	72
1.20	70
1.44	63
1.68	55
1.92	51
2.16	48
2.40	45
2.64	41
4.80	32

On the greater part of goods imported, ranging from 50 cents to $1.50 cost price, the duty would be advanced from 40 per cent. ad valorem to 80 per cent. ad valorem, and for whose benefit? The domestic manufacturer's? Hardly, since scarcely 5 per cent. of the whole output are regular-made goods. The domestic manufacturer might, under the increased prices for foreign articles, advance the prices of his goods, but would the laborer, the factory hand, benefit by it? They are paid by the piece, and demand, competition, improved machinery, and supply of labor decide his wages. The commonest kind of domestic half-hose, so-called open-tops, sold in 1865 for $1.10; in 1875 for 65 cents; to-day they are selling for 40 to 45 cents. Since thirty years no similar goods have been imported.

Respectfully, yours,

SCHNARR.

Hon. Z. B. VANCE, Washington.

NEW YORK, January 5, 1889.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina to paragraph 340.

Mr. ALLISON. I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and when the matter he has in hand and such other little business as Senators may desire is disposed of, I shall move that the Senate adjourn.

LOAN OF FLAGS TO INAUGURAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. HAWLEY. One or two matters of current business I should be glad to have disposed of.

I report favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs the joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc., upon which I shall be glad to have immediate action.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is understood that this resolution only refers to depots here it would be all right, but it would hardly be right that the Government should be at the expense of transporting from depots at Chicago and at Leavenworth and other places flags simply to be used here on the occasion of the inauguration.

Mr. HAWLEY. I supposed it referred to only what we had in storage here.

Mr. COCKRELL. If that is the understanding it is all right.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will ask the question at the War Department in the morning.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCE.

Mr. HAWLEY. A letter transmitting the report of the National Academy of Science was referred to the Committee on Printing. I report the usual annual resolution for printing that report. It is a report made in accordance with law, and is annually printed.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the National Academy of Sciences for the year 1887, with its appendices, be printed in the usual octavo form, and that 1,000 copies of the report and memoirs be printed for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the Academy of Sciences.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2305) to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in Executive Departments.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House to print extra copies of the report of the House Committee on Manufacture on the sugar and Standard Oil trusts.

The message further announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate of October 12, 1888, to print the annual volumes of the Astronomical Observations of the Naval Observatory for 1886, 1887, and 1888.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate of the 4th instant, to print additional copies of the final report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the recent changes in the relative values of the precious metals.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate to print additional copies of the work known as "Growth of Industrial Art," with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a resolution for the printing of 10,000 additional copies of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, for the use of the Department of Labor; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITION.

Mr. EVARTS presented a preamble and resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York at a meeting on January 3, 1889, favoring the construction by the Government of harbors of refuge near Point Judith, Rhode Island; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GEORGE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3788) for the relief of Martha A. Dochterman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. REAGAN introduced a bill (S. 3789) for the relief of R. C. Oglesby, of Uvalde, Tex.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 3790) authorizing the purchase of the dressing and shaving table of General Washington used by him during his life and mentioned in his will; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3791) for the allowance of a claim in favor of Milton J. Durham, administrator of Leonard Taylor, deceased, of Boyle County, Kentucky, for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3792) for the establishment of a light-house with a fog-bell on Oyster-Bed Shoal, in the Hudson River, near New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That two Senators be added to the standing Committee on the Census, to be appointed by the President of the Senate.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, in cloth binding, wrapped for mailing, 10,000 additional copies of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, for the use of the Department of Labor.

GROWTH OF INDUSTRIAL ART.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the resolution of the Senate for the printing of 10,000 additional copies of the work known as "Growth of Industrial Art;" which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. ALLISON. Before moving an adjournment I think I ought to say that we are not making the progress with this bill which we ought to make in order to reach a vote properly on the 22d of the present month, which we of course must do. There are a number of matters passed over, and important matters, which ought to be debated more or less in the interest of reaching a proper conclusion. Unless we can make more rapid progress to-morrow, I think I shall be obliged, on the next day at least, to ask for a night session or that we begin our sessions at 11 o'clock and continue until 6 or half past 6, so as to avoid night sessions.

I now move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 9, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

The Senate having ordered the publication of its action on the various amendments proposed to the joint resolution (S. R. 122) declaring the sense of Congress in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America, considered on Monday, January 7, 1889, it is given, as follows:

The joint resolution being under consideration,

Mr. GRAY submitted the following amendment in lieu of section 1 of the joint resolution:

That any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America which involves any political control whatever of the territory through which such canal passes, or interferes with the government or system of government of any portion of this continent, will be viewed by the Government of the United States with serious concern and disapproval, and will be considered as dangerous to our peace and safety.

Mr. FAULKNER moved an amendment, in line 4 of the amendment, to strike out the word "whatever" and to insert the words "thereof or," and in line 5, after the word "passes," to insert "without the consent of the United States."

Mr. GRAY accepted the amendment.

After discussion,

Mr. GRAY'S amendment was rejected by a viva voce vote.

Mr. REAGAN moved to amend section 1 of the joint resolution, in line 4, after the word "any," where it first occurs, by striking out the word "connection" and inserting "action," and in line 5, after the word "Government," by striking out the word "with," and inserting "looking to the assumption of;" so as to read:

That the Government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any action of any European government looking to the assumption of the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America, and must regard any such connection or control as injurious to the just rights and interests of the United States and as a menace to their welfare.

The amendment was rejected by a viva voce vote.

The joint resolution was, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, amended by striking out "Congress" and inserting "Government of the United States" in the second section; so as to read:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien or across Central America, and must regard any such connection or control as injurious to the just rights and interests of the United States and as a menace to their welfare.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate this expression of the views of the Government of the United States to the governments of the countries of Europe.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution declaring the sense of the Government of the United States in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America."

The vote on the passage of the joint resolution was—yeas 49, nays 3; as follows:

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called) stated that he was paired generally with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], but the question not being political he would vote in the affirmative, as he was informed that the Senator from Indiana would also vote in the affirmative if he were present.

A pair was announced between the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], the former being in favor of the resolution.

Mr. CHACE was stated to have a general pair with Mr. COLQUITT, and Mr. CAMERON with Mr. BUTLER; but how the respective Senators would vote on this question was not understood.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 8, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TESTING HEAVY ORDNANCE.

Mr. HIRES, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 248), authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase a suitable site for testing heavy ordnance and making experiments in gunnery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FOG-SIGNAL, MOUNT DESERT ROCK, MAINE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Light-House Board of an appropriation for establishing a fog-signal upon Mount Desert Rock, Maine, for the fiscal year 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE TENDER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of an appropriation for the construction of a light-house tender for the ninth and eleventh light-house districts; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FOG-SIGNAL, DOG ISLAND, ST. CROIX RIVER, MAINE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Light-House Board in reference to an estimate of appropriation for establishing a light and fog-signal on Dog Island, entrance to St. Croix River, Maine, fiscal year 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SUPPORT OF SIOUX INDIANS, MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the support of Sioux Indians of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations balances of which have been expended or carried to the surplus fund; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS, UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiency appropriations for expenses of United States courts for the fiscal year 1889 or prior years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

POLVAREDA GRANT, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on private land claim No. 131, the Polvareda grant; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILD NATIVE SILK-WORM OF CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting the report of Joseph Neumann upon the study of the wild native silk-worm of California; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES, AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting a statement of expenditures for that Department for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

LINCOLN LAND DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3778) to establish the Lincoln land district, in the Territory of New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. JOSEPH. I hope, by unanimous consent, the bill will be considered and disposed of at once.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so ordered it to be referred, but the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH] asks for its present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the present it should go to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it remain on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana insists it shall be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to its remaining on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be returned to the Speaker's table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days.

Mr. FITCH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of illness.

HARRIETT P. FARNSWORTH.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies thereof, papers in the case of Harriett P. Farnsworth, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MARQUETTE AND ONTONAGON RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. STOCKDALE, at his own request, was excused from further service as one of the House conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill 858, to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State; and the Speaker appointed in his place Mr. MACDONALD.

CHANGE OF THE RULES.

Mr. REED. I call up the privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the roll on the demand for the previous question on the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. A few days ago the House set apart this hour for the Committee on Printing with leave to call up such measures reported from that committee as it thought proper to bring before the House for consideration. I would like to know if that matter can be brought forward this morning as against the privileged question raised by the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The privileged question displaces everything else while it is pending in the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I ask, Mr. Speaker, what will be the status of the order made with regard to the Committee on Printing after the privileged matter under consideration shall have been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The order to which the gentleman refers was not a continuing order, and will fall unless it is executed now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I ask unanimous consent that it may be made a continuing order.

Mr. REED. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 188, nays 19, not voting 116; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

On motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. MILLS with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. HOOKER with Mr. DORSEY.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. HALL with Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky.

Mr. DARGAN with Mr. SYMES.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. MCSHANE with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. NEAL with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. CARUTH with Mr. WICKHAM.

Mr. FORAN with Mr. PARKER.

Mr. FORD with Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE, of Virginia.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. ARNOLD.

Mr. PENINGTON with Mr. DE LANO.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. MOFFITT.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. DARLINGTON.

Mr. McSHANE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. LAIRD, but being satisfied that if present he would vote as I have voted, I shall permit my vote to stand.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to recommit to the Committee on Rules the pending resolution, and upon that call the previous question.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Is it in order at this time to move to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to move to recommit with instructions if the previous question is not sustained by the House.

Mr. PAYSON. But under the rule, as it stands, does not that motion take precedence of the motion to commit?

The SPEAKER. The rules provide that one motion shall be in order to commit, with or without instructions. The gentleman from Indiana moves to recommit without instructions, upon which he demands the previous question. If that demand is sustained of course it cuts off all amendment to the motion.

The question was taken on the demand for the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 132, noes 3.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

Mr. REED. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 218, nays 4, not voting 101; as follows:

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] now calls up the special order made for this morning setting apart one hour for the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The first measure I desire to call up is on the twentieth page of the Calendar (S. 3162) providing for the printing of Government publications upon private orders.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have the special order read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it. [After a pause.] The Chair has sent for the order, and it will be brought in and read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not know there was such an order, and I desire to hear it read, as I wish to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to raise the question of consideration on each bill as it comes up.

The Clerk read from the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the Committee on Printing be allowed one hour for the consideration of its business by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, one hour be set apart for the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Printing. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the order, then, is such a one as will only permit the question of consideration to be raised on each bill as it is called up.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS ON PRIVATE ORDERS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman now calls up for consideration in the hour a bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3162) providing for the printing of Government publications upon private orders.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask to have the report read in this case.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not require an appropriation, and I ask that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the measure, and that it be considered in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have the bill read so that I may determine whether I shall raise the question of consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That if any person desiring extra copies of any document printed at the Government Printing Office by authority of law shall, previous to its being put to press, notify the Public Printer, in writing, of the number of copies wanted, and shall pay to him, in advance, the estimated cost thereof, and 10 per cent. thereon, the Public Printer may, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing, or, when Congress is not in session, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, furnish the same.

SEC. 2. That the Public Printer is hereby authorized, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing or Secretary of the Interior, as above provided, to print from any stereotype plates in his possession such number of books or documents as may be ordered by persons desiring the same whenever the number so ordered shall justify putting said stereotype plates to press, the same to be paid in advance, as above provided. And the Public Printer shall annually report to Congress a list of all documents and publications sold by him, the amount received therefrom, and the disposition made thereof.

SEC. 3. That section 3809 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wanted to raise the question of consideration with a view of reaching another bill, but owing to the peculiar wording of the order, I shall not raise the question of consideration on each bill.

The question was taken on discharging the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, and it was agreed to.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the bill (S. 3162) providing for printing of Government publications upon private orders, and report the same with a recommendation that it do pass.

There are two sections in the bill. The first only changes the title of the person formerly known as Congressional Printer so as to make it conform to the existing law, wherein he is called Public Printer, and providing that when Congress is not in session the books may be published under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, which is also to make the provision comply with existing law. The new legislation in the bill is in section 2, which provides that at any time after books or documents have been printed the Public Printer may have printed from the stereotype plates in the Government Printing Office said books or documents for any person desiring same whenever the number desired will justify putting the plates to press, the same to be paid for at the estimated cost thereof and 10 per cent. thereon, to be paid in advance. The section also provides for the Public Printer making proper report to Congress of all such sales.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move the previous question on the third reading of the bill, if no one desires to speak on the question.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his motion for a few minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest to my friend that we have only an hour altogether and there is quite a number of these measures, and I think if he will pay close attention to the report he will not further object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the previous question is ordered there will be, under the rules of the House, thirty minutes for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield the gentleman any time he desires if he wants to discuss this bill. I do not wish to cut off debate.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I thank the gentleman, but I know he can not cut off debate anyway. I want to state to this House, as I stated once before when this bill was up for consideration, that it is establishing a precedent which will do great harm. The Government Printing Office was originally established to do Government work alone, but it has gradually, by means of enlarging the number of copies of documents printed, thrown, in many instances, two-thirds of the whole of the publications into the hands of outsiders. That of course has wrought great injury to the printers of the country. The price of printing paper, the price of composition, the price of press-work, the price of clerk-hire in that Government Printing Office are not taken into account in estimating the cost——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I forgot that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] had opposed this measure when it was up before.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Oh, I always have opposed it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now remember that the gentleman once before made the same speech which he is now making, and, as I do not desire to waste time, I beg leave to withdraw the bill. I will not press it this morning.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I hope you will withdraw it, because I think it an abuse of the American Government to bring such a bill as this in here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I differ very widely from the gentleman, but under the circumstances I think it better to withdraw the bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am right, though.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the Senate concurrent resolution to print the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1888, and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be put upon its passage.

The resolution was read, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, September 25, 1888.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1887–'88 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the concurrent resolution, and that it be put upon its passage.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the Senate concurrent resolution and report the same back with the recommendation that it pass; and further, the committee recommend that the concurrent resolution of the House introduced by Mr. COBB, upon the same subject, which is herewith returned, do lie upon the table.

The estimated cost of printing said copies of this report is $18,002.50.

The Senate concurrent resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House concurrent resolution on the same subject (introduced by Mr. COBB) was laid on the table.

RED CROSS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call up the concurrent resolution to provide for printing Senate Document 231, in relation to the international conference of the Red Cross Association, and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from further consideration of the resolution and that it be put upon its passage.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 5,000 copies of Senate Executive Document No. 231, first session Fiftieth Congress, being a letter of the Secretary of State, transmitting a report of the fourth international conference of the Red Cross Association, and the report transmitted; said copies for the use and to be delivered to the president of the American National Association of the Red Cross.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the resolution and report the same back with the recommendation that it pass. The estimated cost of printing said copies is $42.20.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call up the House concurrent resolution to print the annual volume of the Astronomical Observations of the Naval Observatory.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the annual volumes of the Astronomical Observations of the Naval Observatory for 1886, 1887, and 1888 be printed, and that 1,800 additional copies of each report be printed; of which 300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 800 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

The committee have considered the resolution and report the same back with the recommendation that it pass. The estimated cost is $4,750.

The concurrent resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

METHODS OF DEPARTMENTAL BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call up the next resolution on the Calendar reported from the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 22, 1888.

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the report of the Senate select committee appointed under resolution of March 3, 1887, to inquire into the methods of business, etc., in the Executive Departments, and accompanying documents, 6,000 copies; 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND OFFICE MAP OF UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Calendar reported by the Committee on Printing was the joint resolution (S. 104) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1887, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be printed 7,500 copies of the United States map prepared by the General Land Office of the edition of 1887, at a rate not exceeding $1 each; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and that 1,000 copies be printed and mounted, to be sold under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, at $1.25 each; and the sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; the proceeds of all sales to be turned into the Treasury.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This resolution has been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it now be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX). If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to say in regard to this measure simply one word. During the first session of the present Congress the House passed a joint resolution for printing this map for 1886. That joint resolution was vetoed by the President on the ground that a later map had been prepared in the General Land Office—the map for 1887. This resolution, therefore, was introduced for the purpose of printing this later map.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. This is the latest edition?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The latest edition of a map which, as we all know, is very valuable. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 11794) to amend the postal laws of the United States in reference to letters bearing special-delivery stamps.

It further announced the passage of a joint resolution (S. R. 122) declaring the sense of the Government of the United States in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and Central America, in which concurrence was requested.

THIRD ANNUAL REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

The next business on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Printing was a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, in cloth binding, wrapped for mailing, 10,000 additional copies of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, for the use of the Deparment of Labor.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The committee have considered House concurrent resolution to print and bind in cloth 10,000 additional copies of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Labor for the use of the Department of Labor, and report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. The estimated cost of the same, including wrapping for mailing, is $5,265.50.

The necessity for this publication is shown by the following letter from the Commissioner of Labor:

"DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
"Washington, D. C., December 13, 1888.

"SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith a draught of a concurrent resolution providing for the printing and binding of 10,000 copies of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Labor. This report relates entirely to strikes and lockouts, and the demand for it by the workingmen of the country is so great that our edition is now almost exhausted, we having but a few hundred copies left. I trust the resolution can be adopted at an early day.

"I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"CARROLL D. WRIGHT,
"Commissioner.

"Hon. J. D. RICHARDSON, M. C.,
"Chairman of the Committee on Printing,
"House of Representatives."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. How many copies of this work have been printed for distribution by members of Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The number originally published, if I recollect correctly, was 38,000. This resolution is to provide for printing an extra number. The Commissioner of Labor, Mr. Wright, has addressed to the committee a letter, just read by the Clerk, asking that this additional number be printed, because of the value of the document to the laboring men of the country, relating as it does almost exclusively to "lockouts" and "strikes."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then these additional copies are to be distributed by the Commissioner of Labor?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will not object, though I very much doubt whether the distribution here proposed will be as wise and equitable as if made through members of Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The usual number of copies for distribution by members of this House and the other branch of Congress have already been supplied under a resolution passed at the last session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Committee of the Whole will be discharged from the further consideration of this resolution, and the question will be taken on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF VISITORS TO MILITARY ACADEMY FOR 1887.

The next business on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Printing, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be directed to print for the use of the House of Representatives 5,000 extra copies of the report of the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy for the year 1887.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This resolution relates, as will be observed, to the report of the Board of Visitors for 1887. As I remember, we have already published the report for 1888, and I take it that the publication of this report for 1887 is unnecessary. I therefore move that this resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

UNIFORM OF ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Printing, was the joint resolution (H. Res. 182) to print 3,000 sets of plates illustrating the uniform of the Army of the United States from the organization of the Government to the present time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That there be printed for the use of Congress 3,000 sets of plates illustrating the uniform of the Army of the United States from the organization of the Government to the present time, which plates have been prepared and copyrighted by the Quartermaster-General, United States Army, for public use, of which number 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate of the United States, and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives; the said plates to be placed in portfolio form, or other suitable covers, and to be printed under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing; and that there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for same.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that the joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I hope there will be no objection, therefore, to discharging the Committee of the Whole from its further consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and it is now before the House to be considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, these plates have been copyrighted by the Quartermaster-General of the Army. They illustrate the uniform of the Army of the United States and of the Continental army. There are forty-four of these plates, or there will be when they are completed. They show the uniform of the armies of the United States, beginning with the Continental army and ending soon after the late war between the States.

These plates are on the Clerk's desk, and I would be glad if gentlemen would avail themselves of the opportunity to examine them. They have been prepared under the control of the Quartermaster-General of the Army. I think they are a valuable acquisition to the Government and that the resolution be passed. The report of the Committee on Printing gives a full explanation of the measure, and I ask for its reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee have considered the House joint resolution introduced by Mr. RICHARDSON, June 18, 1888, being No. 182, to print 3,000 sets of plates illustrating the uniform of the Army of the United States from the organization of the Government to the present time, and report the same, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The plates provided for in said resolution consist of illustrations of the uniform of the military forces of the United States from the time of the American Revolution to the present date.

With the view of ascertaining the propriety of this publication, the committee addressed a communication on the subject, on July 26, 1888, to the Quartermaster-General of the Army.

This officer submitted a reply, which the committee beg leave to submit herewith as a part of this report:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., July 26, 1888.

"SIR: The publication to which your resolution applies consists of illustrations of the uniform of the military forces of the United States from the time of the American Revolution to the present date. They have been prepared and drawn so as to represent all arms of service, including those engaged in the Revolutionary war, the war of 1812, and the Mexican war, etc. They are founded upon such records, official and private, as are now accessible, and are believed to be as correct as circumstances permit.

"Some of the plates have been found necessary in carrying out the laws of Congress in the preparation of monuments to military men of the Revolution and of wars since that time.

"As the result of careful study they are of value historically to the country, and are of special interest to the veterans of the various past wars and to the militia and volunteers of the country, and the publication of the number of copies proposed is strongly recommended.

"It may be stated that no officer or employé of the Government has any pecuniary interest in this publication.

"Respectfully submitted.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

The committee will also here insert a letter from G. H. Buek & Co., of New York, dated May 26, 1888, addressed to Colonel Ludington, Deputy Quartermaster-General, United States Army, giving the cost of the reproduction of designs of historical uniforms of United States Army:

"NEW YORK, May 26, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry we would state that after having made a careful computation as to cost we will furnish you reproductions of designs of historical uniforms of the United States Army, on quality and weight of paper as approved, at the following prices:

	Per set.
2,000 sets of 44 plates each, at 15 cents per plate or	$6.60
4,000 sets of 44 plates each, at 10 cents per plate or	4.40
6,000 sets of 44 plates each, at 8 cents per plate or	3.52
8,000 sets of 44 plates each, at 7½ cents per plate or	3.19
10,000 sets of 44 plates each, at 6½ cents per plate or	2.86

"We will furnish portfolios to hold each set at 50 cents each; of which we submit samples for approval.

"Very truly, yours,

"G. H. BUEK & CO.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to see if I understand this matter. As I understand it these plates have been made by private publishers. They have already been fully published and the country is in possession of them, so that any one who wants them can go to the private publishers and get them without any difficulty. They are copyrighted, as I understand the gentleman's statement, and his proposition now is nothing more nor less than to purchase 10,000 sets of these plates, if that be the number, these private publishers have for which the Government of the United States is to pay. That I believe to be the pending proposition.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Substantially that.

Mr. PAYSON. It is that identically.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Messrs. G. H. Buek & Co. are the lithographers of these plates, and of course if this resolution passes they will supply the War Department with these plates for distribution by Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Who prepared them?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They were prepared under the direction of the Quartermaster-General of the Army by the firm just mentioned by me.

Mr. CANNON. At the Government's expense?

Mr. RICHARDSON. He has paid already for 1,500 sets of these plates.

Mr. CANNON. How?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Under an appropriation for the War Department, as he had the right to do.

Mr. CANNON. Were these plates made by private individuals, or were they made by officers of the Government at the public expense?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They were prepared by a private firm in the city of New York. It was done by the authority and under the direction of the Quartermaster-General of the Army. He has already paid for a small number of them to be furnished to the War Department.

Mr. CANNON. Then there has been no expense to the War Department for preparing those plates.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No expense on the part of the Government, but, as I have said, the Quartermaster-General has paid for the copies the War Department has already received.

Mr. CANNON. I understand, then, the Quartermaster-General, from the general appropriation, has paid for 1,500 sets of these plates.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is my understanding.

Mr. CANNON. What did he pay for them?

Mr. RICHARDSON. He paid for the 1,500 copies much more than these lithographers are now proposing to furnish the copies provided for in this resolution. The copies furnished to the War Department cost some $6 a set, and the price now asked is about $3.52 a set of 44 plates.

Mr. CANNON. What did the plates cost?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not answer the question, as I do not know.

Mr. CANNON. We are all familiar with the map of the United States, which is about the size of the portrait of General Washington on the wall near the Speaker's chair, and that large map which is printed for distribution by members of Congress costs 90 cents a copy. In view of the price paid for that map, does not the gentleman from Tennessee think the price of $3.52 asked for these plates is rather high?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will state in reply to the gentleman that the proposition now by the owners of those stones upon which the plates are engraved is to furnish 2,000 sets of plates at $6.60 per set; 4,000 sets at $4.40 a set; 6,000 at $3.52 a set, and that is the number we recommend; 8,000 at $3.19 a set, and 10,000 sets at $2.86 a set, showing that the price declines very rapidly as the number is increased.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman any estimate from the Public Printer or any other competent authority as to the actual cost of producing these plates?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no such estimate, but I imagine that they are as cheap as can possibly be furnished by any reliable or responsible firm. The Quartermaster-General says the price is reasonable.

Mr. CANNON. These plates being in existence, so that every individual in the United States can purchase a copy of the publication if he sees proper to do so, I ask my friend from Tennessee if he thinks it good legislation on the part of Congress to make an appropriation to purchase the number indicated in the report of the committee, or any other number?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In response to that question, all I can say is that I think individually it is a proper measure, and, so thinking, I reported it to the House as a member of the Committee on Printing. I have reported it to the House believing that it ought to be adopted, and I ask the House to pass the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. I am very sorry that my friend from New York from the Buffalo district [Mr. FARQUHAR], who was proceeding to address the House a few moments ago upon another bill reported from the Committee on Printing, which the honorable gentleman from Tennesee withdrew, is not present to give us his knowledge touching this matter. I dare say if he was present there is at least a suspicion that the gentleman would withdraw this also.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. ENLOE. Only a very few moments, as my remarks will be very brief on this question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ENLOE. I want to say in regard to the proposed expenditure that I do not think it is a good time for Congress to engage in the business of publishing Santa Claus books. We have passed that period; and if any man wants to obtain a copy of this proposed publication, let him go to the proper place and buy it for himself, and pay for it. I do not want it to be paid for out of the public Treasury, and it certainly will not be so paid by the assistance of my vote.

I reserve the unexpired time yielded to me.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX in the chair). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. These goods, wares, and merchandise displayed on the desk in front of the Speaker take up so much of the time of the members and lead to so much confusion that we can not hear a word that is said. I hope they will be taken out of the Hall until this matter is discussed and settled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order made by the gentleman is well taken.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask——

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much time does the gentleman from Maine want?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not want any time, but rise to ask the gentleman a question.

I understand the War Department has already provided all the copies of these pictures that are required for public military purposes; is that correct?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; the War Department was limited in funds, and only purchased a small lot of these plates.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, how many?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Personally I do not know, but I think 1,500. The Quartermaster-General, however, calls the attention of the Committee on Printing to the measure, which he indorses and recommends, and very earnestly desires that an additional number should be purchased. We take his statement as being worthy of consideration in that connection.

I will state further that the firm which owns these stones desires, of course, to utilize the investment, and if there is no intention on the part of Congress or the Government to purchase additional numbers of the plates it will at once convert the lithographic stones to other uses; and the Quartermaster-General wishes this number purchased before that change is made.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is the gentleman advised as to what purpose the War Department will apply the 1,500 copies?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then what purpose is to be subserved by the distribution of these pictures?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can only refer the gentleman to the letter of the Quartermaster-General, in addition to what his own ideas and intelligence would suggest to him. The Quartermaster-General says:

> As the result of careful study they are of value historically to the country, and are of special interest to the veterans of the various past wars and to the militia and volunteers of the country, and the publication of the number of copies proposed is strongly recommended.

Undoubtedly they will be of historic value to the militia and veterans all over the country, and to the volunteer organizations throughout the various States. These, if ordered, will be distributed by members of Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE. These really were military fashion-plates, were they not, for the preparation of the garments of the Army at various periods?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. BOUTELLE. These, I say, really represent fashion-plates prepared for the purpose of regulating the cut of the clothes of the Army at different epochs in our history?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not say as to that. These cuts have been copyrighted by the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And it is now proposed to print extra copies for the use of Congress, to be distributed pro rata?

Mr. BRUMM. To be distributed amongst the tailors, I suppose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The purpose is to print additional copies for distribution by Congress, as it is believed that the work is of value to many persons.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And the gentleman has come to the conclusion that this will meet some public want?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The committee are of the opinion that General Holabird is competent to give information upon that subject, but as to what may be the public want to be supplied, that is a matter for each gentleman to decide for himself.

I ask a vote.

Mr. PAYSON. One moment; has any estimate been made covering the binding of this work?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; the cost of the binding, or rather mounting, these plates has been estimated, and it was found it can be done for about fifty or sixty cents a copy; and that includes, of course, the mounting of the plates.

Mr. PAYSON. Can it be bound under that legislation which authorizes each member to have one volume bound at his pleasure?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is just the same as that of any other publication.

Mr. PAYSON. I am advised in reference to this publication that the expense of the ordinary binding of one volume would be $5.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYSON. I am told so by gentlemen connected with the Printing Office, and I assume that the Public Printer knows what it will cost to bind them.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is impossible.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is evidently misinformed, for I have a letter here from the estimate clerk of the Government Printing Office, in which it is estimated that it will cost from fifty-five to sixty cents to pay for mounting them.

Mr. PAYSON. But I refer to binding in the ordinary form of half morocco or half calf.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They will be bound in portfolio form.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the estimated cost of the whole thing?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Twenty thousand dollars for 6,000 sets. I call for the previous question.

Mr. ENLOE. I had not yielded my time. I had reserved the balance of my time. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to add that it seems to me the gist of this whole report is contained in the sentence:

> As the result of careful study they are of value historically to the country, and are of special interest to the veterans of the various past wars and to the militia and volunteers of the country, and the publication of the number of copies proposed is strongly recommended.

I want to say that I think the milk of this cocoanut is simply to provide some picture-books to distribute to our constituents; and the time has passed for doing this at the expense of the public. They fill no public necessity that I can see. If any tailor desires to learn exactly how to manufacture a uniform there will be no difficulty in his obtaining a copy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not care to reply to my colleague; but it may be there are some people in this country who could be taught by an object lesson and by pictures more than they can in the ordinary way. I yield for a question from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that this publication is desired by the members of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. WARNER. From whom does the gentleman understand that?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have been so informed, and that a number of requests for them have come from posts.

Mr. WARNER. I have never heard of any such requests by any post.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the commander of the Grand Army does not want them I shall oppose the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WARNER. It is not wanted by our order. If Congress has no other way to get rid of the surplus than to provide fashion-plates, then we had better have them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now ask for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I hope the gentleman will yield to me. I want to submit one consideration in connection with the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Only a moment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield one moment to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. There was one feature of the proposition that at first disposed me to be against it—that they are a matter of historical importance. Now, there has been an erroneous impression as to the occupation of the Army at times. I see in one of these plates an illustration showing the officers engaged in playing checkers. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Chess.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That corrects a very erroneous impression. I have examined the plates and can not see cards anywhere. [Laughter.] It shows that the officers played with nothing but checkers. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. Does not show that they were played on the coattails of the officers?

Mr. SOWDEN (to Mr. BAKER, of New York). Here is one with the cards. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Another is shown playing cards; and I take back all I have said, and withdraw my objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I simply want to say in answer to the remark of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] that if he saw no cards on the plate he examined it must be that the artist failed to get his picture while in the service. [Laughter.] I now move the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and there were—ayes 63, noes 19.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will let it be recommitted. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. PAYSON. I insist upon the motion to lay it upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

USELESS PAPERS IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now call up Senate bill 2305, to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever there shall be in any one of the Executive Departments of the Government an accumulation of files of papers, which are not needed or useful in the transaction of the current business of such Department and have no permanent value or historical interest, it shall be the duty of the head of such Department to submit to Congress a report of that fact, accompanied by a concise statement of the condition and character of such papers. And upon the submission of such report, it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer of the Senate to appoint two Senators, and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives to appoint two Representatives, and the Senators and Representatives so appointed shall constitute a joint committee, to which shall be referred such report, with the accompanying statement of the condition and character of such papers, and such joint committee shall meet and examine such report and statement and the papers therein described, and submit to the Senate and House, respectively, a report of such examination and their recommendation. And if they report that such files of papers, or any part thereof, are not needed or useful in the transaction of the current business of such Department, and have no permanent value or historical interest, then it shall be the duty of such head of the Department to sell as waste paper, or otherwise dispose of such files of papers upon the best obtainable terms after due publication of notice inviting proposals therefor, and receive and pay the proceeds thereof into the Treasury of the United States, and make report thereof to Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question upon ordering the bill to be engrossed to be read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, how much of the hour is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twelve minutes remaining.

GROWTH OF INDUSTRIAL ART.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I send up a resolution which I ask the immediate consideration of. I will state that it is for the reproduction of the work known as "Growth of Industrial Art," which is one of the best publications the Government has ever made. I ask the attention of the House to the resolution and the report. The committee have reported a substitute for the Senate concurrent resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That there be printed for the use of Congress 10,000 additional copies of the work known as "Growth of Industrial Art;" of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, and 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies shall be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior, to be sold by him under the general provisions of the resolution providing for the sale of public documents by said Secretary, approved March 3, 1887.

Be it further resolved, That the plates on which the work has already been printed shall be used to do this work, unless it be found that the work can be obtained more cheaply by using other plates; and

Be it further resolved, That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the sum of $26,500.

The substitute was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the value of this document is well understood, and I therefore demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELATIVE VALUES OF THE PRECIOUS METALS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now call up the Senate concurrent resolution to provide for the reprinting the official report of the Royal British Commission appointed to inquire into recent changes in the relative values of the precious metals.

The concurrent resolution and the report of the committee were read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed the usual number, and 3,000 additional copies, of the report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the recent changes in the relative value of the precious metals, with minutes of evidence and appendixes presented to both houses of Parliament by Her Majesty, in octavo form and bound in cloth, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The committee recommend the adoption of the resolution. The estimated cost of the printing and the binding of the same is: For the usual number, $589; for the 3,000 extra copies, $732.60.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee whether this is a proposition to reprint the report of the royal commission appointed by the British Parliament.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir. It is a proposition to reprint that report. The resolution is a Senate concurrent resolution.

Mr. BLAND. Is there any provision in the report of the committee for increasing the number of copies provided for in that resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. No, sir; the committee have recommended the printing of the same number.

Mr. BLAND. I shall not move an amendment; but I think the document is a very valuable one, and we really ought to have a greater number of copies than is authorized by the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question upon agreeing to the resolution.

The previous question was ordered, and the concurrent resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUGAR TRUST AND STANDARD OIL TRUST.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now call up the House concurrent resolution to print the testimony taken by the Committee on Manufactures in relation to the sugar trust and the Standard Oil trust, and I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the resolution.

The concurrent resolution and the amendment of the Senate were read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 21, 1888.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the House and Senate 5,000 copies of the report, with evidence, lately made by the Committee on Manufactures of the House, in relation to the sugar trust and the Standard Oil trust; 3,000 copies for the use of the House and 1,500 for the use of the Senate.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, December 21, 1888.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolution of the House of Representatives do pass, with the following amendment: Line 3, strike out "five thousand," and insert "four thousand five hundred."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I see that this resolution is limited by its terms to the printing of the evidence taken in regard to two of the trusts. But there was also testimony taken in reference to the whisky trust and the cotton-bagging trust. Why is it not proposed to print the whole testimony?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not answer that question. This is the form in which the resolution came to our committee, and we recommended its passage.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to move to insert the words "and other trusts."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this is a House resolution with a Senate amendment. The only question at present is upon agreeing to the Senate amendment, which relates alone to the number of copies to be printed. An amendment to the body of the resolution is not now in order, that having been agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was not aware of the status of the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that if he desires to refer to us a further resolution on this subject the committee will cheerfully consider it. I hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no objection to the adoption of this resolution, but I see no reason of making "two bites of one cherry."

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago a concurrent resolution of the House for printing the Astronomical Observations of the Naval Observatory for 1886, 1887, and 1888 was adopted. There is on the table a Senate concurrent resolution providing for the same matter. I ask unanimous consent that the action of the House in adopting the House concurrent resolution be reconsidered, and that the Senate concurrent resolution be substituted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the House resolution on this subject was adopted be reconsidered, and that the resolution be laid on the table, in order that the House may take up a Senate resolution on the same subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The two resolutions are in terms literally the same.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection; and the House resolution will be laid on the table. The Clerk will read the resolution of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, October 12, 1888.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual volumes of the Astronomical Observations of the Naval Observatory for 1886, 1887, and 1888 be printed; and that 1,800 additional copies of each report be printed, of which 300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 800 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour set apart for the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Printing is exhausted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask to submit a report, simply to go on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed to call the committees for reports.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that members having reports to present may hand them to the Clerk. If this be agreed to, I propose to move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make from committees be permitted to file them with the Clerk for appropriate reference. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

KEEPING OPEN THE POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. LEE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 5697) to provide an ice boat or boats to facilitate the navigation of the Potomac River, with a substitute (H. R. 12009) to provide an ice boat or boats to facilitate the navigation of the Potomac River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MILITARY POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with amendments joint resolution (H. Res. 198) providing for the printing of The Military Policy of the United States, by the late Bvt. Maj. Gen. Emory Upton, United States Army; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5638) to amend section 5263 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REBECCA H. LYON.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11757) granting a pension to Rebecca H. Lyon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES A. PLATZ.

Mr. MATSON also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11414) granting a pension to Charles A. Platz; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. TOLLY.

Mr. MATSON also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 11861) to place the name of Charles H. Tolly on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. MATSON also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 10516) increasing the pension of Edward Williamson; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JACOB SURERUS AND WILLIAM H. BEHRENS.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3853) for the relief of Jacob Surerus and William H. Behrens; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEVI M. LINCOLN.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 11899) granting a pension to Levi M. Lincoln, of Glen Allen, Mo.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMPSON D. HATFIELD.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3335) granting a pension to Thompson D. Hatfield; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES WAGEMANN.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1153) for the relief of Charles Wagemann; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JULIA A. NUTT.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 11580, a bill (H. R. 12010) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of the estate of Haller A. Nutt deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ROBERT KELLEY.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2530) granting a pension to Robert Kelley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. PHILENA T. CARPENTER.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3042) granting a pension to Mrs. Philena T. Carpenter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWIN W. WARNER.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3561) granting a pension to Edwin W. Warner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY SAEGER.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3538) granting a pension to Mary Saeger; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANK D. WORCESTER.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3451) granting a pension to Frank D. Worcester; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MATHEW S. PRIEST.

Mr. CROUSE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6936) for the relief of Mathew S. Priest; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] states that he rises to a question of privilege. He will state it.

Mr. CRISP. I call up for present consideration the contested-election case of Smalls against Elliott, from the Seventh district of South Carolina.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Upon that I desire to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. I also raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. One gentleman has already raised that question.

Mr. MCCREARY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What has become of the consideration hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia calls up a question of privilege, which, if the House determines to proceed to its consideration, cuts off all other business. The Clerk will report the resolutions which the gentleman from Georgia desires to call up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Robert Smalls was not elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress from the Seventh district of South Carolina.

Resolved, That William Elliott was duly elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress from the Seventh district of South Carolina, and is entitled to his seat.

Mr. ROWELL. I desire to have considered as pending the resolutions reported on this subject by the minority of the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. Nothing is pending yet. The question of consideration is raised by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] against the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of that report?

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. CRISP. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 73, noes 41.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 63.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the substitute proposed by the minority of the Committee on Elections will be considered as pending.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before proceeding to the consideration of the election case I ask unanimous consent to have an order made to which I think the gentleman will not object when he hears it read.

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection to hearing it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, January 10, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and at 3 o'clock p. m. of said day the same shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon in the committee, and the previous question shall then be considered as ordered upon all such amendments, and upon ordering the said bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and upon the passage of the same, and the votes thereon shall be taken in the House before adjournment and without intervening motions or business.

The SPEAKER. That day is already assigned to another order of business.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will modify the resolution and make it Wednesday, January 9.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CRAIN and Mr. FINLEY objected.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I give notice that I will call this up again to-morrow morning and ask its consideration under Rule XXVIII.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House determined to proceed with the contested-election case of Smalls vs. Elliott.

Mr. CRISP. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 101, noes 9.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP as tellers.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 190, nays 15, not voting 118; as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table was adopted.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. KELLEY, on political questions, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. KETCHAM, for the day.

Mr. BACON with Mr. CROUSE, on the election case of Smalls vs. Elliott.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. WHITE, of New York, on all political questions, until Monday next, including the contested-election case of Smalls vs. Elliott.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House do now adjourn, and pending that I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 2, noes 143.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. BRUMM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and ayes were not ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is made that no quorum has voted, and the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes 159.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—aye 1, noes 127.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 94.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places and continue the count.

The tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 106.

Mr. WEAVER. There is no quorum voting, but with the understanding that the gentleman from Georgia will now make the motion to adjourn I will withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is pending.

The tellers' final report is—ayes 6, noes 125. So the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is not agreed to.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent, at least by the vote just taken, that we have not a quorum present, and being late in the afternoon I will not ask a call of the House, but I give notice that I will ask the House to-morrow to consider the report of the Committee on Elections in this case.

I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COX. Before that I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference to the gentleman's committee.

Mr. CRISP. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

ESTABLISHMENT OF REFUGE STATIONS.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 12011) for the establishment of refuge stations at or near Point Barrow, Alaska; at or near Point Hope, Alaska, and at or near East Cape, Siberia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the Senate, with the report of the Senate committee thereon; and also certain letters bearing upon the subject, for the information of the House.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended by the Senate is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 683 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to provide for the distribution, by the Secretary of the Interior, of one set of the official reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, or an exact reprint of the same, comprising volumes 1 to 122, inclusive, or so many volumes as may be needed with those already supplied to make one such set, to each of the places where the circuit and district courts of the United States are regularly held: Provided, That where a circuit court and district court are both holden at the same place, only one such set, or so many volumes as may be needed with those already supplied to make one such set, shall be distributed to that place: Provided further, That for the sets or parts of sets distributed as aforesaid not exceeding $2 per volume shall be paid; and said report shall be kept by the clerks of said courts and their successors in office for the use of said courts and the officers thereof; and the sum of $28,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to carry out the above provision.

"SEC. 2. That, beginning with volume 123, the reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States shall deliver to the Secretary of the Interior, in addition to the number heretofore required by law to be so delivered by him, 26 copies of each volume of the reports of said decisions, for which additional copies he shall be allowed not exceeding $2 per volume. And hereafter all the copies of said reports furnished by said reporter shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner heretofore authorized by law: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall also distribute to each of the places where the circuit and district courts of the United States are regularly holden one copy of the reports so furnished, to be kept by the clerks of said courts and their successors in office for the use of said courts and the officers thereof: Provided further, That where a circuit court and a district court are both holden at the same place, only one copy shall be distributed to that place, and the residue of the copies shall be deposited in the Library of Congress. And the said reports, in all cases where the same are distributed as aforesaid, shall remain the property of the United States, and be preserved as such by the above-named officers, and by them to be turned over to their successors in office; and so much of section 386 of the Revised Statutes as charges the Department of Justice with the distribution thereof is hereby repealed."

The report of the Senate committee is as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes, respectfully report the said bill with the recommendation that all after the enacting clause be stricken out, and the bill submitted herewith be substituted therefor.

The bill (H. R. 1860) was referred to the Attorney-General for his views thereon, and that official submitted for the consideration of the committee the substitute herewith submitted, with the following letter, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior:

"The first-mentioned bill (H. R. 1860) provides for distribution of sets of the reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States to places where the circuit and district courts are held, exclusive of such places where the judges of said courts reside, and for that purpose the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated. This provision is made the second section of the draught referred to above, while the first section thereof provides for the distribution of copies of the same reports as they may be hereafter published, beginning with volume 123. You suggest the advisability of distributing the copies covered by such first section directly from your (Interior) Department to the officers, etc., designated therein, and you also inquire what number of sets will probably be needed to meet the requirements of such second section, and whether $20,000 is sufficient.

"In regard to the distribution of the reports, I concur in the view suggested by you that it would better subserve the convenience of all concerned and save much time and labor if the copies designated for the use of the judiciary and the officers of the courts were distributed directly from your Department instead of being sent therefrom to this Department and redistributed here as at present.

"To your inquiry as to the number of sets needed I submit the following statement in reply: Irrespective of the Territories there are one hundred and forty-two places at which circuit and district courts of the United States are held. Many of these places, it may be assumed, are already supplied with partial sets, consisting of volumes of reports heretofore distributed for the use of the courts. Making allowance for such partial sets (which probably reach 20 per cent. of the number of volumes that would be required to supply each of the one hundred and forty-two places mentioned with one set), I think that about one hundred and fourteen sets will be needed, each containing volumes 1 to 122, inclusive. To supply that number of sets of the official reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court, or exact reprints of the same, each set embracing 122 volumes, separately bound, in good law sheep (and I assume that none others are contemplated to be supplied), it will require, so far as I am able to judge from information received, nearly $28,000.

"I herewith submit a draught, by way of amendment to the aforesaid bill now before the Senate, which embraces the new matter prepared in your Department, and also additional provisions. The amendment presented in this draught aims to enable your Department to supply each of the places at which circuit and district courts are regularly held with one set of said reports, complete to date, for the use of such courts and the officers thereof, and at the same time to provide for the distribution by your Department of copies of each volume of the reports, as hereafter published, to these places and to the various officers, etc., designated."

The committee also recommend that the title of the bill be amended by adding the words "relating to the distribution of the reports of the Supreme Court."

The letters referred to by Mr. LANHAM are as follows:

1621 H STREET, Washington, January 7, 1889.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant concerning House bill 1860 as amended by the Senate.

Having no personal interest in the subject, I have not followed all the steps in this legislation, but I think the following may be relied upon as substantially correct:

The courts of the United States have increased in number since the passage of the existing laws respecting the distribution of the reports of the Supreme Court. The House bill 1860 was introduced and passed with a view of supplying the deficiency. On reaching the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Printing, by whom it was sent to the Secretary of the Interior for information. The Secretary of the Interior being only the distributing officer under the law, and not having the necessary information as to the wants of the courts, referred it to the Attorney-General. The Department of Justice put itself in communication with the officers of the various courts on the one side, and with the publishers on the other, and ascertained that the deficiencies were larger than were supposed when the House bill was passed, and that they could be met by the immediate appropriation of $28,000, to fill all deficiencies up to and including volume 122, and a further provision for the annual payment of $2 a volume for 76 sets in the future. With the great increase in the business of the court there are now annually published from three to four volumes. At three volumes a year the annual appropriation would be $456; at four volumes a year it would be $608.

An amendment to the House bill was accordingly draughted in the Department of Justice, embodying the result of this information. This bill was returned to the Senate committee as the answer to its inquiry, and it was passed, as I am informed, substantially as it was reported from the Department.

Hoping that this may be of use to you, I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. BANCROFT DAVIS.

Hon. S. W. T. LANHAM, M. C.

WASHINGTON, January 7, 1889.

DEAR SIR: We have seen by the RECORD of the 4th that Mr. BLOUNT objected to the unanimous consent of the House being given to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1860) which provides for the distribution of United States Supreme Court Reports.

It is quite evident to us that Mr. BLOUNT has a misconception of the intent of the bill. The approximate cost of furnishing the number of sets considered by the Attorney-General to be sufficient will not exceed $28,000. Mr. BLOUNT labors under the idea that the work of furnishing these reports will be over $1,000,000. We think that Mr. BLOUNT is led to believe that so much money will be needed for this purpose by the fact that in the Forty-sixth Congress, upon recommendation of Attorney-General Brewster, in the sundry civil bill passed in the third session, a provision was made to supply district judges, district attorneys, and others with sets, and to fill uncompleted sets with Reports of the Supreme Court. This provision lapsed by reason that the Attorney-General found it impossible to collect the desired number of volumes at a reasonable price. At that time fifty-eight volumes were entirely out of print and very scarce, selling from twelve to fifteen dollars per volume in the auction-rooms.

The fact of this appropriation having been made induced us to acquire the copyrights by purchase from the various parties owning them and to begin a verbatim reprint of the volumes. We also secured as editors Hon. F. C. Brightley, of Philadelphia, and Hon. Stewart Rapalje, of New York, who were approved by the Attorney-General. On account of the labor involved in the editing of these early volumes, which took several years, it was found impossible to avail ourselves of the provision enacted by the Forty-sixth Congress.

Our net price for the reprints is $3.50 per volume. We have offered them to the Government for $2 per volume, and in our judgment the volumes needed to complete all the sets at the various courts will cost from $24,000 to $28,000.

I inclose a copy of the section of the sundry civil bill which was passed in the Forty-sixth Congress.

Yours, respectfully,

BANKS & BROTHERS.

Dictated by Joseph G. Jennings.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

To supply district judges and district attorneys who have not already received the same with the Reports of the Supreme Court and Statutes at Large of the United States, and also to furnish complete sets of the same where there are none, to such points where United States courts are authorized to be held, and to supply broken sets where there are missing volumes, a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated. (Forty-sixth Congress, third session, chapter 133, page 454, volume 21 U. S. Stats.)

Hon. S. W. T. LANHAM,
House of Representatives.

1621 H STREET, WASHINGTON, January 8, 1889.

DEAR SIR: Since writing yesterday I have ascertained that Mr. BLOUNT is quite correct in his recollection that some years since it was proposed to supply the courts with complete sets of the reports, and that the project was abandoned in consequence of the great expense.

At that time there had been no reprint of Wheaton, and no late editions of Dallas or Cranch or Peters. Many of the volumes were out of print and commanded enormous prices, even if they could be got at all in the number wanted. The proposition was to reprint full sets, but it was found to be too expensive. Since then private enterprise has produced an excellent reprint, volume for volume, with the same paging, head-notes, reports of arguments, and indices, and with the addition of full notes embodying the more recent learning. It is to this edition that the estimate of the Department of Justice embodied in the Senate amendment applies.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. BANCROFT DAVIS.

Hon. S. W. T. LANHAM, M. C.

OFFICE OF THE CLERK SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 8, 1889.

DEAR SIR: In response to your personal inquiry relative to the matter of H. R. bill 1860, I have to say that the official edition of the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States down to and including the one hundred and twenty-fourth volume are advertised by the present publishers—Bank Bros., of New York—for the sum of $306 per set of 124 volumes.

The Attorney-General states that the circuit and district courts are held at one hundred and forty-two places. To supply each of these one hundred and forty-two places at the publishers' advertised price the cost would be $43,452. To supply each (one hundred and forty-two places) at the price and number of volumes specified in the bill ($2 per volume—122 volumes) would cost $34,648.

As partial sets have already been distributed, it is estimated that 114 sets will be sufficient, which, at $2 per volume, will cost $27,816.

Very respectfully,

JAMES H. McKENNEY, Clerk.

Hon. S. W. T. LANHAM,
House of Representatives.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent this morning when the vote was being taken on the motion to recommit the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules, one of the few occasions when I have been absent from the House during my service here, and I ask unanimous consent that my vote may be recorded in the negative upon that motion. I will state that it does not change the result.

Mr. CRISP. It makes no change whatever in the result of the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HARBOR OF REFUGE, POINT JUDITH.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York with reference to a harbor of refuge at or near Point Judith, Rhode Island.

There was no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At the monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce held January 3, 1889, the following preamble and resolutions reported by its committee on the harbor and shipping were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the section of the Atlantic seaboard at and near Point Judith, Rhode Island, is considered by mariners one of the most dangerous parts of the coast; and

Whereas there is no harbor at present for 29 miles along the shore where passengers, crews, cargo, or vessels in distress can with safety make a landing, and in consequence disaster in this locality has generally resulted in total loss of vessels and cargoes and the destruction of human life; and

Whereas by the construction of harbors of refuge at the locality lives and property will be saved and the coastwise commerce of the Atlantic seaboard be benefited: Therefore

Be it resolved, That harbors of refuge at the point designated seem to this chamber to be urgently required by the coastwise commerce of this part of the Atlantic seaboard, whereby the safety of the lives of seamen and the property of its citizens will be greatly enhanced.

Resolved, That our representatives be requested to urge upon Congress the importance of immediate construction of such harbors of refuge, and at such points as, in the judgment of the United States engineers, are required in the neighborhood of Point Judith, and that the appropriation required to carry the same into effect be made.

A true copy.

CHAS. J. SMITH, President.
GEO. WILSON, Secretary.

Mr. CRISP. I now renew the motion that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: A bill (H. R. 12012) for the relief of H. C. Brewster—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: A bill (H. R. 12013) for the relief of Jesse N. Farwell—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CONGER: A bill (H. R. 12014) granting a pension to Irving W. Combs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANE: A bill (H. R. 12016) granting a pension to Anna Haarstick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12017) granting a pension to Malinda Shelby—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE: A bill (H. R. 12018) granting a pension to David Dudley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also a bill (H. R. 12019) granting a pension to Mrs. John W. Webster—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also a bill (H. R. 12020) granting a pension to Mary E. McKenney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS WILSON: A bill (H. R. 12021) for the relief of De Witt Eastman—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: A bill (H. R. 12022) granting a pension to William H. Hendly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOST: A bill (H. R. 12023) for the relief of the heirs of H. C. Boyd, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JEHU BAKER: Resolutions of the National Grange, Patrons of Industry, indorsing House bills 11027 and 11266—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Resolutions of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, requesting the adoption of measures for the early abandonment of the entire internal-revenue system—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: Statement of H. S. Brewster in support of bill to place his name on the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petition of Thayer & Lincoln and 400 merchants, underwriters, shipmasters, and owners of vessels, for the establishment of a harbor of refuge at Edgartown, Mass.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition for the admission of Dakota, but protesting against the Sioux Falls constitution—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. HERBERT: Petition of the heirs of Sarah A. Price, late of Butler County, Alabama, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PETERS: Resolutions of Cedar Vale Post, No. 90, of Kansas, favoring the erection of monuments on the battle-fields of the late war—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WEBER: Petition of citizens of Wilson, N. Y., for harbor improvements and light-house—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Petition of the heirs of C. A. Shelton, late of Maury County, Tennessee, for reference of their claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS WILSON: Petition in favor of the bill providing for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal—to the Committee on Commerce.

The following petition against the passage of the international copyright bill was received, and referred to the Committee on Patents:

By Mr. BRYCE (by request): Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 9, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EDMUND RANDOLPH'S ACCOUNT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 2d instant, a statement in regard to the account of Edmund Randolph, formerly Attorney-General of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR, AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company, submitted in compliance with the fifth section of the act of Congress approved September 26, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, praying for the enactment of laws providing for the constitutional celebration in 1889, the world's exposition in 1892, and for the permanent exposition of the three Americas; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. HISCOCK presented a petition of farmers and grangers of Denmark, Lewis County, New York, praying for protection to agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

C. M. STINSON.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Committee on Military Affairs considered the bill (H. R. 3595) for the relief of C. M. Stinson, and reported it to the Senate adversely, and it was indefinitely postponed. The time has now passed for a motion to be entered for a reconsideration, and I ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate in that respect may be reconsidered and the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, as the claimant desires to file additional evidence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the action of the Senate indefinitely postponing the bill will be reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 48) authorizing acceptance by Dr. W. J. Hoffman of certain decorations from foreign powers, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 7799) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company;

A bill (H. R. 2688) for the relief of Alfred Breuer; and

A bill (S. 3779) for the relief of Frederick N. Kress.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7801) for the relief of William F. C. Nindemann, formerly a seaman in the Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2797) in recognition of the merits and services of Chief Engineer George Wallace Melville, United States Navy, and of the other officers and men of the Jeannette Arctic expedition, reported it without amendment.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1605) for the relief of Lieut. Col. Edward E. Eyres, asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 126) authorizing Capt.

George S. Anderson, Sixth Cavalry, to accept from the President of the French Republic a diploma conferring the decoration of Chevalier of the National Order of the Legion of Honor, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4351) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy, reported it without amendment.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, with the amendments of the House of Representatives thereto, to report it back with the recommendation that the amendments of the House of Representatives be disagreed to, and that a conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reports back the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, with the recommendation that the Senate disagree to the amendments and ask for a conference thereon. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. SHERMAN, EDMUNDS, and MORGAN were appointed.

JESSE DURNELL.

Mr. CAMERON. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9211) for the relief of Jesse Durnell have instructed me to report it without amendment, and I have been requested to ask for the immediate passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay Jesse Durnell, of Effingham, Ill., $1,237.50, being the amount due him for seventeen and one-half months' difference in pay between that of first-class and second-class pilot in the Mississippi squadron.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COKE introduced a bill (S. 3793) to amend the "act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3794) granting to the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company a right of way through a part of the Crow Indian reservation in Montana Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3795) granting to the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company a right of way across the Fort Custer military reservation, Montana; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. It proposes to go across a military reservation?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yes; and I ask that it be referred to the Military Committee. The first bill I introduced proposed to grant a right of way across the Indian country, and it was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The second bill proposes to grant a right of way through the Fort Custer military reservation, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be so referred if there be no objection.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 127) directing the Chief of Engineers of the Army to proceed in the construction of the building for additional accommodations for the Library of Congress, in accordance with certain plans; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to furnish to the Senate an estimate of the cost of grading and regulating Boundary street from Fourth street west to North Capitol street. Also, the cost of and a plan for the opening of the extension of Eleventh street west from Boundary to Mount Pleasant avenue.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VANCE to Schedule J, flax, hemp, and jute, paragraph 340, by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That the duty on no article mentioned in this schedule shall exceed the rate of 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] unless some other arrangement be made.

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I therefore ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas withdraws his vote.

Mr. MORRILL. If I were not paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], I should vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. COLQUITT (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. COLQUITT. I then withdraw my vote, as I am paired with him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia withdraws his vote.

Mr. HOAR. I understand there is as yet no quorum, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I am informed that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who is absent, has no pair. If that be the case——

Mr. ALLISON. I did not announce it at this vote, but I paired mentally the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. Of course, if the Senator from Maine desires to transfer his pair, I shall withdraw my vote.

Mr. HALE. No; I will announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Bate,	Gray,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Brown,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,	Wilson of Md.
Butler,	Morgan,	Vest,
Coke,	Payne,	Voorhees,

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Allison,	Dolph,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Plumb,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hoar,	Sherman,

ABSENT—39.

Beck,	Daniel,	Hampton,	Pasco,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Harris,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Hearst,	Quay,
Blair,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Frye,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Call,	George,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Chace,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Turpie.
Colquitt,	Hale,	Paddock,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It being ascertained by the state of the vote that a quorum is not present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll of the Senate, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Allison,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Stockbridge,
Bate,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Teller,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Brown,	George,	Palmer,	Vance,
Butler,	Gray,	Payne,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hale,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Coke,	Hiscock,	Reagan,	Wilson of Iowa.
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Davis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sherman,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators having answered to their names and a quorum being present, further proceedings under the roll-call will be dispensed with, if there be no objection. The Secretary will again call the roll upon the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I will withhold my vote until it is ascertained whether there is likely to be a quorum on this call.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I should vote "nay" but for the fact that I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). I was paired yesterday, as I understood, with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. My pair has been changed so often that I hardly know whether I am at liberty to vote or not.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the understanding is that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Very well.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY. My pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] having been transferred, I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] until further notice, and vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Reagan,	Voorhees,
Berry,	Gray,	Saulsbury,	Walthall,
Brown,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Morgan,	Vance,
Coke,	Payne,	Vest,

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Allison,	Dolph,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Platt,	Teller,
Chace,	Hale,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Sherman,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Spooner,

ABSENT—33.

Beck,	Eustis,	Hearst,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	Hoar,	Quay,
Blair,	Faulkner,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Frye,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	George,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Butler,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Stanford.
Call,	Gorman,	Mitchell,
Daniel,	Hampton,	Paddock,
Edmunds,	Harris,	Pasco,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance as a substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE L.—SILK AND SILK GOODS.

372. Silk partially manufactured from cocoons or from waste-silk, and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk, 50 cents per pound.

373. Thrown silk, not more advanced than singles, tram, organzine, sewing-silk, twist, floss, spun silk, and silk threads or yarns of every description, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

374. Goods in the piece, including ribbons, not otherwise specially provided for in this act, weighing not less than 1 ounce nor more than 8 ounces per square yard, containing less than 25 per cent. and not less than 10 per cent. in weight of silk, 75 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem; the same, containing less than 50 per cent. and not less than 25 per cent. in weight of silk, $1.25 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem; the same, containing 50 per cent. or more in weight of silk, if black, $1.60 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem; if white or colored, or partly black or partly colored, $2.25 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I am not sufficiently an expert in the tariff schedules to know whether paragraph 374 comprises the particular item about which the United States is now engaged in litigation with Mr. John Wanamaker, of Philadelphia. I see in the papers this morning that Mr. Wanamaker has gained his suit in the circuit court of the United States, and that the litigation is now taken by the Government on appeal to the Supreme Court.

Without having inspected that record, or speaking accurately as a lawyer, I take it from the newspaper accounts that the question in controversy between the Government and Mr. Wanamaker is as to the construction of this particular item in regard to ribbons, he contending, if I am correctly informed, that ribbons come under another part of the tariff act in regard to trimmings for hats and bonnets, and therefore have a less duty upon them than the ribbons which are named in the schedule now before me.

The newspapers also represent—for whose statements I am not responsible, but reputable journals state—that Mr. Wanamaker is manufacturing these goods in France, although I think he is one of the most distinguished advocates for American labor and the protection of American workingmen.

Mr. VANCE. In Berlin.

Mr. VEST. In Berlin; excuse me. It is abroad, not in this country. It is stated that he is the largest merchant in the United States. I saw a statement from him in one of the Philadelphia papers that during the Christmas holidays the sales of his establishment averaged $1,000,000 a day. One million dollars per day during the Christmas holidays! Whether that be correct or not I do not know. I quote it for what it is worth.

It seems that when he imported these ribbons a controversy arose between him and the custom-house officers as to the construction of this item, and he contended that there was a less duty upon these ribbons by reason of their being trimmings for hats and bonnets, whereas the officers of the Government contended, as I understand, that the ribbons come under this item of the tariff law. I hope that my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who understands this matter, will inform me if this is the item.

Mr. CHACE. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Not at all.

Mr. CHACE. Did I understand him to say that Wanamaker's sales were $1,000,000 a day?

Mr. VEST. During the Christmas holidays I saw that statement in a paper. I was very much astonished at it and read it over again.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator believes that, does he?

Mr. VEST. I do not say whether I believe it or not, because I am so little accustomed to the business of these enormous establishments that I have no idea upon the subject.

Mr. HOAR. I think either the Senator's memory has misled him, or more probably that he was misled by a misprint in one paper, because I saw the same kind of an interview in which Wanamaker put it at $100,000 a day, and said that in the Christmas holidays altogether his sales had amounted to nearly $1,000,000.

Mr. VEST. I saw it stated at a million dollars a day.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator probably saw a misprint.

Mr. VEST. But it is not material. It is a very large establishment, and covers, I believe, an entire block in the city of Philadelphia. I have been in the house and it is by far the largest establishment that I have ever seen, even including the city of New York. But whether the sales amounted to $1,000,000 or $100,000 a day does not matter. The point I make in the matter is this: I wish to know from my friend from Rhode Island whether this is the item in litigation, and whether this bill has removed that matter out of controversy in the future.

Mr. ALDRICH. The controversy to which the Senator from Missouri refers is in regard to the construction of paragraph 448 of Schedule L of the existing law (it is not in the present bill at all), fixing a rate of duty upon hat material, and has no application whatever to the paragraph now under consideration.

Mr. VEST. Paragraph 448?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not 448 of the Senate bill, but 448 of the existing law, which is one of the paragraphs of Schedule L, which reads as follows:

448. Hats, and so forth, materials for: Braids, plaits, flats, laces, trimmings, tissues, willow sheets and squares, used for making or ornamenting hats, bonnets, and hoods, composed of straw, chip, grass, palm leaf, willow, hair, whalebone, or any other substance or material, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The Department has held and the courts have held that the proper construction of that paragraph admits ribbons and other articles of silk and satin as materials for hats at 20 per cent. ad valorem, which is the rate fixed in this paragraph, instead of at the rate of 50 per cent. ad valorem, as now provided in the silk schedule for ribbons, or the specific rates which are fixed in the paragraph which has just been read.

Mr. GRAY. Then I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to say that as the subject-matter not of a statute, but of a suit, the importation of ribbons was charged with the duty affixed to hat materials?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Which was a lower duty than that attached to ribbons in this schedule.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir; 20 per cent. ad valorem, when the duty on ribbons would be 50 per cent.

Mr. GRAY. What was the result of that suit?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not aware. The suit is still pending. I think it has been appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. It was decided in the court below in favor of Wanamaker, and the Government took an appeal.

Mr. GRAY. The ribbon manufacturers were interested on the other side of that subject. They were deprived by this decision, indirectly, of the protection of that section.

Mr. ALDRICH. That defect in the existing law is entirely and radically cured by the provisions of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

375. Velvets, plushes, or other pile fabrics in the piece (including ribbons), not otherwise specially provided for in this act, weighing not less than 1 ounce nor more than 8 ounces per square yard, containing less than 25 per cent. and not less than 10 per cent. in weight of silk, $1 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem; the same, containing less than 50 per cent. and not less than 25 per cent. in weight of silk, $1.50 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem; the same, containing 50 per cent. or more in weight of silk, $3.50 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem. In ascertaining the percentage of silk under this act the weight of silk shall be taken as found in the goods.

Mr. ALDRICH. On behalf of the committee I move, in line 1604, to strike out the words "weighing not less than 1 ounce nor more than 8 ounces per square yard."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 1604 and 1605 it is proposed to strike out the words "weighing not less than 1 ounce nor more than 8 ounces per square yard;" so as to read:

375. Velvets, plushes, or other pile fabrics in the piece (including ribbons), not otherwise specially provided for in this act, containing less than 25 per cent. and not less than 10 per cent. in weight of silk, $1 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

376. Webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, cords and tassels, any of the foregoing which are elastic or non-elastic, buttons, and ornaments, made of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

377. Laces and embroideries, neck-ruffings and ruchings, clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, composed of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 60 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. When the Presiding Officer of the Senate has formally stated that if there be no objection then the item under consideration would be adopted, speaking for myself, I have made no objection, but I wish to say now that my non-action was not dictated by my assent to the changes that are made by this bill. I have simply not objected because the articles embraced in this schedule are not articles of necessity, but articles of luxury. I have received numbers of letters from silk dealers and importers protesting against this increase of duties; but I have not seen proper to act upon their letters for the reason that my sympathies in this entire matter are with the poorer classes of the country, and I am not speaking with the view of securing favor with anybody, but because I believe on principle that the burdens of taxation should fall as lightly as possible upon the poorer people of the country, and that the duties should be put, if duties must be imposed, upon those who are able to bear them.

Mr. ALLISON. That is exactly the framework and idea of this bill.

Mr. VEST. I do not accept the statement of my friend from Iowa at all, and the very point in issue between us on every schedule has been that which I have made. I do not admit that this bill is in the interest of the poorer classes of the country. On the contrary, I must say, and say it deliberately, that this bill is made in the interest of the manufacturers, without regard to the consumers of the country. I believe that as much as I believe that I am now speaking in the Senate of the United States.

There is one other thing, however, which should be considered in framing these schedules. We are confronted—very little has been said about it in this debate—with an enormous surplus in the Treasury constantly increasing. These increases upon this schedule will largely swell that surplus. For instance, upon the items which have just been read the increase of 10 per cent. over the existing law makes an increase of $461,792.31, and so on throughout the schedule. That, it seems to me, ought to have been taken into consideration by Senators who framed this bill. It seems to me there should be no political consideration that would interfere with our duty in reducing this surplus, if for no other reason because it is a standing temptation to the legislation of the country. It is an abnormal condition of affairs. There can come no good from the surplus in the Treasury of the United States. No private citizen would conduct his business as we are conducting the public business of our constituents now. And yet this bill in this silk schedule makes an increase in a large number of items, and conspicuously in the one just read of nearly a half million dollars.

What I rose particularly, however, to say was this: Some years ago, in the State of Missouri, I had a very pleasant acquaintance with a very enterprising young German who was then in very humble circumstances and who disappeared from the West and now renews his acquaintance with me as a large merchant in the city of New York—not an unusual thing in our country, I am glad to say. He is a very large corset-maker and belongs to the firm of Mayer, Strouse & Co. He is a manufacturer of corsets, and writes to me upon the subject of the increase of duty upon silk materials that go into his manufacture. He states substantially that if the materials are allowed to come in free or with decreased duties he can compete with the manufacturers of the finer corsets in Europe, and I ask the Secretary to read the papers which I send to him, in which Mr. Strouse makes his statement much more accurately than I can. A great many of the articles which are in this schedule—for instance, laces and embroideries—enter into the manufacture of the finer corsets.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the object of the Senator from Missouri is to place this on record. I see no occasion for reading it. It might be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. VEST. I would rather have it read, because it is an argument and a statement.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

HOW THE TARIFF PINCHES—THE LARGEST CORSET-MAKERS OF THE COUNTRY DISCUSS IT—MAYER, STROUSE & CO. SAY THEY AND THEIR WORKMEN WOULD BOTH BE BENEFITED BY A REDUCTION—HOW THEY COMPETE WITH ENGLISH MANUFACTURERS NOWADAYS.

"Ours is another of the industries where protection does not protect," said one of the firm of Mayer, Strouse & Co., one of the largest corset-manufacturing concerns in the world, to a representative of the Star yesterday. "Instead of protecting us," he continued, "the tariff is a direct tax of at least 10 per cent. on the American corset manufacturer and his workmen."

Mayer, Strouse & Co. are among the pioneers in corset manufacturing in America, and their business has grown to enormous proportions. They are the largest manufacturers of corset clasps. They employ at New Haven about two thousand five hundred men, women, and girls, and they turn out daily five hundred dozens of corsets and three hundred gross of corset clasps.

Corset manufacturing is popularly supposed to be one of the protected industries—an industry in which a high tariff on the finished article is supposed to enable the manufacturer to pay high wages for his labor. Mr. A. Strouse and Mr. S. J. Mayer are the New York partners of Mayer, Strouse & Co., and Mr. Max Adler is the New Haven partner, and has entire charge of the manufacturing department. All these gentlemen say that the tariff does not protect the American manufacturer of fine goods or enable him to pay high wages.

On the contrary, they say that the tariff as at present constituted limits their market, restricts their production, and reduces their demand for labor, and, with a reduced demand for labor, there must always come lower wages. Messrs. Mayer, Strouse & Co. are not theoretical revenue reformers. They are hard-working, close-figuring, hard-headed business men, and years of experience and careful observation have convinced them that undue Government interference in business always results disastrously.

"Please explain how it is that the present tariff is a tax upon you instead of being a benefit," requested the reporter.

"We can do that very easily. We are forced to pay a tremendous duty on everything we use in the manufacture of fine or good corsets which come into competition with the imported article, except horn strips, which come in free, but which are only 8 per cent. of the cost for raw materials. On the coutil, which is used for the body of the corset, we pay 40 per cent. duty; of this material none but the coarsest qualities are made in America, though when competing with the imported goods the finer qualities of coutil must be imported. On linen bands we pay 35 per cent. duty; none are made in America. On satins we pay 50 per cent.; on laces and trimmings 40 per cent., and on the steel of which we make clasps we pay a duty of 45 per cent. ad valorem and a weight duty of a quarter of a cent a pound—this amounts to an ad valorem duty of 54 per cent. on our steel.

"We have recently made a careful calculation of all the elements of cost of our goods, and we find that the duties we are forced to pay on the materials we use amount to an average tax of 45 per cent. of the value of our finished product, while foreign corsets are taxed only 35 per cent. on the European value. So you see that this boasted protection really results in taxing us (American manufacturers and American working people) at least 10 per cent. in favor of European labor and European capital.

"Here is one of the thousand inequalities of our tariff that interfere with the legitimate development of trade and manufacture. These inequalities are a natural outcome of an excessively high tariff. The only solution is in a gradual reduction of our import duties on the materials used in the manufacture of corsets. The fundamental laws of commerce demand that there should be no artificial restrictions on trade. The needs of Government demand a revenue of which commerce pays its share, but this tax should be so adjusted as to interfere as little as possible with the international exchange of commodities. Our tariff seems constructed with a view to placing all possible obstacles in the way of commerce."

"How is it that you are enabled to compete at all with the foreign manufacturer, handicapped as you are by the tariff?"

"It is because our labor, combined with our machinery, is so much more productive. Our work-people are so skillful and intelligent and our machinery is so perfectly adjusted to our work that we produce as much with our twenty-five hundred people as the European manufacturer produces with five thousand people. Last year the largest manufacturer of corsets in England went to New Haven to visit our works. We gave him every facility and he investigated our machinery and methods thoroughly. When he got through he said, 'I am amazed at the superior effectiveness of your work-people, your machinery, and your system. Equipped as you are, you can turn out three times as many corsets as we do with the same number of hands.'

"All we ask is for Government to cease interfering with our business. Give us our materials free, and with our more productive labor we would soon not only drive foreign corsets out of our market completely, but we would become large exporters. We are already, hampered as we are, getting some export trade, but give us our materials as cheaply as the European manufacturer gets his materials, and with our more productive labor and machinery we will soon control the corset trade of Canada, Mexico, Central and South America, the West Indies, and get our share of other markets. This would mean the employment of many thousand more American workers, higher wages, and millions more of American capital.

"In our close study of our own business and of the conditions that affect it, we have had to look into the elementary principles of many other lines of business, and, to our surprise, we have found that on all, or almost all, the tariff bears heavily, because it taxes so greatly and unnecessarily the raw materials they consume.

"Americans believe and Europeans admit that Americans are the most ingenious, most intelligent, most skillful, and the hardest-working people in the world. We are never tired of boasting of our superior smartness and of our marvelous natural resources and advantages. We boast truthfully of these things. Why do we not make use of them and go forth in the path of manifest destiny and conquer the markets of the world? I will venture to prophesy that the very men who to-day would limit the American manufacturer and merchant to our own market will, in less than twenty-five years, be as lustily shouting that nothing less than the whole world shall be the theater of American energy and ambition."

Mr. VEST. I know the gentleman who made that statement, and he is one of the most successful business men in my acquaintance, and speaks from actual experience. In addition to that, he sends me the following statement, which, as a matter of course, coming from me, will receive very little attention, but coming from him, a practical manufacturer and a man who has demonstrated that he understands his business, ought to weigh something with the Senators conducting this bill.

Capital invested in the corset industry		$5,000,000.00
Number of firms engaged therein:
Large concerns		40
Smaller concerns		100
Labor engaged, men and women		12,000
Annual production (mostly common goods)	pairs...	14,500,000
Value of same		$8,000,000.00
Importation, 1887 (mostly fine goods)		$1,063,296.00
Duty on importation, 35 per cent		$370,577.55

In order to compete with fine goods we are obliged to import the following articles, none of which are produced in this country:

1. Coutil, on which we have to pay 40 per cent. duty, or 5 per cent. more than the finished product.
2. Satin, on which we have to pay 50 or 60 per cent. duty, or 15 or 25 per cent. more than the finished product.
3. Corset steel, on which we have to pay 45 per cent. and one-fourth cent per pound, equal to 56 per cent. duty, or 21 per cent. more than the finished product.
4. Laces, or corset trimmings, on which we have to pay 40 per cent. duty, or 5 per cent. more than the finished product.
5. Edgings silk, on which we have to pay 50 per cent. duty, or 15 per cent. more than the finished product.
6. Linen bands or braids, on which we have to pay 35 per cent. duty, on par with the finished product.
7. Horn strips, free. This article constitutes 8 per cent. of the value of the finished product.
8. Labor, free, constituting about 25 per cent. of the product.

MAYER, STROUSE & CO.

Therefore 67 per cent. of the imported articles pay a higher rate of duty than the finished product, and laborers and manufacturers are taxed on fine goods instead of being protected.

Of course, personally I know nothing about the accuracy of the statements, but they come from the largest corset manufacturer in the United States, and some of these articles made of silk, satin, laces, and edgings, which are mentioned in this estimate, are included in this schedule. I have been unable to ascertain from experts what is the actual increase over the present law by the amendments put on this silk schedule by the majority of the Finance Committee of the Senate. We can easily ascertain what the increase is upon the clause under consideration for it is an increase of 10 per cent., making $461,000 on the importation of 1887, but the approximate increase of duty, as nearly as I can find out, on this whole schedule is more than $1,000,000 annually. This may be incorrect, but that is the best estimate I can obtain from experts; and now with an overflowing Treasury we deliberately propose to increase these duties over $1,000,000 in the interest of the manufacturers alone. I make that assertion deliberately, because nobody else can demand it, and whilst I have made no objection specifically, because I knew it was perfectly useless, I content myself with this general statement at the close of the schedule.

Mr. ALDRICH. This schedule was prepared at the Treasury Department by Treasury experts, and was intended, with the exception of the clause now under consideration, to be simply a translation of existing ad valorem rates into specific rates or compound rates. It was not intended either by the Department or by the committee to increase the rates upon the general line of articles that are included in this schedule, and it is my belief that it is the opinion of the experts in the Treasury Department that no such increase has been made by the provisions of this schedule with the exception, as I have already stated, of the item now under consideration. It is true that we have advanced the duties upon the articles in this particular paragraph 10 per cent., or from 50 to 60 per cent., to make it more equitable and to give the manufacturers here of articles of ready-made clothing from silk adequate protection. The committee have not lost sight, as the Senator from Missouri seems to think it has, of the question of revenue involved in this addition. We have made all through the bill very many substantial reductions, and we have made many changes of law which may result in substantial reductions of the revenue, and I am inclined to think with the Senator from Missouri that the result upon this one item will be an increase of the revenue, but it is an increase derived from articles of luxury, which, I think, the Senator from Missouri will agree with me should be taxed if anything should be.

Now, as to the particular subject to which he has referred and which is included in the paper which has been read by the Secretary, I will say that at the present time under existing law there is an inequality in regard to the rates of duty on fine corsets unquestionably. Corsets of any material or of every material now pay 35 per cent. ad valorem duty, and the silk from which some corsets are made, and very many of the other articles, as has been already stated, have a higher rate of duty than that. That inequality is remedied by the bill before us and by the very paragraph now under consideration. It has been the purpose of the committee whenever these inequalities have been brought to their attention to remedy them, and they have certainly provided a substantial remedy for the particular thing which is complained of by the gentleman whose statement has been read from the desk. The present duty on silk corsets being 35 per cent., it is here fixed at 60 per cent. by the paragraph now under consideration, and I think the gentleman referred to will have no occasion hereafter to complain of that particular kind of inequality.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the discussion in reference to the silk manufacturer calls to my mind a very interesting incident in the history of this industry which I think will be useful in determining what ought to be the policy of the future.

When the tariff bill of 1872 was under consideration in the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives there were a great many hearings of parties interested in different industries, and in different theories of the application of duties to industries, just as there are now, with this difference, that those hearings were not preserved then by reporters and printed, although they were open discussions, but they were lost to everybody except the committee to whom they were addressed. Had they been preserved, the comparison between that law and this bill in its effect upon these industries would have been a very useful lesson in reference to this particular industry of silk fabrics.

I have a clear recollection of what took place in that committee, which has been watched by the members of the committee ever since with great interest. There appeared before the committee at that time a gentleman who was a philosopher, not a manufacturer, not anybody with any capital invested either on the other side or this, but a philosopher upon the subject of tariff duties, who has published a great many works since and has been a teacher, and I have seen him behind those who have endeavored to enforce what goes at the present day by the name of tariff reform, which is, as far as it does go, in the line of free trade, and is so admitted by such men as he. He is not a politician, but simply a man speculating upon this subject and laying down theories which I am sorry to see that politicians are following.

He came before the committee and urged upon the committee at that time a large reduction in the duties upon silk fabrics, on the ground that the idea of introducing that manufacture into this country was preposterous; it never could be done, and it was an idle waste of effort and of money to undertake it. It was adopted as a theory by our friends of the same political party as our friends on the other side of this Chamber, at that time; and there was a very strong effort made before that committee to reduce the duty upon silk fabrics on the ground that inasmuch as silk could not be introduced as a manufacture into this country it was a useless tax upon the consumer, which would be true if the premises were true.

The committee resisted that effort, and what has been the result? The census of 1880 disclosed first this interesting fact, that under that protective tariff, which was enacted in 1872, the cost to the consumer had then fallen 34 per cent. That was the first item. The next was that the manufacture of silk fabrics in this country had risen to a production of $41,000,000 annually.

Mr. GRAY. In 1872?

Mr. DAWES. In 1880 by the census. I am speaking of the census.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts pardon me, for I am interested in his statement? I understand that in 1872, at the time of the general revision of the tariff, a philosopher came before the Ways and Means Committee and urged that the duty be lowered upon silk manufactures, for the reason that none existed in this country or could be prosecuted.

Mr. DAWES. I did not state it exactly that none existed, but that all efforts to introduce it as a successful manufacture in this country had failed and would fail; and therefore it was that class of manufactures we ought to abandon the effort to introduce into this country; and hence a duty upon them would necessarily be a tax upon the consumer.

Mr. GRAY. If my friend will pardon me, I understand him to say that, as a consequence of this idea originated by the philosopher in question, the tax was lowered, the tariff was lowered in 1872.

Mr. DAWES. No; it was his effort to get it lowered, and it was resisted by the committee in 1872.

Mr. GRAY. Was not the tax lowered in 1872?

Mr. DAWES. I do not think it was.

Mr. GRAY. My impression was that it was lowered, and I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say it was lowered in consequence of this.

Mr. DAWES. I do not say so, because my impression is that it was not. The argument was that silk should be left free like those products of foreign countries that we could not profitably introduce into this country. My impression is that under the act of 1872 the same tariff that existed before on manufactures of silk was continued, but I am not entirely positive. Under the operations of the tariff as it was maintained in 1872 the cost of the fabric had in 1880 become reduced 34 per cent., the manufacture had increased to an annual product of $41,000,000, and capital to the amount of $19,000,000 had become invested, and it had given employment to thirty-four thousand one hundred and odd men, women, and children in this country, paying them an annual amount in wages of $9,000,000. Since 1880 all these things have increased in an immense ratio. The annual product has very largely increased. The capital invested has likewise very largely increased, and the number of hands employed has more than doubled, and the wages paid are very much larger than before, and the cost to the consumer is to-day less than it was in 1880.

So the argument that was presented to the committee in 1872, and which it is a great pity was not recorded, practically failed. It was the argument of a philosopher and honest man, although his dealing with statistics sometimes reminds me of those men who deal in assorting statistics so often here in this Senate Chamber. Nevertheless what he stated then he is repeating to-day in the face of these statistics right before him. If the committee in 1872 had followed his advice, which is urged this moment here on this floor, the whole attempt to manufacture silks in this country would have been necessarily abandoned, and the whole production relegated to foreign hands and foreign capital and foreign production, and the employment of these thousands of people in this country would have been at an end.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? I understood the Senator to say that there had been a large decrease in the price of silk in this country. I did not understand whether he said that had resulted from the tariff imposed or not.

Mr. DAWES. I thought I would abstain from drawing any inferences myself upon these statistics, and simply throw them out as a matter that anybody could draw such inferences from as he thought the statistics themselves would teach.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I would like to ask the Senator if in investigating this question he has ascertained what the relative price of domestic and foreign silks was in 1872, and whether there has been as great a decrease in the price of foreign silks as there has been in domestic silks in the same time?

Mr. DAWES. I have not investigated that in reference to this particular production, but I have no doubt that to some extent the foreign product has come down in cost. They are obliged to keep it down when it is produced here in this country; but you extinguish the production in this country and they are under no obligation to keep it down. They can set their own price in the foreign market for us and we are as helpless as children in the consumption of any product that is produced solely abroad, just as we are as helpless as children on any importation of anything produced abroad that can not be produced here, like tea and coffee and anything that can not be produced here, and we are dependent upon the foreign producer, and he knows that he can set his own price here. We are as helpless as children as to them, and so we should have been as to manufactures of silk.

There is another consequence which has arisen out of this adherence to that policy in 1872. We are beginning to produce the raw silk all about this country, and in the near future the question is whether we can not supply all our manufacturers with the raw silk, whether we shall not be producing the silk-worm and the food of the silk-worm here, and thus declare our independence in this regard of all foreign interference.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to insert, in paragraph 377, line 1623, after the word "description," the words "including knit goods."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "description," in line 1623, it is proposed to insert the words "including knit goods;" so as to make the paragraph read:

377. Laces and embroideries, neck-rufflings and ruchings, clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including knit goods, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, composed of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 60 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. Knit goods are undoubtedly included by the words which are used prior to the word "description," but so that there shall be no possibility of any misunderstanding about it the committee thought the insertion of the words I have offered should be made.

Mr. VEST. Would not that be included in the basket clause, 376?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; in the phrase "articles of wearing apparel of every description."

Mr. VEST. "Or manufactures composed of silk or of which silk is a component material of chief value."

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; all these articles are articles of silk or of which silk is the chief component material.

Mr. VEST. On such articles I believe the present rate is 50 per cent. ad valorem, and this makes it 60 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. But all articles of knit goods are articles of wearing apparel of some description; and that it should be put beyond the possibility of any misapprehension of the meaning of the committee those words should be inserted.

Mr. VEST. It makes a difference of 10 per cent. in the duty; that is all. If it comes under the basket clause it will be 50 per cent., and if put in here it will be 60 per cent.

Mr. President, I listened with a great deal of interest to the reminiscences of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], and I always hear him with pleasure; but what he said seems to me not to throw any light on the present situation and does not touch the matter at issue now before the Senate. What should have been done with any particular manufacture in 1872 presents a very different question from what should be done in 1889. When our fathers constructed the first tariff law, in the very caption of it they said it was an act to raise revenue for the support of the Government and protect American manufactures. Mr. Clay, the father of the American system, declared first that three years would be enough to put the infant industries of this country on their feet, and afterwards he enlarged it to nine years. That declaration was made in 1824, and here we are in 1889 with an average ad valorem duty of 47 per cent. upon imports into the United States, and the cry is still, like that of the daughter of the horse-leech, give, give, give to the manufacturers.

My friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] says they do not think they have made an increase except in regard to this $461,000 to which I have alluded in paragraph 377—that with that exception there has been no material increase in the schedule. Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate to what appears all through this bill—that increases have been made with reference to importations, which clearly demonstrates the truth of my statement that the manufacturers have dictated their increases. Take this silk schedule, and the first large importation we strike is—

375. Velvets, plushes, or other pile fabrics in the piece (including ribbons), not otherwise specially provided for in this act.

Of this the importation is $6,343,086.33 in value. The present duty is 50 per cent. ad valorem. The Mills bill makes no change. The Senate bill puts the first item at $1 a pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem. The next is $1.50 a pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem; and the next at $3.50 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem. Does my friend from Rhode Island say that this is not an increase?

Mr. ALDRICH. I say it is not in the opinion of the committee.

Mr. VEST. That $3.50 a pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem is no increase over 50 per cent. ad valorem?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not upon the higher class of goods which that would cover.

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, I do not know; but the experts report to me that that is a very large increase upon any basis of importations.

Now we take paragraph 377, which is laces, embroideries, etc. The importation is $4,617,933, and the Senator admits that there is an increase of duty there of $461,000, or nearly half a million dollars.

Take the largest increase in the whole schedule, in paragraph 373:

Thrown silk, not more advanced than singles, tram, organzine, sewing-silk, twist, floss, spun silk, and silk threads or yarns of every description.

There is the largest importation in the whole list, an importation of over $15,000,000. The present duty is 50 per cent. ad valorem. There is no change in the Mills bill, and under the Senate substitute it is 75 cents a pound and 15 per cent., which, according to my calculation, is an increase on the 50 per cent. ad valorem duty.

So I think I am authorized in stating that the duties have been increased in this schedule, and all through the whole bill. In other words, the point to which my friends are steadily inclining—not inclining, but going—is to exclude foreign importations, and that is the end to which the Republican party in this country intends to go. They propose to put around this country a wall through which nothing can come that will compete with the manufacturers, and when the manufacturers are to be satisfied passes the imagination of mortal man.

We had an example of that yesterday. My conservative friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was forced to admit that this whole thing was a scramble when, as the RECORD this morning shows, he stated here that men of the highest character in this country could not resist the temptation to consult their own personal greed, and would tax other importations or other branches of industry in order to increase their own profits.

So it goes from schedule to schedule and item to item. It is a desperate contest between men who propose to build up enormous fortunes at the expense of the consumers. That is the whole of it; and to show that to the American people is my highest political ambition.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I desire to answer more fully the interrogatory put to me by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I was not able at the moment to speak with confidence as to whether the duty on silk fabrics was or was not reduced in 1872. My friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has the record, and he finds that there was no reduction in 1872 nor was there in 1870. Neither in the tariff of 1870 nor in that of 1872 was there any reduction upon silk fabrics. That was my impression when I made the statement.

Mr. GRAY. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that there had been a reduction, and that was the reason I put the question.

Mr. DAWES. I did not mean to say it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to say that the schedule now under consideration was prepared by the manufacturers for their own benefit, and that it would result in a substantial increase of the present duty.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon. I do not think I used the words "by the manufacturers." I know who prepared the schedule, but I believe that it was made to meet the demands of the manufacturers, and I think they went before the committee and instigated these changes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I will say that this schedule, in almost exactly the words in which it is found in this bill, was prepared by the Treasury experts, and, so far as I know, without any connection or consultation with the manufacturers except such as were found. They probably consulted the memorial and the draught of an act which the manufacturers submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to ask him whether the Secretary of the Treasury recommended these changes, or was it the Treasury experts?

Mr. ALDRICH. The present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fairchild, in a communication which I hold in my hand and which I will not stop to have read because it is quite lengthy—a communication addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives—submitted a schedule fixing the rates of duty on manufactures of silk which is almost in identical terms with that which is incorporated in the Senate bill. That is where it came from. That was the origin of this schedule, and it was the purpose of the Treasury Department and the purpose of the Committee on Finance that there should be no substantial increase in the present rates, but that we should substitute specific and compound duties in place of the present ad valorem rates for the purpose of a more honest and efficient administration of the law.

Now, the Senator says that it is obvious upon the face of it that this is an increase, that this bill does provide an increase over the present law, and he cites as conclusive evidence of that fact that upon silk-velvet plushes containing 50 per cent. in weight of silk, we have imposed a duty of $3.50 a pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem. All these silk plushes must contain more than 50 per cent. of silk. They may contain 90 or 95 or 100 per cent. of silk, and most of them do contain a very large percentage. At a valuation of $10 a pound, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, the duty fixed by this bill would be exactly equivalent to 50 per cent. ad valorem—$3.50 a pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem. On all goods valued at more than $10 a pound—and there are many of this character—it would be less than 50 per cent.

"Raw silk not further advanced or partially manufactured from cocoons or from waste silk" is valued, according to the Treasury's statement, at $2.62 per pound in a comparatively raw state, and the Senator, if he is at all conversant with the manufacture of silk, must be aware that $10 a pound for these very fine manufactures of silk is a comparatively low price. We had a manufacturer of certain articles of silk before the committee who asked to have a specific duty of $17 a pound levied upon the article of silk which he manufactured for sale.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. VANCE. Let the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 1623, after the word "description," it is proposed to insert "including knit goods;" so that the paragraph will read:

377. Laces and embroideries, neck-rufflings and ruchings, clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including knit goods, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, composed of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 60 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

378. All manufactures of silk, of which silk is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

SCHEDULE M.—BOOKS, PAPERS, ETC.

379. Books, including blank-books of all kinds, pamphlets, and engravings, bound or unbound, photographs, etchings, maps, charts, and all printed matter not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

380. Paper envelopes, 25 cents per thousand.

381. Manufactures of paper, or of which paper is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. In line 1640 I move to strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen;" so as to restore this duty to the present law and avoid a useless increase of the revenue to the extent of some $50,000.

The SECRETARY. In line 1640, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

Manufactures of paper, or of which paper is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but by arrangement that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who is absent, has been transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who is also absent. I vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore can not vote.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT]. If he were here, I should vote "nay." I make this announcement for the day or until that Senator returns.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will transfer the pair that I have with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Voorhees,
Berry,	Eustis,	Payne,	Walthall,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Gray,	Turpie,
Coke,	Hampton,	Vance,

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Davis,	Hiscock,	Stewart,
Brown,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Dolph,	Paddock,	Teller,
Chace	Frye,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Hale,	Platt,

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	George,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Harris,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Call,	Hearst,	Pasco,	Spooner,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Stanford,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Pugh,	Vest.
Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the substitute.

The Secretary read as follows:

382. Papers known commercially as surface-coated papers, and manufactures thereof, card-boards, albumenized and sensitized papers, lithographic prints from either stone or zinc, bound or unbound (except illustrations in printed books), and all articles produced either in whole or in part by lithographic process, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. In line 1646, I move to strike out "35" and insert "15;" so as to read "15 per cent." This is an increase of over 250 per cent. on the present duty, for which I see no earthly reason except to oblige the manufacturers.

Mr. ALLISON. Would the Senator make a duty lower than the duty on paper itself?

Mr. VANCE. I think I am doing my duty sufficiently to the manufacturers when I follow the existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

Mr. VANCE. I will modify it so as to say "25 per cent." instead of "15 per cent."

The SECRETARY. In line 1646, it is proposed to strike out "35" and insert "25;" so as to read: "25 per cent."

Mr. VANCE. That will obviate the objection of the Senator from Iowa, and will enable him to vote against it as usual.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but by an arrangement with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] I have transferred the pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I ask that the pair between the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] may stand during the day without further announcement. I vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. FARWELL. I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. HISCOCK. Is the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He is not recorded.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I announce now for the day that I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. PAYNE (after having voted in the affirmative). Has my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator's colleague has not voted.

Mr. PAYNE. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with him.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] is recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He is not recorded.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I then withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Gray,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Coke,	Hampton,	Vance,
Brown,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Walthall.
Butler,	Faulkner,	Reagan,

NAYS—20.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hale,	Platt,
Allison,	Dawes,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Chace,	Evarts,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Frye,	Palmer,	Teller.

ABSENT—41.

Beck,	George,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Blair,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Blodgett,	Harris,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Bowen,	Hearst,	Payne,	Vest,
Call,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Daniel,	Ingalls,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.
Davis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Farwell,	Kenna,	Sabin,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll of Senators.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hiscock,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Berry,	Farwell,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Frye,	Paddock,	Teller,
Chace,	George,	Payne,	Vance,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Platt,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hale,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Cullom,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Wilson, of Iowa.
Davis,	Hawley,	Riddleberger,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will again call the roll on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to call the attention of Senators on the other side to the fact that I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], and if any Senator on the other side who is paired with an absent Democrat wishes to do so, the pairs can be exchanged so as to help to keep up a quorum.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is absent on a conference committee, and is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I give notice for the day that I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] with a right to vote to make a quorum. As there seems to be a lack of a quorum, I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EVARTS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] who is absent, and I recall my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	Coke,	Hampton,	Vance,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Payne,	Vest,
Brown,	Eustis,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Gray,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Allison,	Dolph,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Frye,	Platt,	Teller,
Chace,	Hale,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Mitchell,	Sherman,

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Quay,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Blair,	George,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Call,	Harris,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Daniel,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Morrill,	Walthall.
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Pasco.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the substitute.

The Secretary read as follows:

383. Paper-hangings and paper for screens or fire-boards, writing-paper, drawing-paper, filtering-paper, letter-press-copying paper, and all other paper not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. Before we proceed further, I desire to offer an amendment to paragraph 379. I move to insert at the end of line 1636 the following proviso:

Provided, That Bibles printed in any language shall be admitted free of duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina to explain why it is that he wishes to make this amendment. As I understand, Bibles are printed now in this country in a number of different languages by the American Bible Society and distributed free of charge to any person who applies. I suppose there must be some object for the amendment. I have a statement, which I sent to the committee-room for, upon this subject, showing that Bibles are practically free now, not only free of duty, but free of cost in our own country.

Mr. VANCE. It is provided in the free-list of this bill that "books and pamphlets printed exclusively in languages other than English" shall be admitted free of duty. That would admit German Bibles, French Bibles, etc., for the use of our citizens who speak those tongues, but would exclude the common English Bible. The greatest Bible society in the world is the British and Foreign Bible Society, which distributes gratuitously more copies of the Scriptures than any other, I suppose, in the world, especially in the English language, and all portions of our country are always glad to receive donations of that kind. The bill as it stands would exclude that English Bible and the publications of that great society.

Mr. ALDRICH. As the American Bible Society distributes Bibles in America gratuitously, what practical result does the Senator expect by putting Bibles upon the free-list? Does he think that the English Bible Society will pay people to take Bibles on this side?

Mr. VANCE. I do not see exactly why our protectionist friends want a tax imposed even upon the Word of God to encourage American industry in this world. It might result in the encouragement of an industry in the next world that would perhaps be regretted by a great many members of the protection party when it is too late to have a revision of the duties. It seems to me that this is carrying the doctrine of protection not only into the ground but under the ground and into the final resort of all protectionist people. [Laughter.]

I hope that the Word of God in all tongues will be admitted free. I have no doubt that a careful perusal of it would militate somewhat against the doctrines of these gentlemen, and would tend to a reduction of duties in this world, but still I hope for the sake of humanity and morality that this amendment will be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. I do not see him in the Chamber.

Mr. GEORGE. He is absent on conference-committee work.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FARWELL. I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were here, I should vote in the negative.

Mr. PAYNE. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], reserving the right to vote in order to make a quorum. As there is no quorum, I will vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Berry,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Gray,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Hampton,	Vance,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hiscock,	Plumb,
Allison,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Chace,	Frye,	Paddock,	Teller.
Chandler,	Hale,	Palmer,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt,

ABSENT—36.

Beck,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Blair,	George,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Blodgett,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Stewart,
Brown,	Harris,	Payne,	Stockbridge,
Call,	Hearst,	Pugh,	Turpie,
Daniel,	Ingalls,	Quay,	Walthall.
Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the substitute will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

384. Printing-paper, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. In line 1653 I move to strike out "15" and insert "12;" so as to read:

Printing-paper, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively, 12 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). If I were not paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] I should vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], who is absent from the Chamber in the service of the Senate. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I should vote "yea" if I were not paired.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Arkansas is not recorded.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with him.

Mr. BATE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Morgan,	Vest,
Butler,	Eustis,	Reagan,	Wilson, of Md.
Cockrell,	Faulkner,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Hampton,	Vance,

NAYS—21.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Allison,	Dolph,	Paddock,	Teller,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chace,	Frye,	Platt,
Chandler,	Hale,	Plumb,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—41.

Beck,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Berry,	George,	Kenna,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Blair,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Blodgett,	Gray,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Bowen,	Harris,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Brown,	Hearst,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hiscock,	Pugh,	Walthall.
Daniel,	Hoar,	Quay,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Ransom,
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote disclosing the want of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Allison,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Bate,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Berry,	Evarts,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Palmer,	Teller,
Butler,	Frye,	Payne,	Vance,
Chandler,	George,	Platt,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Coke,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Daniel,	Hiscock,	Saulsbury,
Davis,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum being present, the Secretary will again call the roll on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. ALDRICH. I appeal to the Senator from Missouri to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VEST. I wish to put the vote on record.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate has voted once.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire again to call the attention of Senators on the other side to the fact that I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. I am present here and prepared to vote, and I am very willing, in order to keep up a quorum, which seems very difficult to do, if any Senator on that side is paired with an absent Democrat, to make a transfer of pairs so as to allow us both to vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Mississippi how it would do to exchange for the day the pair of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], so that the Senator from Indiana would stand paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]?

Mr. GEORGE. Both the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] are absent. That exchange will do.

Mr. ALLISON. That will allow the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] to vote.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. I have no special desire to vote; but I dislike to be here and not vote, and thus break a quorum.

Mr. VEST. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, as I have no wish to delay the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. We have had one vote on the same subject.

Mr. VEST. Yes; I withdraw the call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Missouri to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the call will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which will be again read for information.

The SECRETARY. In line 1653, it is proposed to strike out "15" and insert "12;" so as to read:

Printing-paper, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively, 12 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

385. Paper, sized or glued, suitable only for printing-paper, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

386. Sheathing-paper, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

387. Playing-cards, 50 cents per pack.

388. Pulp, dried, for paper-maker's use, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

SCHEDULE N.—SUNDRIES.

389. Brushes, and brooms of all kinds, including feather dusters, 30 per cent. ad valorem; broom-corn, $4 per ton.

Mr. VEST. In line 1662, in paragraph 389, before the words "per cent.," I move to strike out "30" and insert "20;" and if the Senator from Iowa is willing, I will make two motions in one, and in line 1663 move to strike out "$4 per ton" and insert the word "free."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the two amendments will be considered as one. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1662 it is proposed to strike out "30" and insert "20," and in line 1663, to strike out "$4 per ton" and insert "free;" so as to read:

389. Brushes, and brooms of all kinds, including feather dusters, 20 per cent. ad valorem; broom-corn, free.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, here is an article of universal consumption. It is no luxury, but an article that goes into every home and workshop and every place of business throughout the entire country. The present rate of duty on brooms is 25 per cent. ad valorem. That rate is increased to 30 per cent. ad valorem, which is an increase of 5 per cent. upon brooms over the existing law, leaving the duty upon brushes at the same rate.

In 1880 the census report showed that of brooms and brushes there were produced in the United States $10,560,855 worth, the labor cost in the production of which was 23 per cent. The table of exports from the United States for 1887 shows that of brooms and brushes we exported in 1887 $172,883 worth and in 1888 $164,483 worth. Of broom-corn we exported in 1887 $170,534 worth and in 1888 $160,651 worth, being a decrease in the export of broom-corn from 1887 to 1888 of $9,883 and in brooms and brushes of $8,450, whilst the product in the United States even in 1880 was over $10,000,000 worth.

This increase in duty can not certainly be required. The domestic manufacturers seem to control the market almost absolutely at the present rate of duty.

But aside from that, if there is any principle in regard to this tariff tax to which I am devoted it is to give us free material. I believe that what the manufacturers need to-day is freer markets. I believe the time is rapidly coming in this country when the greatest curse that will fall upon domestic manufacturers and the whole people will be the intense competition which comes from excluding all foreign importations and shutting the products of American labor out of foreign markets.

Here is broom-corn. I come from a Western State, one of the largest agricultural States in the Union. If any people in the world are interested in the production of broom-corn it is the people of Missouri, but I stand here to-day and plead for the introduction of that raw material free. And why? Because raw material free means an increase in the manufacture, and the cheap manufacture by the American manufacturer, and that means increased cheapness to the American consumer.

Yet our friends upon the other side of the Chamber, whilst they are the especial friends per se of the domestic manufacturers, still handicap them at every turn with an increased cost upon the raw material, of which they are the consumers.

I move, therefore, to reduce the duty to what it is in the existing law, striking off the 5 per cent. put upon brooms, and to give the American manufacturer the free raw material, broom-corn, in order that he may successfully compete with the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri says he moves to reduce the duty to what it is in the existing law. The present duty upon brushes is 30 per cent. ad valorem, which is the same rate fixed by the Senate bill in the paragraph now under consideration.

Mr. VEST. On brooms.

Mr. ALDRICH. On brushes.

Mr. VEST. But I say on brooms you increase the duty.

Mr. ALDRICH. We increase the duty on brooms 5 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. That is what I said.

Mr. ALDRICH. The purpose of the committee was to make a uniform rate on both brushes and brooms, because at the custom-house it is very difficult to draw the line between brushes and brooms. There are many kinds of brushes made from broom-corn which are in a certain sense brooms, and vice versa, and it is very difficult to distinguish between them. There should be a uniform rate upon the two articles, and as the duty upon brushes can not be reduced without injury to American manufactures, the committee have placed the duty on both brushes and brooms at the same rate.

I say the present duty on brushes is 30 per cent. ad valorem, and notwithstanding that duty, brushes to the value of $557,000, or more than half a million dollars, were imported in 1887. The total amount of brooms imported was only $4,000 in value, upon which $1,000 was collected.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. What does he say about the importations of brooms and brushes?

Mr. ALDRICH. I say that in 1887 there were brushes valued at $557,347.54 imported.

Mr. VEST. I have before me the official table sent to me from the Treasury Department.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have before me the official table sent from the Treasury Department, which shows what I state.

Mr. VEST. There is a discrepancy between them.

Mr. ALDRICH. There can not be any discrepancy, if the Senator will look carefully. There were only $4,000 worth of brooms imported. We have almost the entire American market, and will continue to have it whatever rate of duty there is. We have a considerable portion of the brush trade of the country, but there is a large number of expensive brushes, toilet and other brushes, which are now imported. If the duty should be reduced to 20 per cent. ad valorem the brush industry of this country would be destroyed. The brush manufacturers are anxious to secure an advance over the present rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem. I trust the Senate will not follow the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I have two tables here, one of exports and one of imports, and my argument is much stronger than I thought it was when I made it. This is an export table, which accounts for what I thought to be a discrepancy, and is not a table of imports. I find now that we not only supply the home market in brooms and brushes, but we exported, in 1887, $172,183 worth, and in 1888, $164,433 worth. Over and above the consumption here at home, we send those articles abroad, and yet there is this increased duty proposed. The argument that I wanted to make is strengthened by the fact of these exports.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Missouri must be aware, if he is familiar with the subject, that the brooms exported are the coarser kind of brooms and brushes made from broom-corn. The imports are tooth and other toilet brushes, and it is the purpose of the committee to retain the duty with the hope that the American manufacturers may supply hereafter a considerable portion of the market which is now held by foreigners. We put bristles upon the free-list and retain the present duty on brushes with the hope that that industry might be further developed in this country. There are no exportations of this class of brushes, but very large importations.

Mr. VEST. Then the Senator from Rhode Island in forming this paragraph ought to have made some sort of distinction between the two articles and between the material that is used in them. He has increased the duty upon all sorts of brooms 5 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, on brooms, but we left the duty on brushes where it is.

Mr. VEST. I understand that; but you have increased the duty 5 per cent. on brooms, and you put a duty of $4 a ton upon the raw material.

Mr. ALDRICH. The present duty is 10 per cent. ad valorem. So far as the information of the committee went, it was that $4 per ton is less than 10 per cent. ad valorem. We were told that broom-corn is worth about $60 a ton.

Mr. VEST. It is hardly worth that now.

Mr. ALDRICH. So instead of increasing the duty on broom-corn we have reduced it.

Mr. VEST. Unquestionably there is an increase of 5 per cent. on brooms. I understand the Senator to say that the exports of this country are made principally out of the coarser raw material or broom-corn.

Mr. ALDRICH. I say to the Senator very frankly that the increase of duty of 5 per cent. on brooms will not affect either the importations or the exportations. There are no importations at present, and there will be none on that rate.

Mr. VEST. Then why is there necessity for putting on this increased duty when there is a surplus in the Treasury?

Mr. ALDRICH. It does not affect the surplus one way or the other.

Mr. VEST. Then it ought to be left alone.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon. It is done for the sake of uniformity of classification, because the custom-house officers tell us they can not distinguish in many cases between what are brushes and what are brooms.

Mr. VEST. Then the Senators who framed this bill ought not to have adopted what they call this vicious system of ad valorem duties. It is based on valuations, and these they denounce all the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Daniel,	Payne,	Vance,
Berry,	Eustis,	Pugh,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Allison,	Dolph,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Frye,	Platt,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hale,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Sherman,

ABSENT—36.

Beck,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Pasco,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Quay,
Blair,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	George,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Brown,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Butler,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Call,	Harris,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Hearst,	Paddock,	Walthall.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

390. Button forms: Lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, or other manufactures of cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, or form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for buttons exclusively, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the words "silk twist," in line 1664. It does not belong to this paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1664 it is proposed to strike out the words "silk twist."

Mr. ALLISON. They are there by inadvertence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

391. Card-clothing.—Manufactured from tempered steel wire, 45 cents per square foot; all other, 25 cents per square foot.

Mr. VANCE. I ask that that paragraph be passed over until some time later in the day, as there are some records I wish to have here, and I have sent for them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

The Secretary read as follows:

392. Chronometers, box or ship's, and parts thereof, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

393. Coal, bituminous, and shale, 75 cents per ton of 28 bushels, 80 pounds to the bushel.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out all of paragraph 393, after the word "shale," in line 1673, and to insert "free."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say a few words on this subject, which is a most important one. I make this motion upon my own responsibility and upon personal convictions as to what is right. I do not make it as a politician or with a view to any local or sectional effect. I believe that coal ought to be on the free-list, as well as lumber, and for that reason I make this motion.

Now, sir, in the testimony of Charles F. Mayer before a committee of the House of Representatives on March 5, 1886, I find the following interesting history of the coal duty:

In 1824 a duty was imposed equivalent to $1.68 per ton; the act of 1842 placed it at $1.75 per ton; this rate was continued until 1846, when it was changed to an ad valorem duty of 30 per cent., which, by a falling scale provided by law, fell, in 1862, to 24 per cent. It was then, in 1862, changed to $1 per ton; in 1865 it was raised to $1.10 per ton; in 1866 it was raised to $1.25 per ton, at which it continued until 1873, when it was fixed at the now existing duty of 75 cents per ton.

The single exception to this general policy of the Government, apart from the special exception in the act of 3d March, 1883, was made in coals from the British provinces, which were admitted duty free by the provisions of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, and so continued until the termination of that treaty in 1866.

This exception, it is claimed, was unfairly obtained by parties interested in provincial mines; but be that as it may, the owners of provincial mines, aided vigorously by New England parties who had become interested in that region, have persistently worked, ever since the termination of that treaty, to get coal placed upon the free-list.

The special (and extraordinary) exemption to which I refer was that provision in the act of 3d March, 1883, by which "a drawback of 75 cents should be allowed on all bituminous coal imported into the United States, which is afterward used for fuel on board vessels propelled by steam which are engaged in the coasting trade of the United States or in the trade with foreign countries."

So that the people of the United States who are not engaged in the coasting trade are compelled under existing law to pay this duty of 75 cents on the ton to that monopoly and also to vessels in the foreign trade, of which there are very few. There is a drawback allowed of 75 cents to these ship-owners, or in other words, as to them, coal is put on the free-list.

If that sort of privilege is given to the owners of vessels either in the foreign trade or the coasting trade, it ought to be given to all the people of the United States. No such discrimination should be made. I have heard my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] in the most eloquent and vehement terms eulogize the coasting trade, and I have heard him state here the marvelous increase of that trade, and that to-day we have a coasting trade furnishing the most magnificent domestic marine on the face of the earth. Is that an infant industry? Is that entitled to this drawback of 75 cents, or in other words, free coal? Why is it?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no drawback provided for in this bill.

Mr. VEST. I know there is not in this bill, but it is in the existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. It will not be after this bill passes.

Mr. VEST. There is no repeal of it specifically.

Mr. ALLISON. It is left out entirely.

Mr. VEST. I do not know what the effect of leaving it out will be. Does the committee understand that that is a repeal of it?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly. This is a substitute for the provisions as to coal in the existing law.

Mr. VEST. Then I submit to the committee that the safe way would be to repeal that clause specifically, and not leave it in a nebulous and uncertain condition.

But outside of this fact, granting that the committee intend to repeal that drawback as it exists now on the statute-book, I say that we should have free coal and we should have free lumber. Coal is an article used in manufacturing; it is an article used in the warming of dwelling-houses and places of business; it is an absolute necessity; and why should there be a tax upon it, when we have throughout this country enormous deposits of bituminous coal? Are we not able to compete with foreign countries in that article? What article is there, if not this, in which the people of the United States are able to stand independent and without any artificial aid? But I suppose we shall be met with the statement that this is done in the interest of American labor, that the coal-miners of Pennsylvania should have this duty.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. If the Senator wishes to ask me a question, I will yield, but I am not through yet with my remarks.

Mr. FAULKNER. I thought the Senator had concluded, and I wished to make some remarks on the subject.

Mr. FRYE. Not in the same line, however.

Mr. VEST. I have stated my position.

Mr. President, in regard to the condition of the labor engaged in taking out bituminous coal in the United States, I want to read from the highest protective authority, Mr. John Jarrett, the president of the Amalgamated Association, as I believe it is called, of Iron and Steel Workers, a gentleman, I believe, who went West a few years ago for the purpose of securing the defeat of Col. William R. Morrison, and about whom a great deal was said in the papers just after that election.

Mr. FRYE. And he succeeded.

Mr. VEST. Yes, I am ashamed to say, he succeeded with the money of the manufacturers in debauching that district, which this year elected a Democrat.

Mr. CULLOM. Oh, no.

Mr. VEST. Morrison's district, in Illinois, opposite to Missouri. Mr. John Jarrett, this gentleman from whom I intend to read, was the emissary, the agent, of the protected interests, and he boasted of it. He went into that district with money and used it to defeat Colonel Morrison, as brave and gallant a man as ever lived anywhere on any question at any time, and this year the people of that district reversed that verdict.

Mr. CULLOM. So far as the latter statement is concerned, I beg to say that is a question yet to be settled. It may turn out on investigation that the gentleman who was elected two years ago was elected again this fall.

Mr. VEST. I know there is a contest, and wherever there is a margin inside of 300 votes everybody is going to contest, relying on the Republican majority in the next House.

Mr. CULLOM. We are relying on the merits of the case; and the gentleman who has the certificate only has it by 16 majority on the face of the returns.

Mr. VEST. If he had been a Republican that would have been ample.

Mr. CULLOM. I may be allowed to say that so far as the conduct of Mr. Jarrett is concerned, and the statement that there was a vast amount of money spent there two years ago, it is also very greatly exaggerated.

Mr. VEST. I do not suppose my friend from Illinois—we are close neighbors, and both of us know something about that election—will deny my statement that Mr. Jarrett was there.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. Jarrett was there, as I understand.

Mr. VEST. A citizen of Pennsylvania, the president of this association, and he admitted afterwards and boasted in the public prints that he went there to defeat Morrison, and I can produce his statement here.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. HISCOCK. Allow me to say that the State of New York this fall was stumped by a great many distinguished gentlemen from other States, and it never has been supposed to be reprehensible for a gentleman to go from one State to another to make political speeches or render political service.

Mr. VEST. That is ingenious, but it is not ingenuous. When an orator goes into a State, when a man has a talent for stump speaking, we know he does not rely on money, but when Mr. Jarrett went there he did not rely on his oratorical abilities.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say that the Senator from Missouri entirely underestimates Mr. Jarrett. He is a very strong speaker.

Mr. VEST. I will end that discussion, if the Senator from New York pleases, with Mr. Jarrett's own statement.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say furthermore that the distinguished gentleman, the author of what is called the Mills bill, spent a good deal of his time in that district this year.

Mr. VEST. Yes; but nobody ever accused ROGER Q. MILLS of relying upon money. He has not got it, and never had it. He made his speeches everywhere boldly and frankly, and good ones, and he did not go, like Mr. Jarrett, representing an association and a lot of monopolists.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. Jarrett went there and visited specially the class of men to which he belongs, that is, the laboring class of that district, believing that he had influence with them, being one of them, and it turned out that he seems to have had some influence.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, the Senator from Missouri will allow me to interject one remark. The Senator from Missouri says that Colonel Morrison is a good man and a brave man, which I admit; but Colonel Morrison never had courage enough to incorporate a proposition to put coal on the free-list in any of the bills which he offered in the House of Representatives, and I congratulate the Senator from Missouri on his superior courage and bravery on this occasion.

Mr. VEST. It requires no courage on my part. My convictions are very sincere on this question. There is a great deal of coal in the State of Missouri, there is a great deal of lead, a great deal of iron; but my friends, without assuming for myself any extraordinary courage or political valor, will find me always fighting on the same line.

Mr. FRYE. The Republicans are getting thicker there.

Mr. VEST. Yes; but that makes no difference with me. That would be an argument if I were a time-server for mitigating what my friends on the other side call my free-trade tendencies, but I propose if the Republicans are increasing there to make my arguments a little stronger in the direction in which I am going now, and I intend, to use the language of a very distinguished Republican and soldier, to fight it out on this line if it takes ten summers instead of one.

But returning after this little political episode "to our mutton," I quote from Mr. Jarrett in his testimony before the Committee on Education and Labor, volume 1, page 1163, as to the condition of the coal miners in the United States. Our friends on the other side always wind up every Columbian oration with an appeal on behalf of the working people of this country, the factory operatives, the miners, and I want to give them now from Mr. Jarrett a little testimony as to the effect of this high tariff upon these people:

Q. Do you know anything about the condition of the workingmen in other trades than your own?

A. I have not given that subject one-tenth of the attention that I have given to the condition of the workers in my own trade.

Q. Do you know anything about the condition of the men who mine the iron?

A. I do, sir; did you say the coal-miners?

Q. The men who mine the iron and coal?

A. Well, coal mining in Pennsylvania, in my opinion, is a more important interest than ore mining, and the condition of the coal miners in the State of Pennsylvania is pitiable, miserable.

Q. How many of them do you think there are?

A. There must be at least 90,000 coal-miners in Pennsylvania.

Q. Do you mean heads of families or workers altogether?

A. I would assume that there would be among them about 60,000 heads of families.

Q. You say their condition is pitiable and miserable; how so, and how much so is it?

A. It is because the wages of coal-miners are too low. They are ill-paid. Then, too, they suffer from the truck system. Under that system they pay 100 per cent. more for what they buy than our people do. Then the houses they live in are extremely miserable. If I feel particularly for any branch of labor in this country it is the poor coal-miner. He risks his life day after day for a mere pittance. Every time he departs from the light of day he does not know whether he will ever see it again. And while in some branches it does not require much skill to be a miner, in others it does, and I think the coal-miner ought to be better paid, better clothed, better housed, and better fed than he is.

THE ENGLISH MINERS BETTER OFF.

Q. Have you been among those miners?

A. Yes, sir; and from my experience among the coal-miners in England I may say that they are really better cared for there than are the coal-miners in the United States. I do not say that the English miner gets as much money for his labor, but he is better cared for.

Q. Do you mean that he has more comfort during the year?

A. Yes, sir. The government there has taken care to make very stringent laws for the protection of the miners. The colliery laws control all the mines there, and I think it is the duty of our Government here to make equally strict laws to apply to that subject.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the Senator from Missouri understand that that description applies to all the men who are engaged in the mining of coal?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; it does not apply to the anthracite-coal miners particularly, but to all the coal-miners.

Mr. HISCOCK. Not the anthracite-coal miners?

Mr. VEST. Not particularly, but it applies to all of them.

Mr. HISCOCK. That testimony applies exclusively to the anthracite-coal miners.

Mr. VEST. No; it applies to all of them.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the Senator tell us how much bituminous coal is mined in Pennsylvania?

Mr. VEST. I have the statistics here in this testimony, but I have not referred to them lately, nor is it material.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is very material in describing the condition of the persons engaged in mining coal.

Mr. VEST. We know that both bituminous and anthracite coals are mined in Pennsylvania, and why does the Senator from New York seek to interject that sort of statement here now to make the impression that this applies to anthracite-coal miners alone? It applies to all, to the miners of bituminous coal and to the miners of anthracite coal; and if there is any industry in this country, I might be permitted to say if I followed him now in the line of his inquiry, that ought to have their miners in comfortable houses and in good condition, it is the anthracite-coal-mine owners. That makes the argument much worse against the protective-tariff system than if it applied to bituminous coal alone.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Missouri will allow me to suggest to him that the anthracite-coal miners have an absolute monopoly of that industry of anthracite coal. So far as I know it is confined to the State of Pennsylvania—there may be deposits in other parts of the country, but they have an exclusive monopoly by reason of the distribution of the bounties of nature.

Mr. VEST. That is why I stated that in the coal business, if there is any branch of it which ought to pay large wages and make their miners comfortable, it is the anthracite-coal-mine owners; and if the Senator from New York says that this testimony applies to them, so much the worse for them.

Mr. HISCOCK. What has the tariff to do with it in the case of anthracite coal? There is no tariff on anthracite coal. There is free trade in that.

Mr. VEST. I supposed, and I have heard that stated here over and over again, that the tariff system applied to all the people of this country.

Mr. HISCOCK. This illustrates your doctrine certainly. Anthracite coal is on the free-list.

Mr. VEST. I supposed from what I had learned that the blessings of the tariff descended, like the rains of heaven, upon the just and unjust alike.

Mr. HISCOCK. It does upon everything where protection is needed; and where it is needed, there we have its benefits.

Mr. VEST. I am obliged to the Senator from New York. That is the whole of this question. I have said all the time that it applies only to these protected people, to the manufacturers; but I have been told here over and over, "Oh, no; it applies to the entire population of the country; it is like the broad canopy of heaven, which covers us all and is over us all." Now, the Senator from New York says it only applies where protection is needed. Of course that is the whole truth, and I have been destroying my health here trying to make the Senator from New York believe it. [Laughter.]

We have heard a great deal about the horrible condition of the English miner and the decrease of wages in free-trade England. I have before me a statement from the Philadelphia Bulletin of December 12, 1888—that is pretty good protection authority—which gives the wages paid to the coal-miners in England, who, Mr. Jarrett says, are in a better condition than they are under the high tariff in the United States. We have heard continually that wages are going down in all the different industries in Great Britain and that free trade is murdering the industrial system of that kingdom. Here is what the Bulletin says:

WAGES OF COAL-MINERS IN ENGLAND.

The London Colliery Guardian, for November 23, 1888, publishes an elaborate tabulated statistical statement illustrative of a paper on "The Coal Trade," which was recently prepared and read by Mr. John Knowles before the Manchester Geological Survey. Among the tables is the following, which gives the average weekly wages paid to each employé in the Manchester district from 1852 to 1887:

Mr. Jarrett says their condition is a great deal better than that of the American coal-miners. One would suppose from the excitement on the other side of the Chamber that it requires a great deal of courage to move to take the duty off coal. Why, Mr. President, I think Senators are mistaken. That proposition has been several times advanced before the people of the United States and received the support of the most eminent Republicans, many of whom are in this body now.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator tell me why it is not in the House bill as it came to us?

Mr. VEST. I am taking care of the interests of the people of this country in my own way. I am not answering for the motives of other people or for what other people do. I have not consulted the committee of the other House or the members of the other House, and I do not propose to do so. The only people I am responsible to are those of Missouri and of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I supposed the Senator had some information on that subject.

Mr. VEST. Not the slightest. I was not in consultation with those gentlemen when they framed that bill, and I have never been influenced by its provisions. I would go below the duties in that bill to-day if I could. I can not do it, but I am doing the best I can and cutting down wherever I see a chance to do so. The Mills bill is no criterion of political excellence for me. There are provisions in it that I never indorsed, still I have to take what is in it because I can not get anything better.

This monstrous proposition to put coal on the free-list has been before the Congress of the United States before. On March 26, 1872, Mr. Trumbull, of Illinois, moved to put coal on the free-list.

That from and after the passage of this act coal shall be placed on the free-list, and no further import duty shall be collected upon the same.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us have the yeas and nays upon that.

Mr. DAWES. Did the Senator say that the condition of things in 1872 was no criterion of the condition of things in 1888?

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, I am ready to meet the Senator from Massachusetts as to any change in conditions, if he can show me one single reason why coal to-day should have a duty upon it. If he can add one single reason to what existed in 1872 I shall very gladly hear him, but I can give him reasons why the duty should be taken off to-day that did not exist then.

Mr. DAWES. I only called to the Senator's mind the argument that was so potently made two years ago.

Mr. VEST. I should not be fit to hold a seat on this floor if I laid down a Procrustean rule on an economical question, and the Senator from Massachusetts knows it.

Mr. DAWES. I know the Senator's versatility.

Mr. VEST. We will see who has the versatility. I want to read the vote the Senator gave on coal. He will need all his versatility. I have the record, and if he has not performed some acrobatic feats that were worthy of the professors of that art on this coal question, I am mistaken. In 1872—

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 17, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Blair, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harlan, Hill, Kellogg, Kelly, Logan, Morton, Norwood, Pratt, Schurz, Spencer, Sumner, Trumbull, Wilson, and Windom—17.

A majority of whom were Republicans and voted to put coal on the free-list. In the nays there were 25.

Mr. DAWES. Who were the nays?

Mr. VEST. The nays were:

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Boreman, Caldwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Corbett, Cragin, Davis of West Virginia, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Maryland, Pomeroy, Pool, Rice, Robertson, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, West, and Wright—25.

That was in the Senate. On June 6, 1870, Mr. Ward, in the House of Representatives, made a motion to put coal on the free-list.

Mr. Ward submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means is hereby instructed at the earliest moment practicable to report a bill to this House to abolish the tariff on coal so as to secure that important article of fuel to the people free from all taxes."

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 112, nays 78, not voting 40; as follows:—

Now here comes the roll of honor, for it is a roll of honor with me—

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allison——

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that W. B. ALLISON, the Senator from Iowa now?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course it is our friend from Iowa, and he is in heart with us yet.

Ames, Atwood, Bailey, Banks, Beatty, Beck, Bennett, Biggs, Bird, Boyd, George M. Brooks, James Brooks, Buffinton, Burchard, Burr, Benjamin F. Butler, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Cook, Conner, Cowles, Cox, Crebs, Cullom——

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that the Senator from Illinois, S. M. CULLOM?

Mr. VEST. I think it is.

Davis, Dawes——

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that H. L. DAWES, the present Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VEST. Our friend from Massachusetts talks of versatility——

Mr. HISCOCK. How long ago was that?

Mr. VEST. The statute of lamentations has run, as my friend from North Carolina says. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. How many years ago?

Mr. VEST. Eighteen hundred and seventy-two.

Mr. HISCOCK. I want to put on record here a prophecy that in an equal number of years there will be an equal change in the views of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, "sufficient unto the day," etc. I will take my chances on the change, and I undertake to say in an equal number of years it will not concern me much.

Mr. DAWES. Does not the Senator see the force of what I said?

Mr. VEST. It seems that my friend from Massachusetts has felt something hurt him already.

Degener, Dixon, Dox, Dyer, Ela, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Finkelnburg, Fisher, Fitch, Fox, Griswold, Haight, Hale——

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that the Senator from Maine?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; the Senator from Maine. He belonged to the body-guard of the people then.

Hamilton, Harris, Hawley, Hay, Hays, Heflin, Hoar, Holman, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Alexander H. Jones, Judd, Kellogg, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Laflin, Lash, Lawrence, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Marshall, Mayham, McCormick, McCrary, McNeely, Jesse H. Moore, Morgan, Morrissey, Niblack, Orth, Packard, Paine, Peck, Peters, Pomeroy, Potter, Reeves, Sargent, Sherrod, Slocum, Joseph S. Smith, William J. Smith, Worthington C. Smith, William Smyth, Starkweather, Stevenson, Stoughton, Strong, Sweeney, Tanner, Twitchell, Tyner, Van Trump, Ward, William B. Washburn, Wheeler, Whitmore, Wilkinson, Williams, Eugene M. Wilson, Winans, Winchester, and Wood—112.

This resolution, Mr. President, was agreed to by the enormous vote of 112 in the affirmative to 78 in the negative, and not voting 40. One hundred and twelve to 78! So it did not require much political courage for me, with increased necessity for free coal, greater manufacturing, enormous increase of population, to move to put this article of prime necessity on the free-list. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, I feel a deep interest in the action which the Senate may take upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], as my State is so largely interested in the development of the coal industry, especially of bituminous coal. If we have any we have very little anthracite coal in the State of West Virginia, but I am satisfied that there is no area of country in the United States that surpasses West Virginia in its deposits of bituminous coal, the coal area of that State covering 16,000 square miles in a total area of 24,645 square miles embraced within her limits.

I would not oppose the amendment simply because I represent a State which is so deeply interested in the development of the coal-mining interest, but I feel confident that in opposing it I am sustained by the declaration of principles of the national Democratic party and the action of its representatives in formulating the Mills bill.

Mr. President, in that platform of principles the Democratic party announced to the people of this country that the reduction of revenue, which was an imperative necessity, should be made "in a spirit of fairness to all interests." That declaration was accepted by the people of the country as a leading and cardinal principle that should govern in the framing of the details of a bill for the reduction of the revenue.

With confidence in the good faith and honest purpose of that party the people decreed the overthrow of the Republican party by the election of a Democratic President and House of Representatives.

Coal was on the dutiable-list at $1.25 a ton. Subsequently and in the process of reduction of the rates of duty upon the various protected articles the duty on coal was reduced from $1.25 to 75 cents per ton; but even then, as the Senator from Missouri has stated, drawbacks were allowed in favor of all steam-vessels in the coasting trade, and therefore protection was only afforded to coal of American production as against foreign coal that was brought to the seaboard for the purpose of being utilized in the manufacture of articles in cities on the seaboard. That was the only protection practically given to coal under the provisions of the revenue laws.

In accordance with the principles of revenue reduction announced in the platform of 1884, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House formulated a bill at the last session, which was substantially indorsed by the national Democratic convention of last year, and on which the canvass was made before the people of my State. Every representative of that party maintained that the provisions of the Mills bill fairly and honestly gave expression to the policy of the party as announced in its platform, to wit, that the reductions therein made were prompted and controlled by "a spirit of fairness to all interests."

Congress having reduced the duty on coal 50 cents a ton, the framers of the House bill, recognizing the fact that a further reduction of duty upon that article would be a violation of that declaration, that reductions would be made "in a spirit of fairness to all interests," refused to interfere with the duty then existing on coal, leaving it at 75 cents on a ton.

I therefore claim, Mr. President, that in opposing the amendment of the Senator from Missouri I am standing on firm, solid, Democratic doctrine.

Mr. President, I would ask the Senator from Missouri whether he is not asking this side of the Senate to do that which is unjust and unfair in this respect? Who would be benefited, I will ask the Senator, by the abolition of this duty upon coal? Would any man in the interior who purchases a ton of coal be benefited one dollar by this reduction? No, sir; not one cent. The benefit, if his amendment should be adopted, would be received by whom? By the manufacturers on the seaboard, who would have the privilege of purchasing foreign coal, which could then compete with the coal from the interior, by purchasing it from vessels which brought it to the shores of this continent as ballast, or under very low freights, but the consumer of the interior would not be benefited one dollar or one cent by reduction in the price, and why? Simply because when you come to compete with American coal, and have to transport the foreign article which is landed upon our shores at the seaboard into the interior, the cost of transportation would cause the price to stand as it stands to-day; and the consumer, except upon the seaboard, would pay exactly the same price, because coal at the mine is now selling at a low price. Therefore there can be no benefit resulting to any one but the manufacturing interests on the seaboard in the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

That is the way it strikes me, and I am satisfied that would be the practical effect of this amendment, and I appreciate the attitude of those Senators representing the East, the New England States, and large manufacturing interests on the seaboard who are willing to stand by a fair and reasonable duty on coal, when they alone can be benefited by placing it on the free-list.

Mr. HALE. I desire to ask the Senator from West Virginia whether he knows of any movement that has originated upon the seaboard demanding that coal be put upon the free-list? In connection with that I may say that while it would undoubtedly of itself and standing alone be a benefit to the seaboard of New England, to the people whom I represent here, still I do not know of any movement that has been made in the direction of putting this article on the free-list. We believe that this and other articles are a part of a great general system that it is necessary to protect in the interest of American labor and American industry, and, as the Senator knows, we are making no raid upon coal.

Mr. FAULKNER. In answer to the Senator from Maine, I have no hesitation in saying that I have heard of no movement or any effort, either upon the part of the people of that locality or upon the part of their representatives in the Senate, in any way to reduce the duty upon coal as fixed under the present law and as set forth in the Senate substitute, which is the same duty as provided for in the Mills bill.

I was proceeding to state that there is an additional reason why those gentlemen should not do it in all fairness and in all justice to the great coal interest of the interior of the country. They are highly protected on all articles which they are manufacturing, and if there are any persons who can fairly pay tribute, if this is to be considered a tribute, those who are receiving 42 per cent. protection on the articles which they manufacture should not complain (and I am glad to say they do not) to a reasonable duty of 24 per cent. to foster and develop so important an interest as this—an interest which employs a large number of laborers and digs from the bowels of the earth over a hundred millions of tons annually.

I am satisfied, Mr. President, from the examination I have made of Mr. Jarrett's testimony, to which the Senator from Missouri refers, as he will be if he examines it carefully, for I have had occasion to refer to that evidence. I repeat, I am satisfied Mr. Jarrett in his testimony is alluding to the miners of the anthracite region, and not to the miners of the bituminous fields. There is, relatively speaking, a small section of the coal region of Pennsylvania which is bituminous, it being that section which is known as the Connellsville region, and which extends on into West Virginia. There will be developed within the next year in the State of West Virginia a coke interest that will be equal, if not superior, in quality and output to the Connellsville coal interest, which now has a reputation for fineness and quality superior to all others.

Only a few days ago, to my personal knowledge, 60,000 acres of the most magnificent coal land that can be found in this country was arranged by the owners of it to be sold to a syndicate of gentlemen who are going to develop it. Throughout that portion of the State of West Virginia running from Fairmont, in Marion County, down towards Clarksburgh, in the interior of the State, great progress in the development of this important interest is being made.

In the southwestern part of the State, I can state to the Senate, as an evidence of the wonderful coal deposit found there and the progress of this industry in West Virginia, that since the first of last April in one district of one county the population has increased three thousand, and to-day, for 10 miles, where a year ago there were only a few habitations and a scattered population there are now 10 miles of coke ovens as close together as they can be built, and I am informed that in the excavation of a tunnel for a road to transport that product to market the cost of the excavation was paid for from the coal that was excavated.

I desire only to add a few words. I think it is a recognized fact by all those dealing with this subject that 90 per cent. of the cost of coal is in labor. I claim, therefore, that under the principles of the party to which I have the honor to belong, that in the reduction of the tariff duties in accordance with the views of that party we should treat all interests with fairness, and that as the duty on this industry has been reduced to an amount far greater than any other protected interest since the inauguration of these high tariffs, it is unfair and unjust to ask us now, when it would result in increasing the profits of a few highly protected manufacturing industries on the seaboard, that coal should be placed on the free-list. Especially is this so when those affected by it are not asking for this reduction. I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment of the Senator from Missouri and allow bituminous coal to remain at 75 cents a ton, as it is under the present law.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this seems to be a very pretty quarrel as it stands on the other side of the Chamber, and I have no disposition to interfere with it. I simply desire to say, as representing a New England State, that it affords me great satisfaction to cast one vote in which it can not be accused that the selfishness of the New England people is at the bottom of the matter.

If we were to argue as our Democratic friends are in the habit of arguing, and as they seem to delight in arguing, we should say that everybody who wanted to burn bituminous coal in Connecticut was being robbed for the benefit of West Virginia and Maryland. But we do not look at it in that light, Mr. President.

Undoubtedly we could obtain our bituminous coal cheaper if it were on the free-list. We are near to Nova Scotia where labor is cheap, and from whence the transportation is exceedingly cheap; and if all we were looking at was as to how our blacksmiths and our manufacturers and all the people who desire to use bituminous coal could get it cheapest, of course we should be in favor of free coal. But we have been led to believe that it is better that the bituminous-coal industry should be prosecuted in the United States than in Nova Scotia, and we are willing to contribute (if it be a contribution) to the general welfare by paying any additional price that coal may cost us for the purpose and object of having this industry perpetuated and enlarged in the United States. As I said when I rose, it gives me great pleasure to cast a vote in one matter where we can not be accused of selfishness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I think my position upon this matter is perfectly well understood. I am in favor in every schedule embraced within this bill of levying such duty as to give fair protection to American interests. I have stood and I stand now precisely where my party has always stood when it has been victorious, and that is upon the declaration that in levying this tax it should be so levied as to protect the labor engaged in the various enterprises and the capital invested in them. When this very question of the duty on coal was under discussion in 1883 I made precisely that declaration upon this floor.

We went before the country in 1884 with that specific declaration embodied in our platform, at the same time drawing the line as sharply as it was possible to draw it between our position and that of the Republican party, which we held had, and which I believe it now does in many items of this bill, fixed rates beyond the revenue limits—far in excess of the amount required to protect labor and the capital invested in manufacturing and other industries, the result of which must be excessive profits, increased prices to the consumers, and then monopolies and trusts. The average duty, which we proclaimed everywhere, made by the Mills bill was about 40 per cent., and on that the Democratic party stood. The duty on coal, 75 cents per ton, is less than 25 per cent. ad valorem. Why does the Senator from Missouri strike at this industry when the rate of duty is but about one-half that levied on other articles?

Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] says truly that 90 per cent. of the cost of coal from the mines to the furnace goes to labor. There are more than one hundred thousand men engaged in mining bituminous coal, and these hard-working men, who bring it from the bowels of the earth, get under the present tariff from 30 to 50 cents per ton, their wages not exceeding $600 per annum. The owners of the property, the men who have invested their hard earnings in this enterprise, do not realize more than 10 cents per ton. The transportation lines, the railroads and canals, carry these products from the mines east of the Alleghanies to tide-water at less than one-half cent per ton per mile, so sharp is the competition, even with the duty at 75 cents. There is no monopoly; there can be no combine or trust in the bituminous-coal trade. The deposit is too extensive and the competition too sharp to allow it. To open the door and admit foreign coals free of duty can only result in disaster to the owners of the mines and bring lower wages to the men employed in this great enterprise.

Mr. President, under the moderate duties that were levied by the first act ever passed for levying duties on foreign imports the duty on bituminous coal was placed at 84 cents. It was increased to $1.25 by a Democratic Congress, and at no time from the date of the passage of the first act until now have the representatives of the Democratic party when in power ever proposed a lower duty than the present rate of 75 cents per ton.

From 1824 to 1843 the duty was $1.68 per ton; 1843 to 1846, $1.75 per ton; 1846, 30 per cent. ad valorem; 1847 to 1861, 24 per cent. ad valorem; 1862 to 1864, $1 per ton; 1865, $1.10 per ton; 1866 to 1872, $1.25 per ton; and since 1872, 75 cents per ton.

With this moderate protection what has been the result? The number of long tons produced in the United States in 1887 was 116,049,604, about 36,000,000 less than all of Great Britain.

Mr. President, I doubt whether such a result could have been attained by any other people under like conditions.

The deposits of the soft coals on the Atlantic seaboard are on an average 220 miles from tide-water. To mine this coal and transport it by railroad or canal to the manufacturing establishments of New England in competition with English coals was no ordinary undertaking. But so rapid and great has been the development and so perfect the agencies employed that coal is now sold free on board for less than $3 per ton, which is about one-half of its cost in 1860.

Mr. President, during the period from June, 1854, to March, 1866, the reciprocity treaty was in force and the coal from the British possessions in North America was admitted into the United States free of duty, and in response to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], I think it due to say that when you gentlemen of the New England States who want cheap coal saw that even the coal from the British possessions in North America, free of duty, was jeopardizing this great interest, embarrassing and impoverishing hundreds and thousands of laboring men, you agreed to the imposition of this small duty of 24 per cent.

Now, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who seems to have gone beyond nearly everybody on this side of the Chamber, proposes to put coal upon the free-list, to strike all this mining interest that is east of the Alleghanies, and which must continue necessarily to furnish the fuel for New England and the Atlantic coast, knowing, as he does very well, that when it comes to the interior, to his own State, and to Illinois, and to Indiana, where there are immense deposits of it, the cost of transportation by rail would prevent English coal from hurting their interests. But he must know, if he has carefully examined the question, that it would impair if not destroy the interest east of the Ohio River.

Mr. President, the people of the State whom I in part represent do not advocate excessive rates of duty, but they will not willingly submit to pay 40, 50, and 100 per cent. on articles they consume, and have the small duty of 24 per cent. on coal taken off. It is not fair nor just, and I say to my friend from Missouri that he will find the lessons of the past repeated; whenever we depart from the old declarations of the Democratic party, whenever we depart from the declarations made in the platform of 1884, to which he subscribed and upon which we went to victory, so long will we remain the party of the minority. The time will never come when the people of the States bordering upon the Potomac (and who are advancing now as no other three States of the Union are in manufacturing and mining interests), will depart from the declaration—

That reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country.

Mr. President, I am a Democrat; I can not be anything else but a Democrat; and, as I stated a few days ago in the Senate, I am in the unfortunate position here, as quite a number of us are, of being compelled by the two extremes—for I think the committee that reported this bill, reporting it in a time of excitement, have a bill that is extreme upon the other side—to vote upon these amendments practically on party lines. I hope, however, before we get through with the consideration of this matter we shall regard it as above party, for the great interests of the country are depending upon this legislation to an extent that I fear my friend from Missouri does not entirely appreciate. It ought to be settled; it ought to be considered fairly, and as a business proposition; and I hope, now that we have come to an item where the Senators from the Virginias and my own State can come out and say precisely what we mean, that it will yet be considered independent of partisan considerations.

We want a reduction in the revenue; we want a reduction upon these schedules. I know no section in voting upon them. Where an article was not and could not be manufactured here I have voted to place it upon the free-list freely on the motion of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]; but I do ask our friends on this side of the Chamber to look at the history of the past to see what it has brought us to, and I ask them to come up to this question, treating each item and every article with fair consideration, recognizing, as we must, that these great interests that have been inaugurated, manufacturing and mining, and all the various trades of the country, can not be taken and treated in the way my friend from Missouri would treat the coal interest.

I want to say that I hope the chairman of this committee, whom I know to be fair upon all questions of legislation outside of mere party considerations, before we reach the final votes in the Senate on this bill, will agree to modify his proposition, reduce these taxes, and stop this flow of money into the Treasury, and not put us in the position—I mean myself and others—of being compelled to vote against a bill because it increases in many items, as I believe, unnecessarily, the present rates of duty, which are high enough to protect all interests in the country.

Now, sir, my State has a decided interest in the soft-coal trade, but it is not so great an interest as some suppose. It would be unwise, in my judgment, to reduce the duty, but if you should repeal the tax and destroy it we would still prosper in Maryland. Our agricultural interests and great manufacturing interests in all branches are increasing and prospering. Mr. President, so diversified are the industries in my State that everything that is made, from a pin to the construction of a great war vessel, is being made in the State of Maryland. Mr. President, the only effect of the adoption of the proposition of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] would be for the time being to paralyze if not destroy one of the great industries of the State without benefiting in any way anybody in this broad land.

If the Democratic party, or any party, adopts the open and broad position of my friend from Missouri, that, while you have to raise $300,000,000 to support your Government, you will so legislate as to leave open the doors and bring in Nova Scotian coal free, where the mines happen to be immediately upon the seaboard and it can be transferred from the miners' cars to the vessel and brought in here by English tramp steamers, and thus destroy this interest—the party that advocates such a proposition can not expect to maintain supremacy in these great coal-producing States bordering on the Atlantic.

As I have before said, there never was a Democratic statesman, there never has been a President elected by the Democratic party, or a Secretary of the Treasury, or a committee of either branch of Congress that was controlled by Democrats, knowing that revenue must be raised from the tariff, who ever dreamed of putting coal upon the free-list. My friend wishes to reverse all precedents. No, Mr. President, the Democratic party is not a free-trade party.

I am aware that both Democrats and Republicans have voted to place coal on the free-list, but I again assert that the Democratic committees who have been charged with the duty of framing bills when our party has been in power at no time placed the duty lower than it is now. The bill as it came from the House leaves it at 75 cents. It was so left because it is now fixed at the revenue rate and gives the required protection to American labor and capital.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I choose to reply to the Senator from Maryland first as to his last assertion, reversing what would be the logical sequence of the argument. The vote in the Senate that I read was not in opposition to the motion of a Republican. At the time when Mr. Trumbull made the motion he was not in accord with the Republican party and was not acting with it. The men who voted for the proposition I think will be accepted by the Democratic party in this country as in entire unison with the party upon all great questions. First upon this list comes Blair—Frank Blair, of Missouri. I can afford to vote upon this question as he voted. Then follow Hamilton, of Texas, Hamlin, Harlan, Hill, Kelly, Logan, Morton, Norwood, Pratt, Schurz, Spencer, Sumner, Trumbull, Wilson, and Windom. In the negative I do not find any Democrat voting.

The Senator from Maryland advances the monstrous proposition here that the Democratic party in the minority must stand upon one side of a question, and then when they are in the majority take the other side.

Mr. GORMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. VEST. Then the Senator's language meant nothing, because he said that this vote was given because we were in the minority.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. What I stated was that never in the history of the Government, when the Democratic party had the control of the Executive, or when they had control of the committees in either House of Congress, did they ever advance a proposition to put coal upon the free-list. Upon the contrary they maintained the duty at a higher rate than it is to-day.

Mr. VEST. The duty upon coal has been maintained at a higher rate both under Republican and Democratic administrations, and that proves nothing. As to the time at which the proposition came before Congress, that amounts to nothing. It is not necessary for me to act with a majority when I advance a proposition before this body. When I put my vote upon record in favor of it I establish my position just as definitely and distinctly and emphatically in one condition of parties as in another. When these Democrats, the leaders of their party at that time, voted for free coal, I take it they voted as honest and patriotic men and statesmen in favor of what they believed to be for the benefit and welfare of the entire country. If they did not, they were time-servers and demagogues, and I am not here to brand their memories with any such stigma, because I know it to be untrue.

Sir, take the vote of the House of Representatives, which I read, 112 to 78, without distinction as to party, the best Democrats then in the House of Representatives voting in favor of putting coal upon the free-list.

The Senator (and I shall not emulate his example) taunts me with selfishness, for it amounts to that, because he says coal in the interior of Missouri does not come in competition with English coal, as he terms it. I voted the same way as to articles in the interior of Missouri coming directly in competition with foreign imports, upon lead, iron, and other productions of my State. I deserve no credit for it, because the Democrat who flinches now in the condition of parties from the broad principle that this system of unlimited taxation is wrong gives up his position and abandons his flag. He can not justify himself before the country. He surrenders at once every argument that we made in the last canvass, and upon which we must stand in the future whether we are willing or not. [Laughter.] It is too late, Mr. President, to change front.

Yes, let Senators laugh at that. I am glad of it. It is true. No Democrat, if he wants to, can go back upon the principle that this Government should be economically administered and no more taxes collected from the people than are necessary to pay the expenses of the Government. Inside of that limit I have objected to no member of this body attempting to secure a just and honest distribution of the burdens and benefits of the tariff, because I recognize that any duty must have some protective effect, and I would not be willing to see either the benefits or the burdens of the tariff imposed upon any section or interest alone. But that limit divides the two parties. No other limit can exist. Any Democrat who admits that we can go beyond the limit of a revenue for the Government and impose taxes for protection alone, whether it be the platform of 1884, or 1888, or 1892, gives up the platform of the Democratic party.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is exceedingly desirable that we should understand one another. I understand the Senator to say (it is his own limitation) that he recognizes the perfect legitimacy of the doctrine of protection.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I choose my own language.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood him to say that while he was for raising only enough for the revenues of the Government (that is all I want to raise, I am sure), he would so adjust the duties as to favor American manufacturers.

Mr. VEST. I would so adjust the duties as to make the tax equal in its operation as far as possible, both as to the burden and benefit, to all sections of the country alike.

Mr. HAWLEY. The word "benefit" answers the question.

Mr. VEST. That is what I mean. I mean an honest adjustment. I do not mean to use the tariff to build up an interest in one section at the expense of the people of the country. But the burdens and the benefits under this system should be distributed, because the Democratic doctrine is that this Government belongs to the people in all its parts and as an entirety. Whenever you strike down that principle, whenever you adopt the doctrine that is advocated now in this Chamber that the tariff is an instrumentality to build up certain interests under the monstrous pretext that it is for the general welfare, you destroy the web and woof of free institutions upon this continent. I do not care whether it is an interest here or there or anywhere, if it comes in conflict with that principle, I stake my political life here to-day upon striking it down, I do not care whether it is in my State or any other State.

I believe that we are right. As to the defeat in 1888, which the Senator from Maryland says came from our abandoning the old platform of 1884, which was made like the old hunter's gun, to hit it if a deer, and miss it if a calf, he is in my judgment entirely mistaken. We were defeated—and I will dismiss the subject with that single remark, for I do not want any political discussion on an economic question—we were defeated by a sectional issue. We were defeated, because our friends (and as a politician I do not blame them) went into the Northern States and reawakened the fires of war, stirred up the embers of sectional strife.

They said to the Northern people, "Here are these Confederate brigadiers, whom we whipped face to face upon the battle-field, who now seek to strike us down by destroying our manufactures." "Look at the composition," they said, "of the Committee on Ways and Means, with Mills of Texas at its head and the Breckinridges from Kentucky and Arkansas upon it. The war is again upon us. Union soldiers, to the front, and once more into the fray!"

There is where you won your victory, and not upon this tariff question, because I say now and here that I would lose my faith in American institutions, and the hope of posterity for free and honest and just government, if I thought that the American people would deliberately accept such a monstrosity as the bill now pending.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I think that I am a party man in good standing. I have been under the impression that I passed through the last campaign upholding the Democratic platform, Democratic principles, and the Democratic flag. I was under the impression, and still am, that the organized expression of the Democratic party is strong enough to withstand the dissent of even so distinguished and eloquent a gentleman as the Senator from Missouri.

As a member of the St. Louis convention I heard what is known as the Mills bill on this subject indorsed in special terms. That bill contained a provision levying a duty of 75 cents a ton on coal. I went into the contest. I was six weeks, day and night, before our people. There was a storm out there, such a cyclone as gentlemen less favored in their residence never witnessed. I came into the Senate a moment ago and found a proposition here to utterly overthrow what we declared at St. Louis and what we told the people of Indiana was correct, by putting coal on the free-list.

Mr. President, I look upon the bill before the Senate as a very bad one. I have said so with some care and distinctness. I look upon the woolen schedule, the cutlery schedule, and the schedule on cotton, as thoroughly vicious; and this one provision that the Senator from Missouri now seeks to strike out is the only one that I conceive to be absolutely correct. We indorsed it ourselves in national convention, in our platform, and before the country. I told the miners, the laboring people of Indiana that we were in earnest in what we were doing. I recognize that a tariff has to be laid upon some articles and some tariff on nearly all articles.

I have been classed as a conservative on the subject of the tariff, but I am less conservative than I formerly was, for I look upon the greed and encroachment of the manufacturing monopolists of this country as having passed all bounds, they having thrown off the mask and no longer pretending that a tariff is for revenue, but laying tribute and blackmail upon the people of this country, upon their necessities, for the sake of enriching themselves. But with these strong and pronounced views I yet hold to the old doctrine of the fathers, that we are to raise a revenue largely if not entirely by the system of tariff taxation, and in laying it wisdom should be exercised to do as much good and as little harm as possible.

In order to show that the people believed we were in earnest when we presented the Mills bill, I desire to say that in the mining regions of Indiana it was well accepted. I live in that part of the State of Indiana which embraces 6,500 square miles of the best coal in the world. Literally, I repeat my words, the best coal in the world is there. Long trains of cars are hauling coal from the iron mountains of Missouri this day and putting it down at Terre Haute and out at Brazil, 16 miles beyond, and making iron out of it for four or five dollars less on the ton than can be done at Pittsburgh, because of the quality of coal we have there. We have coal that needs no charcoal, no coking. It is the finest block coal there is on the globe. There are but two other places where it exists.

In that region, in the county of Clay, there were at least twenty-five hundred miners. Some of them were employed by men unscrupulous and abominable in their methods. Their employers in some instances shut down the mills in order to turn off their hands in large numbers, and then hired back only those who would vote the Republican ticket, leaving the Democratic employés to shift for themselves and do as well as they could. But, with all these discouragements, Clay County did better for the Democratic party, considering everything, than any other county in the State of Indiana, with possibly the exception of Marion, where the President-elect himself lives.

I say, therefore, that this measure, indorsed at St. Louis, brought forward by the Democratic party, canvassed for on every stump, commended itself to the laboring men themselves. For my part, I have received no instruction since from any authorized source to compel me to unsay what I said in a long and arduous canvass of my State, and to unsay what the Democratic party through its delegated wisdom at St. Louis said in the most solemn terms. Others can do as they choose. I shall stand by the authorized expressions of my party until they are rescinded. I once myself tried to be a little larger than my party, but it was in Greeley times, and I have not tried it over again. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. Will my friend permit me to interrupt him? He is not under the impression, I suppose, that the Mills bill made any declaration on the subject of coal.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, I am.

Mr. VEST. No; it says nothing about it. There is not a word in the Mills bill on the subject.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Missouri whether it did not leave the duty on coal at 75 cents a ton, as it was at that time?

Mr. VOORHEES. That is the point.

Mr. FAULKNER. That was equivalent to sustaining that duty on coal.

Mr. VEST. I do not want the Senator from Indiana to say that the Mills bill made any declaration on the subject.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will not say that the Senator from Missouri pettifogged on that point. I have too high and sincere a regard for him; but certainly he well knows that when the existing law was 75 cents a ton and there was no proposition in the Mills bill, which was a reformatory measure, to change it, it was the same as asserting it in so many words.

Mr. VEST. I did not say anything about the legal effect of it. It was the expression of the Senator from Indiana which brought me to my feet. I understood him to say and emphatically declare that the Mills bill put a duty of 75 cents a ton on coal.

Mr. VOORHEES. It could not have declared so any more emphatically than by letting it stand.

Mr. VEST. There was no affirmative declaration at all.

Mr. VOORHEES. There could not have been a more affirmative declaration than by letting it alone as it was. That is all I desire to say in explanation of my own vote.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Indiana to the fact that the Mills bill, when indorsed by the Democratic party at St. Louis, carried bituminous coal on the free-list.

Mr. VEST. No, I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HISCOCK. No, I am not mistaken.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not like to question the Senator's statement, but I had that investigated by an officer in the Treasury, and on looking at the very question he suggests his decision was that it did not put it on the free-list.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think if the Senator will examine the bill as it stood at that time he will find that he is mistaken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. EUSTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK].

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. It is a general pair, made two or three days ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. MANDERSON'S name was called). The occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were not paired, the Chair would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to announce the pair between the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] and my colleague, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], and to state that if my colleague were present he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. EVARTS. Has the vote of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] been recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Alabama has not voted.

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with him, and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Berry,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Reagan,	Walthall.
Coke,	Hampton,	Vance,

NAYS—31.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Hiscock,	Stewart,
Allison,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Bate,	Dolph,	Payne,	Teller,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Platt,	Turpie,
Chace,	Frye,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cullom,	Hale,	Sherman,	Wilson of Md.
Daniel,	Hawley,	Spooner,

ABSENT—34.

Beck,	Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Kenna,	Quay,
Blair,	Farwell,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	George,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Sabin,
Butler,	Harris,	Morrill,	Saulsbury,
Call,	Hearst,	Paddock,	Stanford.
Cameron,	Hoar,	Palmer,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Pasco,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. After this decided expression in favor of the general principle of protecting coal, on behalf of the majority of the Committee on Finance I move to add at the end of paragraph 393:

Coal slack or culm, such as will pass through a half-inch screen, 30 cents per ton of 28 bushels, 80 pounds to the bushel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa how that corresponds with the existing duty?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the existing law.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator to say that that is the existing law?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the existing law as respects culm.

Mr. VEST. In the act of 1883? Does the Senator state that?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator before he passes from this paragraph whether he understands that it is beyond any sort of question that the provision in regard to the rebate of 75 cents is repealed by this proposed law.

Mr. ALLISON. I so understand it.

Mr. VEST. The Senator has already said that he so understood it, but those questions have arisen and given great trouble in the courts. Here we pass a new law and leave an affirmative proposition in the old law without any notice. That is a very serious question, and may admit of litigation.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the purpose of the bill to substitute the tariff schedules of this bill for Title XXXIII of the Revised Statutes, which covers all those points. The substitute of the committee proposes to repeal Title XXXIII of the Revised Statutes and substitute this amendment for that title. I think there can be no question, indeed it is the understanding of the committee, that those provisions respecting drawbacks are repealed.

Mr. VEST. I think the Senator is right from the language of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there can be no doubt about the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the substitute will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

394. Coke, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
395. Dice, draughts, chess-men, chess-balls, and billiard, pool, and bagatelle balls, of ivory, bone, or other materials, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. A few moments ago I asked that paragraph 391, relating to the duty on card-clothing, be passed over until later in the day. If it is convenient to the Senator from Iowa I will ask the Senate to return to it now. If not, I will wait for another occasion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks that the Senate return to paragraph 391.

Mr. ALLISON. We may just as well do that now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

391. Card-clothing.—Manufactured from tempered steel wire, 45 cents per square foot; all other, 25 cents per square foot.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from North Carolina proceeds, I desire to give notice to him that I shall move, in line 1669, to strike out "45 cents" and insert "50 cents;" so as to read:

Manufactured from tempered steel wire, 50 cents per square foot.

Mr. VANCE. What is the proposition? To strike out?

Mr. ALLISON. The proposition is to strike out "45 cents" and insert "50 cents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Iowa now moves that amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I can only move it with the consent of the Senator from North Carolina, if he has the floor.

Mr. VANCE. I prefer to move my amendment first, and to state my objections to the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. VANCE. The present duty on card-clothing manufactured from tempered steel wire is 45 cents per square foot. The consideration of this question the last time that the tariff was revised upwards was February 7, 1883, and I wish to read the proceedings that took place. I read from the RECORD of February 7, 1883, page 2207, as follows:

Line 1518 was read, as follows:
"Card-clothing, 40 cents per square foot."
Mr. ALDRICH. I am satisfied that the committee placed the rate too high on this article. I move to make the rate 40 per cent. ad valorem.
Mr. BECK. It is now 35 per cent. ad valorem, I observe.
Mr. ALLISON. It is 50 cents a pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem.
Mr. BECK. It is not enumerated in the old law, and it stands at 35 per cent.
Mr. ALDRICH. I will agree to make it 35.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] moves to strike out "40 cents per square foot" and to insert "35 per cent. ad valorem."
The amendment was agreed to,

without a division. Then, during the same session, February 14, 1883, the following proceedings took place, which will be found in the RECORD of that session, page 2622:

Mr. HOAR. I ask my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who has charge of that part of the bill, to go back to the last amendment before this, and treat it as not having been adopted. I refer to "card-clothing," on page 61, lines 1487 and 1488. It came up in committee when I was at home sick. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the reasons for having that a duty by the square foot as it was originally reported. I do not want to increase the duty, and have no objection to its being diminished if the Senate will give consent to go back to it. The same thing may be accomplished by a motion to reconsider, but I supposed it would be more convenient to go back in this way.
Mr. HARRIS. I suppose there is no objection to the Senator making any statement he desires to make, and the Senate will then determine whether it desires to reconsider or not.
Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that this clause was passed unexpectedly when I was sick, and I had no opportunity to be heard on it. It came up again to-day, but the Senate began immediately afterward on coal, and I thought instead of interfering with that I would wait and the Senate would of course treat it as not having been passed. It was the last amendment before that as to coal, and I did not suppose there would be any objection to so treating it. It is in line 1487. I simply desire the amendment to be treated as not adopted.
Mr. VANCE. That was read over and adopted, according to my recollection.
Mr. HOAR. I did not suppose there was a Senator in the body who would make objection to the request I have made under the circumstances I have stated.
Mr. VANCE. I am not objecting to the request the Senator makes; but I recollect distinctly that the amendment was read.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly it was read and passed upon, but my attention was called away at the moment. If I had got up and called attention to it of course the Senate would have gone back to it; but I did not wish to interrupt the discussion on coal.

Mr. VANCE and others. Go on.

Mr. HOAR. What I wish to say is that I understand there is a great deal of fraud and undervaluation by reason of the ad valorem duty on card-clothing. It is manufactured very considerably for the American market, and it is consigned to the agents of the foreign manufacturers at any price they choose to fix, so that an ad valorem is very difficult to obtain, peculiarly so in this class of manufactures, wherefore the American manufacturers prefer very much that the duty should be so much by the square foot, and they are perfectly willing to have the duty reduced to any reasonable rate.

The committee reported 40 cents per square foot, which is a very much larger duty than 35 per cent. ad valorem. Now, I propose to have, instead of 35 per cent. ad valorem, 25 cents per square foot, which would be a reduction compared with the present duty and a reduction compared with the rate proposed by the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the value of card-clothing?

Mr. HOAR. I had in my possession all the details, but I gave them to the committee and they adopted originally in their report my proposition. I have not got the memorandum with me; but the Senator from Rhode Island can answer.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was stated to me by the manufacturers that 40 cents a square foot was equivalent to about 35 per cent. ad valorem, but some manufacturers who are interested upon the other side told me that the rate would be higher. I think the proposition now made by the Senator from Massachusetts will be satisfactory to both the producer and the consumer.

That is, 35 per cent. ad valorem. After some further colloquy:

Mr. HOAR. It is not an increase. I am perfectly willing to let the matter stand till morning, so that the exact facts may be obtained from the committee-room by memoranda, if the Senator prefers. I do not desire an increase, but, on the other hand, I am content with a reduction. All I want is to have it by the square foot and not by the ad valorem.

So it was left over until the next day, and on the next day the following proceedings were had finally:

The ACTING SECRETARY. On page 72, line 1665, of the last print, "40 cents per square foot" was stricken out and "35 per cent. ad valorem" was inserted; so as to read:

"Card-clothing, 35 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in his seat. That was to be passed over until some consultation could be had.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was to be passed over until to-day. The Senator from Massachusetts is not here.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it was agreed and understood on both sides that that should be made 25 cents per square foot instead of 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. VANCE. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think that is satisfactory on all sides.

Whereupon the paragraph was considered as adopted, and other proceedings took place. But when the bill came back from the committee of conference the duty came back 45 cents per square foot. The duty which the Senator from Massachusetts denied that he desired, the duty which the Senator from Rhode Island said was entirely too high, the duty which the Senator from Iowa conceived to be too high, was adopted by the committee of conference, and it so stands to-day. The proposition which the Senator from Iowa gives us notice that he will make now is to still further increase the duty to 50 cents per square foot, although 40 cents a few years ago was entirely too high, and 25 cents per square foot was satisfactory to both sides of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not quite sure whether the Senator from North Carolina is trying to show that the rates on this article are too high, or whether he is trying to convict me, as a member of the Senate or as a member of the Finance Committee, of inconsistency in this matter. In either case I should like to refresh his memory a little.

It is true that the bill as reported from the Committee on Finance in 1883, fixed the duty on card-clothing at 40 cents a square foot; and that upon investigation the committee found that that rate was too high, and they finally decided to fix the rate as it was ultimately fixed and agreed to upon both sides, at 25 cents per square foot.

The bill passed the Senate in that form and went to the conference committee. In the conference committee it was brought to the attention of the committee that there had been taken out a patent in England for the production of tempered steel wire from which card-clothing could be made. All card-clothing up to that time had been made from iron wire. It was the claim of the inventor of this patent that card-clothing made from tempered steel wire would last indefinitely, and that it would be ultimately very much cheaper for the manufacturers who used card-clothing than the card-clothing made from iron wire, which up to that time had been the only kind used.

The persons who came before the committee said, "If you will put an adequate duty upon tempered steel wire, card-clothing, we have every reason to believe, can be made in this country; in any event we think that you ought to give us a chance to make the attempt." With that purpose the conference committee agreed to a rate upon card-clothing which reads as follows, and not as stated by the Senator from North Carolina:

Card-clothing, 25 cents per square foot; when manufactured from tempered steel wire, 45 cents per square foot.

The rate which was left by the conference committee and finally adopted by Congress was identically the same rate which was agreed to in the colloquy to which the Senator from North Carolina has called attention, and was left unchanged and is left unchanged in this bill. The Senator from Iowa in his amendment does not propose to change it.

Now, what was the result? I am very glad that the Senator from North Carolina has called attention to this one item. At that time, I say, every foot of card-clothing used in this country was made from iron wire. We placed that duty, which we then believed was adequate, upon card-clothing made from tempered steel wire, and to-day nine-tenths of the card-clothing used in the United States is manufactured from tempered steel wire, I think a very much larger proportion; and a considerable proportion of it, I am happy to say, is made by American mechanics within our own limits.

If that rate had not been made, if the conference committee had not inserted that new classification with a new rate, not one square foot of tempered steel-wire card-clothing could have been made in this country. Even at the present rate of duty, as my colleague suggests to me, there is a considerable amount of tempered steel wire imported. We have not the whole market, but we have a large portion of it.

If the Senator from Iowa will permit me to make a statement in regard to the amendment, the only reason why we seek to make an increase of duty upon card-clothing from tempered steel wire is that by the provisions of the bill we have increased the duty upon the wire, and the card-clothing manufacturers feel that they are entitled, as I think they are myself, to an equivalent addition.

I trust the Senator from North Carolina is satisfied with this explanation.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to know wherein that statement refreshes my recollection about anything. I never heard that the committee of conference had examined witnesses and heard the claims of parties for an increase of duty on account of a new invention for making steel wire. I never heard that before.

Mr. ALDRICH. It should refresh the Senator's recollection to this extent. If any Senator had heard his statement, at the conclusion of it he would have been irresistibly led to the conclusion that the conference committee increased the duty upon all kinds of card-clothing from 25 cents to 45 cents.

Mr. VANCE. So you did, according to the record.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not by any means.

Mr. VANCE. There is nothing in the record but what shows that the duty on card-clothing was increased by the conference committee from 25 cents, at which it was when we sent the bill to your committee, and when it came back it was increased to 45 cents.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was not increased one particle, and I am surprised at the statement the Senator from North Carolina now makes. He either has not read the law, or he is incapable of understanding it, one or the other. The provision went to the conference committee, came out in hæc verba as it went into the conference committee, in words and syllables.

Mr. VANCE. Was there nothing added to it?

Mr. ALDRICH. There was a proviso added to it which made a new classification entirely for an entirely different article.

Mr. VANCE. And fixed an entirely different and higher duty?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. Nearly twice as much duty?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly, as there should have been fixed.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, one word more to the Senator from North Carolina. He said in his preliminary statement that in the conference committee the duty had been increased from 25 cents per square foot to 45 cents, but omitted to state what was the important fact to be stated, that on card-clothing made from iron wire the duty was left at 25 cents a square foot. I want to ask the Senator from North Carolina why, in undertaking to instruct the Senate respecting the transaction, he did not state that card-clothing made from iron wire was in the bill and in the law at 25 cents a square foot? Why was it necessary for him to exclude that fact from his statement as respects what occurred in 1883? Why was it necessary for him to suppress a statement which was in the law, giving the exact truth as it appeared in the RECORD and in the final report of the conference committee, of 25 cents a square foot on card-clothing made from iron wire? I should like to have him explain that to the Senate.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I suppress nothing.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. VANCE. No, sir; if you will excuse me.

Mr. ALLISON. I will excuse you.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. VANCE. You have called on me now to make an explanation.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will make it.

Mr. VANCE. If you will wait a moment until I make the explanation, or do the best I can at it, I will then yield with very great pleasure to what the Senator desires.

My statement was with reference to the article of card-clothing. I was not aware of the technical distinction between card-clothing made from tempered wire and card-clothing made from common wire, and evidently the authors of the bill were not aware of any such distinction. If they were, they did not make it, because the line which I read to you from the bill simply says "card-clothing," not making any classification at all. After we fixed the duty on card-clothing at 25 cents per square foot and sent it to the committee of conference it came back card-clothing when made from tempered steel wire, 45 cents per square foot and 25 cents for the other kind per square foot. I did not know but that this was merely a classification to excuse the increase, and so believe now. I did not know that there was a real difference in the things classified, but thought it was a trick which has been so often resorted to all through this bill, and which constitutes what I consider the dishonest element in protection politics, that is to say, the making of a new classification merely for the purpose of increasing the duty.

That is my explanation of it; and I suppressed nothing that appears here from the RECORD. I read the RECORD openly, and I respectfully submit that I am not to be held responsible for the secret things that were disclosed in that conference committee, at which I was not present, and at which the representatives of my party on this side of the Chamber were not present, because, as was stated the other day, they refused to be present, as the conference was not a free one.

The House conferees went there with Mr. KELLEY'S resolution in their pockets, determined to draw it if the conference did not suit them and excuse themselves, and not to draw it if the report of the committee should suit them. That is the explanation that I have of it.

Now, one word in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island. He says that they were informed, that is, this secret conclave was informed, not the public, not the Senate, that a new patent had been discovered in England by which the same kind of card-clothing could be made from tempered steel wire instead of iron, that would last indefinitely, whereas the card-clothing made from common iron wire had to be renewed every once in awhile after it wore out; and in order to keep the public, the people, the cotton-spinners, and the carders of America from the benefit of that, they increased the duty upon it, evidently for the purpose of compelling the American manufacturers to use the old iron wire, I suppose, because the English patent would not permit it to be made in this country. That was the object of the increase of duty. If so, it can not be justified.

What is the object of the Senator's proposed amendment now to make the duty 50 cents per square foot? When the Senator from Rhode Island tells us it is being made successfully in America, and that a large number of the factories are being supplied with this wire from the new patent, still the duty must go up to 50 cents per square foot.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move to increase the rate of duty from 45 cents per square foot to 50 cents per square foot.

The Senator from North Carolina not wishing to be interrupted in his statement, I desire now to repeat what I said before, namely, that in the first statement made by the Senator from North Carolina he gave the Senate the impression, at least by his words, that the duty on card-clothing had been increased in conference from 25 cents a square foot to 45 cents a square foot. My suggestion to him was that that was only a partial statement, and that it was misleading. I do not mean to say that the Senator intended to mislead, because I am sure he would not do that.

The law, which is the result of the conference of 1883, reads as follows:

Card-clothing, 25 cents per square foot.

The Senator omitted that entirely. Therefore we were led to believe from his statement that the duty on card-clothing was 45 cents a square foot.

Mr. VANCE. Is it not?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir. I will read it again.

Mr. VANCE. It is not necessary to read it again.

Mr. ALLISON. "Card-clothing, 25 cents per square foot." Did the Senator say anything about that? Surely he did not.

Mr. VANCE. There is other card-clothing there at 45 cents a square foot?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. VANCE. And that is an increase, because it was not in the original bill.

Mr. ALLISON. That is when manufactured from tempered steel wire.

What I mean to say is that this provision, as it came from the conference committee, instead of having a uniform rate of 25 cents a foot, provided a different rate of duty for one class of card-clothing, namely, that class manufactured from tempered steel wire, when, as is suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], the Senator from North Carolina stated that the whole paragraph had been increased to 45 cents a square foot, or words to that effect. He may not have used that exact language.

Mr. VANCE. I do not suppose the Senator wishes to do me any injustice.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. VANCE. Let me ask the Senator one question. Did not the bill go from the Senate with card-clothing at 25 cents per square foot, and would not that have embraced all kinds of card-clothing, made from steel wire, iron wire, gold wire, or copper?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. VANCE. It came back with a rate of 45 cents per square foot on a certain kind, and 25 cents on another kind.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. Was not that an increase? All "card-clothing" was at 25 cents per square foot when the bill went out; when it came back a part was 45 cents per square foot.

Mr. ALLISON. That statement is a full, frank statement, but that was not the statement made originally by the Senator from North Carolina. His statement was that the bill had gone from the Senate with the duty on card-clothing at 25 cents a square foot, and that it came back at 45 cents, which of course meant the same kind that was included in the original statement.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. It is a matter of no moment. I will accept any suggestion the Senator chooses to make.

Mr. VANCE. I simply wish to say to the Senator that he may know I would not have misrepresented the law with the law lying right before me and before every other Senator, and my statement must have been understood by everybody to have reference to the 45 cents alone and not to the whole law, which was right before every Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. VANCE. If I had desired to deceive the Senate I certainly could not have hoped to do so without getting a little further away from the record.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator had read the law we should have understood it much better. The reason for this necessary increase has been partially stated by the Senator from Rhode Island, and I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from North Carolina to submit a proposition for amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. He submitted no proposition to amend.

Mr. VANCE. I intended to submit a proposition, as a matter of course. I made my statement for that purpose, as preliminary to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I have submitted an amendment which I ask may be voted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1669, it is proposed to strike out "45" and insert "50;" so as to read:

Card-clothing.—Manufactured from tempered steel wire, 50 cents per square foot.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. STEWART. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Allison,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Teller,
Chace,	Frye,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Hale,	Platt,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Sherman,

NAYS—17.

Bate,	Daniel,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Berry,	Eustis,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Faulkner,	Turpie,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Colquitt,	Pugh,	Voorhees,

ABSENT—34.

Beck,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,
Blackburn,	George,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Blair,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Gray,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Butler,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Call,	Harris,	Pasco,	Vest.
Cameron,	Hearst,	Payne,
Evarts,	Hoar,	Plumb,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I will merely say that after the sense of the Senate has been thus expressed on increasing the rate upon card-clothing made from steel wire, I shall not take up the time of the Senate in offering an amendment to reduce the rate of duty. So I shall forego the amendment which I had prepared to offer to this paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

396. Dolls, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

397. Emery grains, and emery manufactured, ground, pulverized, or refined, 1 cent per pound.

398. Feathers and downs of all kinds, when dressed, colored, or manufactured, including quilts of down and other manufactures of down, and also including dressed and finished birds suitable for millinery ornaments, and artificial and ornamental feathers and flowers, or parts thereof, of whatever material composed, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

399. Fire-crackers of all kinds, 8 cents per pound, but no allowance shall be made for tare or damage thereon.
400. Fulminates, fulminating powders, and like articles, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 30 per cent. ad valorem.
401. Furs, dressed on the skin but not made up into articles, and furs not on the skin, prepared for hatters' use, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
402. Gloves, kid or leather, of all descriptions, wholly or partially manufactured, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what is the necessity for putting back this duty to what it is under the existing law? There is no industry in the United States that is in so flourishing a condition to-day as the manufacture of leather. We exported in 1887 over $10,000,000 worth, and if we want to reduce the surplus in the Treasury we ought certainly to avail ourselves of the opportunity to take off 10 per cent. as to importations that can not possibly injure the domestic manufacture.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the intention of the committee to offer later on an amendment to paragraph 402. There is great complaint of undervaluations in the importation of leather gloves and kid gloves especially. There are very large importations of them at present. The committee will at a later stage of the bill present some amendments to this paragraph.

Mr. VEST. Let it be passed over then.

Mr. ALLISON. It may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

403. Gunpowder, and all explosive substances used for mining, blasting, artillery, or sporting purposes, when valued at 20 cents or less per pound, 5 cents per pound; valued above 20 cents per pound, 8 cents per pound.
404. Gun-wads of all descriptions, 35 per cent. ad valorem.
405. Hair, human, if clean or drawn but not manufactured, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
406. Hair-cloth, known as "crinoline-cloth," and hair pencils, 30 per cent. ad valorem.
407. Hair-cloth, known as "hair-seating," 30 cents per square yard.
408. Hair, curled, suitable for beds or mattresses, 15 per cent. ad valorem.
409. Hats, for men's, women's, and children's wear, composed of the fur of the rabbit, beaver, or other animals, or of which such fur is the component material of chief value, wholly or partially manufactured, including fur hat bodies, 50 per cent. ad valorem.
410. Jewelry: All articles, not elsewhere specially provided for in this act, composed of precious metals or imitations thereof, whether set with coral, jet, or pearls, or with diamonds, rubies, cameos, or other precious stones, or imitations thereof, or otherwise, and which shall be known commercially as "jewelry," 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to offer two amendments to the paragraph last read. In line 1722, after the word "otherwise," I move to insert "including gold watches."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In line 1722, after the word "otherwise," it is proposed to insert "including gold watches;" so as to read:

410. Jewelry: All articles, not elsewhere specially provided for in this act, composed of precious metals or imitations thereof, whether set with coral, jet, or pearls, or with diamonds, rubies, cameos, or other precious stones, or imitations thereof, or otherwise, including gold watches, and which shall be known commercially as "jewelry," 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BROWN. Then I move, in line 1723, after the word "jewelry," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty;" so that it will read "40 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me to explain, I think he will see that he does not understand the exact effect of his first amendment in regard to gold watches. The effect of that would be to reduce the duty. By this bill gold watches pay 45 per cent. ad valorem if the amendment which the Senator now suggests is not adopted.

Mr. BROWN. In what part of the bill is that?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is in paragraph 198.

Mr. BROWN. My object is to increase the tariff on the whole paragraph in relation to jewelry, and to include gold watches.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I supposed, and with that idea I took the liberty of calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that the rate fixed in the bill is 45 per cent., under paragraph 198, which reads as follows:

198. Manufactures, articles, or wares, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, composed wholly or in part of iron, steel, lead, copper, nickel, pewter, tin, zinc, gold, silver, platinum, or any other metal, and whether partly or wholly manufactured, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Gold watches would be included in this provision.

Mr. BROWN. You understand that they are included in that language?

Mr. ALDRICH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BROWN. Then I do not insist on the first amendment, but do on the second.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

Mr. VEST. Paragraph 440 puts watches at 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BROWN. Let us have the facts right.

Mr. VEST. The paragraph is as follows:

440. Watches, watch-cases, watch-movements, parts of watches, watch-glasses, and watch-keys, whether separately packed or otherwise, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. That is so.

Mr. BROWN. Then I insist on both of my amendments. My object is to increase the tariff on gold watches. If I recollect correctly, the rate under the existing law is 40 per cent. on gold watches.

Mr. DAWES. Why not put the amendment in paragraph 440?

Mr. BROWN. I am not particular as to the paragraph where it comes in, so that it is not omitted. It would come in probably as well there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The two amendments will be treated as one question, if there be no objection, and the amendments will be again stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 410, line 1722, after the word "otherwise," it is proposed to insert the words "including gold watches," and in line 1723, after the word "jewelry," it is proposed to strike out "25" and insert "40."

Mr. BROWN. As I understand, both the great political parties of the country are pledged to the doctrine of a higher tariff on luxuries and a lower tariff on the necessaries of life. Jewelry and gold watches are properly classed as luxuries; in other words, they are articles used mainly by the wealthier classes of our people, who are well able to pay, and, as expressed in the Senate to-day, willing to pay a higher rate on articles used by them. I think, therefore, with a view to carrying out the pledges of both parties, we ought to put jewelry at least as high as it was under the old law.

When these political platforms were laid down the law was 40 per cent. on gold watches, and the pledge is not well met by either party when we reduce the tariff on jewelry or gold watches from 40 to 25 per cent. Therefore I insist on my amendment, and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. The principle laid down by the Senator from Georgia is correct, and these are articles of luxury. But the principle is modified somewhat by a practical question which has been tried several times, and that is that no duty shall be laid which will encourage smuggling. Now, nothing is surer in the experience of the Government in the attempt to tax jewelry at more than a very low rate than that it has always led to evasion and smuggling. The temptation to smuggle jewelry when the duty imposed is 25 per cent., on watches especially, is very great. All the materials of which jewelry is made, that is, the precious metals and rubies and the stones of which they are composed, are free, and if you put a duty of 25 per cent., especially if you put a duty of 45 per cent., it will induce smuggling, and there is no power in the world, no custom-house protection, that can prevent smuggling. That has been the experience of the past.

I agree that a duty ought to be put on these articles just as high as they will bear without inducing smuggling, but the Government found that a duty of 10 per cent. yielded more revenue and did not really affect the business of our jewelry establishments at home at all.

But I have no care about this. If the Senate wants to put it at 40 per cent. very well; but I think the result will be that we shall get less revenue and more articles will be smuggled in. That has been the experience of the Treasury Department and the experience of the Government.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this question was pretty fully discussed in 1883, when the tariff was undergoing revision in this body, and I think after the discussion it was admitted that the position now taken by the Senator from Ohio applied mainly in the case of diamonds and the more costly pearls and stones and not so much to watches and ordinary jewelry. I recollect it was on my motion that gold watches were raised from 25 to 40 per cent., seconded by my friend General Logan, who was then in the Senate and who made some remarks in favor of the motion, and it was adopted by a large majority on the concession that the position taken by the Senator from Ohio now did not apply to jewelry as it did to diamonds and the finer class of precious stones.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will not reach what he intends if he puts it in that phraseology, because gold watches without the movements would not be embraced in the phraseology, and then the movements separately are at 25 per cent.; so the same man could import gold watch-cases and he could import the movements separately, and in both cases he would pay only 25 per cent. So the Senator should change his phraseology, and put the watches, the cases, and the movements together.

Mr. BROWN. The common understanding of a gold watch is that little machine that is carried in the pocket and has a gold case. That is known as a gold watch.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think it is necessary to put in any other description.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly it is. That is the very reason why the importer will escape the payment of the higher duty. A gold watch consists of a gold case and the movements together, all in one. All that importer would have to do would be to import gold cases as they are described here.

Mr. BROWN. I have heard no complaint since 1883 of the evasion of the law on this question, and the tariff has been during that period what I now propose to make it, or rather I propose to continue the rate as it now exists in the law.

Mr. DAWES. If there has been no evasion it has been because the law has never been in the phraseology which the Senator now proposes.

Mr. BROWN. "Gold watches," I believe, are placed at higher rates.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, they are at higher rates than watch-cases. That is the trouble. Watch-cases are at one rate and watches at another.

Mr. BROWN. I want to make the rate 40 per cent.

Mr. DAWES. But if the Senator's amendment is adopted as it now stands, gold watches will be at one rate, gold watch-cases will be at another rate, and watch movements will be at another rate. So gold watch-cases will be imported at 25 per cent. and movements will be imported at 25 per cent., and then somebody in this country will put the two together and make a gold watch, which, if it was put together before it was imported, would have to pay a duty of 40 per cent.

Mr. BROWN. Would the Senator like the phraseology better if the amendment be changed so as to read "gold watches and gold watch-cases?"

Mr. DAWES. I agree with the Senator, and I want to reach just what he does.

Mr. BROWN. I want to reach the point and cover the whole ground.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Georgia will yield to me a moment, I think what he desires as respects watches and watch-cases had better be inserted on page 160, paragraph 440, where that subject is treated, and which provides for "watches, watch-cases, watch-movements," etc.

Mr. BROWN. If the chairman of the committee suggests that he prefers that, I will withhold my amendment until we reach that paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that would be a better place to insert it rather than to put the amendment where the Senator proposes.

Mr. BROWN. Then I propose only the other amendment, as to jewelry generally, raising it to 40 per cent.; in other words, to strike out "25" and insert "40" per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator withdraws his first proposed amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And asks for action upon the amendment which will now be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 410, line 1723, after the word "jewelry," it is proposed to strike out "25" and insert "40;" so as to read:

410. Jewelry: All articles, not elsewhere specially provided for in this act, composed of precious metals or imitations thereof, whether set with coral, jet, or pearls, or with diamonds, rubies, cameos, or other precious stones, or imitations thereof, or otherwise, and which shall be known commercially as "jewelry," 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. It is true that these are articles of luxury, but it is also true that the American manufacturer needs no protection at all about them. If the Senator from Georgia will look at the export list for 1887 and 1888 he will find that we are exporting to foreign countries $479,000 worth of jewelry by the export list of 1888. We are not only supplying the wants of the domestic market, but we are exporting besides nearly half a million dollars' worth of this product; and with a surplus in the Treasury there can not be any necessity for increasing the duty. We do not want the money, and the only possible reason that could be urged would be to protect American labor. The American labor not only does not need the protection, but it is now competing successfully with foreign labor. We are selling bric-a-brac made out of gold and silver, and we are selling watches all over Europe. In England an American watch can be bought to-day cheaper than a Geneva watch, and a better article. My friend back of me from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] says that the clock in the House of Commons is made by the Waltham Company, American manufacturers, the great watch company in New England. I have to rely upon my friends for information on these matters, because I am unfortunate in never having been abroad. But that is a very significant fact and applies to all these articles of jewelry and watches. I do not see any necessity for this increase, because we do not need the revenue and the manufacturers do not need the protection.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, it is not a question of protection. I have introduced the amendment with no view to protecting anybody. It is a question of raising the revenue on luxuries with a view to reducing it on other things that are the common necessaries of life.

The Senator from Missouri says we do not need the revenue. It is true we have a surplus in the Treasury, but we have to raise revenue by tariff taxation, and I would raise it as much as possible by assessing a higher rate on luxuries and making reductions on the common necessaries of life.

I insist on the amendment, and think it ought to be adopted, with a view to raising revenue on such luxuries as ought to pay revenue, with a view to releasing to that extent the revenue that would otherwise be raised on some of the necessaries of life.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. I should like to have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], or I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EVARTS. Is the name of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not recorded.

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and withhold my vote.

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. MANDERSON] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. EVARTS. The vote does not seem to be political, and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Hiscock,	Stockbridge,
Allison,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Teller,
Bate,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Turpie,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Vance,
Brown,	Evarts,	Payne,	Voorhees.
Chandler,	Faulkner,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Frye,	Reagan,	Wilson of Iowa.
Coke,	Gorman,	Saulsbury,
Cullom,	Gray,	Sawyer,
Daniel,	Hale,	Spooner,

NAYS—4.

Eustis,	Hawley,	Platt,	Sherman.

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Blair,	George,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Butler,	Harris,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Call,	Hearst,	Palmer,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Wilson of Md.
Chace,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. REAGAN. As we all seem to be pretty harmonious in our views just now, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HAWLEY. Speaking of leather, which is the next item, I did not expect to make an explanation of a vote against raising a duty as opposed to the unanimous Democratic attempt to raise that duty. It is all very well for a joke, but I wish to point out a serious side to the vote just taken.

This increase of the duty from 25 to 40 per cent. will lead, in my judgment if this bill becomes a law, to a very largely-increased importation of jewelry, but without paying any duty. Jewelry in general is capable of easy smuggling, and you have offered 15 per cent. additional premium to the smugglers. This increase is not needed for protection, and putting it on is the reverse of protection. It is not needed for revenue. I prophesy in case it should pass, an increase of importation and a damage to the American manufacturer.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to yield while I get an order to print.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the motion temporarily for that purpose.

REPRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of Senate bill 3783, entitled "An act to make and alter regulations as to the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An order to reprint the bill could be agreed to by unanimous consent. An order to print additional copies must be referred to the Committee on Printing, under the rules.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill is now in type.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An order to reprint would secure the printing of about 800 extra copies, which would not require a reference under the rules. An order to print 2,000 would require to be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HAWLEY. Pardon a suggestion. The rule says "unless the Senate shall otherwise order" it shall be referred to the Committee on Printing, and this is a matter to which it is entirely competent to give unanimous consent, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order will then be made as requested by the Senator from New Hampshire. The Chair hears no objection.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 8th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 337) granting a pension to Mary E. Johnston.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. SPOONER (on behalf of Mr. QUAY), from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4581) for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 9211) for the relief of Jesse Durnell;

A bill (H. R. 11794) to amend the postal laws of the United States in reference to letters bearing special-delivery stamps; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PAYNE introduced a bill (S. 3796) to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to said port of Columbus; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3797) for the relief of Julius Witkowski, of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3798) for the relief of Judah Touro Robertson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 3799) making an appropriation for the construction of a steam-tender for service on the Great Lakes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER introduced a bill (S. 3800) directing a survey of a road from the Aqueduct Bridge to Mount Vernon and making an appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn to 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] takes precedence.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Texas will withdraw his motion. I understand he did withdraw it temporarily. He is not in his seat now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senater from Iowa allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There are but few Senators here now, and most of those who have gone have gone away with the idea that we were not to meet until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. They will see it in the RECORD undoubtedly. There will be no trouble about that.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think there ought to be some notice of a motion of that kind, so that Senators may be advised of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to say to Senators——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can proceed only by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Unless we meet here at 11 o'clock and go on a little later each evening it will be impossible for us to get on without night sessions, and I think it better to meet at 11 o'clock than to meet in the evening.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing to meet at 11 o'clock if the rest of the Senate is. I do not object, except that I do not think it fair to make a motion to change the hour of meeting at the end of the session, just as we are going to adjourn, and in the absence of so many Senators.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the only time I could make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is present.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Texas to withdraw his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Texas has been disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; then I submit my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate do now adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" have it.

Mr. VANCE. Let us have the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. SPOONER (after having voted in the affirmative). Did the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] vote on this question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I withhold my vote, as I am paired with him.

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the affirmative). Did the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York withdraws his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Allison,	Frye,	Ingalls,	Teller.
Cullom,	Hale,	Platt,
Edmunds,	Hawley,	Sawyer,

NAYS—7.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Gray,	Vance.

Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has voted. The Chair holds that less than a quorum can not change the order of the Senate requiring the daily hour of meeting to be 12 o'clock. A quorum not being present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the circumstances, Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 10, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 9, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W H. MILBURN, D. D.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. Clause 1 of Rule I provides that—

The Speaker shall take the chair on every legislative day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned at the last sitting, immediately call the members to order, and on the appearance of a quorum cause the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting to be read, having previously examined and approved the same.

I make the point of order that the Journal can not be read until it is ascertained that a quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. That point of order was made during the last session of Congress, and the Chair sustained it. It is not only a rule of the House, but the Constitution itself provides that it shall require a majority of the members elect to transact business; and the reading and approval of the Journal is the transaction of business, because the Journal is nothing more than memoranda made by an officer of the House, until it is approved by the House.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following members answered to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and three gentlemen are present, and there is a quorum.

Mr. WEAVER. I move the House adjourn; and pending that motion, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be until Friday next.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the roll-call, as directed by the Speaker, was for the purpose of knowing whether there was a quorum present, and when the Speaker found a quorum present the next requirement is that the Journal be read.

The SPEAKER. The requirement is, the Speaker shall direct that the Journal be read. The Chair thinks the House may adjourn to prevent the reading of the Journal at any time it thinks proper. Such motions have been made before, and the House has adjourned without the reading of the Journal.

The question was taken on adjournment until Friday; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 139.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The Chair appointed Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP as tellers.

Mr. JACKSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CRISP (to Mr. JACKSON). Do not do that; we will get a quorum presently.

Mr. JACKSON. I will withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

After some time spent in counting, the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 139.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has yet voted.

The tellers continued the count, and finally reported—ayes none, noes 163.

So the motion that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next was disagreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes none, noes 115.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 106.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has yet voted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to know whether during the attempt to obtain a quorum it would be in order for Mr. CRISP to address the House on the rights of a minority being protected under our form of Government. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It would not.

The tellers again reported—aye 1, noes 163; so the motion to adjourn till Saturday was not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CRISP. I make the point of order that that is more than three days.

The SPEAKER. It is four days.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I move that the House take a recess until half past 2 o'clock.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 153.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum?

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 90.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has yet voted.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] whether there is anything else that can be done to protect the rights of the minority. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia has said nothing to indicate that he was at all objecting to this.

Mr. PAYSON. How does the minority feel about it?

Mr. ROGERS. There is no minority.

Mr. WEAVER. This is a fight for the rights of the majority.

Mr. PAYSON. I think we ought to be advised as to how "the minority" himself [Mr. WEAVER] feels as to his own situation. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 9211) for the relief of Jesse Durnell; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc.

It also announced disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as managers of said conference on its part Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. MORGAN.

It further announced the adoption of a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, for printing the report of the National Academy of Sciences for 1887.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Upon the pending question the tellers report—ayes 2, noes 161. The noes have it and the motion is not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House take a recess until half past 1 o'clock.

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes none, noes 81.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 117.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). No quorum has voted. There is evidently a quorum present in the House, and the Chair hopes members will come forward and vote.

Mr. STEELE (at half past 1 o'clock p. m.). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the time named in the pending motion to take a recess has arrived, and that the motion therefore falls, and I now call up the bill (S. 944) to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth Scott.

Mr. WEAVER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] that the House is dividing, and no quorum has voted.

Mr. STEELE. But the time during which it was proposed that the House should take a recess has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is under consideration, and it is for the House to determine. The Chair will again remind members that no quorum has voted. There is obviously a quorum present, and the Chair hopes that gentlemen will come forward and vote and make a quorum.

Mr. STEELE. But the hour to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] moved to take a recess having expired, is it not in order to make that point?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter for the House to determine. The Chair will state to the gentleman [Mr. STEELE] further that even if that question were determined his motion would not be in order, because the Journal of yesterday's proceedings has not yet been read. No motion is in order until after the Journal has been read.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to discuss the point of order, but I yield now to my friend from Michigan [Mr. BREWER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to inquire if protection to the rights of the minority is the palladium of our liberties to-day? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry. If members who are present desire that the business of the House shall proceed they will come forward and vote and make a quorum. It is for them to determine whether the business of the House shall be blocked in this way or not.

The tellers reported—ayes none, noes 152.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. McCREARY. I move a call of the House.

Mr. McCULLOGH. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCULLOGH. When a motion is made and, upon a vote, the ayes are none, does not the motion fail?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not unless there is a quorum. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] insists upon the point that no quorum has voted. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] that a call of the House be ordered.

A call of the House was ordered—ayes 73, noes 5.

The roll was called when the following members failed to answer to their names.

Anderson, Kans.	De Lano,	Laird,	Rayner,
Arnold,	Dorsey,	Lind,	Russell, Mass.
Bacon,	Dougherty,	Lyman,	Rusk,
Barry,	Dunham,	Lynch,	Ryan,

Crouse,	Lagan,	Pidcock,

The following members were absent on leave:

Breckinridge, Ark.,	Fitch,	Maffett,	Thomas, Ky.,
Carlton,	Gay,	Mahoney,	Whitthorne.
Caruth,	Guenther,	Neal,
Caswell,	Laird,	Parker,
Dougherty,	Lyman,	Penington,

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The roll-call discloses the presence of 232 members, being more than a quorum.

Mr. McCREARY. As a quorum is present, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion of Mr. McCREARY was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House take a recess until forty minutes past 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is already a motion pending, which must be determined. The tellers will resume their places. The question is on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], that the House take a recess until half past 1 o'clock to-day.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I make a point of order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order which the Chair understands the gentleman desires to make has already been overruled. This is a question which must be determined by the House.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that it is now 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter for the House. The motion having been made must be voted on. The House is dividing on the question.

Mr. WEAVER. I make the point that the vote must now be taken de novo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so holds.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the pending motion is that the House take a recess until half past 1 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It now being half an hour past that time, what would be the effect of this motion if adopted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will determine that when the House votes upon the proposition.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But my point is this: If the motion were adopted, would it not throw us over until half past 1 o'clock to-morrow? I ask the question in good faith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New Jersey that such would not be the effect.

The House again divided; and after some time the tellers reported—aye 1, noes 162.

So the motion of Mr. WEAVER was not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House take a recess until fifteen minutes past 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER (having put the question). The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 3, noes 34.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. CRISP. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 48 voting therefor.

So the question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 3, nays 184, not voting 136; as follows:

YEAS—3.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WEAVER. I have no objection to the Journal being read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PURCHASE OF SEED FOR TURTLE MOUNTAIN CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation for the purchase of seed for the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF STALLIONS FOR NORTHERN CHEYENNE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of appropriations for the purchase of stallions for the Northern Cheyenne Indians, Tongue River agency, Montana; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation for the Indian industrial school at Genoa; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a supplemental report of the Mississippi River Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting the report of the operations of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 9211) for the relief of Jesse Durnell;

A bill (H. R. 11794) to amend the postal laws of the United States in reference to letters bearing special-delivery stamps; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inauguration ceremonies flags, etc.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of committee work.

OFFICIAL WAR RECORDS.

Mr. GROSVENOR, by unanimous consent, presented the following from the Military Historical Society of Massachusetts, accompanied by a resolution of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, Commandery of the State of Massachusetts, appealing to Congress to make such ample appropriation for the printing of the official war records as will secure their speedy publication and distribution; which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

THE MILITARY HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, December 13, 1888.

At a regularly called and duly organized meeting of the Military Historical Society of Massachusetts, held December 10, 1888, the following vote was unanimously passed;

"Voted, That the Military Historical Society of Massachusetts, composed chiefly of officers who were engaged in the war of the rebellion, urgently appeals to Congress to make such necessary appropriation as shall secure the speedy publication and distribution of the officia lwar records."

CHAS. DEVENS, President.

A true copy.
Attest:

ALPHEUS H. HARDY,
Secretary Military Historical Society of Massachusetts.

MILITARY ORDER OF THE LOYAL LEGION OF THE UNITED STATES,
COMMANDERY OF THE STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, December —, 1888.

At a stated meeting of this commandery, held December 5, 1888, it was—

"Voted, That this commandery, representing nearly seven hundred officers who were in the United States Army during the war of the rebellion, earnestly appeals to Congress to make such ample appropriation for the printing of the official war records as will secure their speedy publication and distribution."

A true copy from the records.
Attest:

ARNOLD A. RAND, Recorder.

SITE FOR TESTING HEAVY ORDNANCE, ETC.

Mr. HIRES, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 248) authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase a suitable site for testing heavy ordnance and making experiments in gunnery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent the adoption of the following resolution.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And I ask consent at the same time that this order be considered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let this be adopted first.

The SPEAKER. After the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois has been read the gentleman from Ohio can then ask consent to modify it.

The resolution of Mr. SPRINGER was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, January 17, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and at 4 o'clock p. m. of said day the same shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon in the committee, and the previous question shall then be considered as ordered upon all such amendments, and upon ordering the said bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and upon the passage of the same, and the votes thereon shall be taken in the House before adjournment and without intervening motions or business.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now I ask unanimous consent that this order be considered at the same time.

Mr. BRUMM. I object to the consideration of that.

Mr. SPRINGER. The consideration of the resolution is not asked. I simply ask unanimous consent to adopt the resolution.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let this come in as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio can ask the gentleman from Illinois to so modify his own request as to include that of the gentleman; but the consideration is not asked for, and therefore it is not amendable.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to an order being made in that case after the House shall have adopted the order I have submitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUMM and others objected.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House now take a recess until thirty minutes past 4 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. STEELE, Mr. BUCHANAN, and others. Regular order.

Mr. BRUMM. We do not need any more special orders.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We have not had much luck lately with these special orders.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REED. I do not think it is worth while; perhaps you had better refer it to a Democratic caucus. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CHIPMAN: A bill (H. R. 12024) for the relief of Stephen Martin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. S. V. WHITE: Of printers and others, of New York and Brooklyn.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 10, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CLASSIFICATION OF GILL-NETS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 5th instant, a decision of the Department concerning the classification, under the existing statutes, of netting imported in webs or pieces in bales as it comes from the machine, intended for use in the manufacture of gill-nets or seines; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with section 1 of an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, the second annual report made by the Interstate Commerce Commission to that Department under date of December 1, 1888; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, with the accompanying report, will lie on the table and be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. CULLOM. I think, in view of the fact that that is a very important document and the subject of it is engaging the attention of the country very largely just now, there ought to be an increased number of copies printed. I move that the document be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed, 2,000 of which shall be for the use of the Senate and 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. REAGAN. Including the appendix?

Mr. CULLOM. Including the appendix.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, with the accompanying report, will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The motion to print, under the rules, will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CULLOM. I will put it in writing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order can be made without the resolution being put in writing. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection. The motion is referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the appendix will be included in the report.

The motion was subsequently reduced to writing in the form of a concurrent resolution, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring herein), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the second annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the appendices thereto; 2,000 of said copies to be for the use of the Senate and 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Mrs. C. C. Williams, of Indianapolis, Las Animas County, Colorado, praying for woman suffrage; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the National Farmers' Congress, favoring certain legislation with reference to agriculture, trusts, cattle disease, national banks, free coinage of silver, interstate commerce, and other subjects; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of John Simon, late a private in the Second Battery of Light Artillery, Vermont Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of Mrs. F. K. Cottrell and 98 other citizens of Guthrie County, Iowa, praying for the enactment of a law securing Sunday to the people as a day of rest; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of D. Collins and 82 other citizens of Guthrie County, Iowa, praying for the enactment of a law forbidding Sunday work in the mail and military service of the United States, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FAULKNER. I present a petition from the State Grange of West Virginia, signed by its president and secretary, under the seal of the grange, praying for the passage of Senate bill 3729, to prevent the manufacture and sale of adulterated articles and the use of misleading brands of food, medicines, liquors, etc. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I also present a petition from the State Grange of West Virginia, authenticated in the same form, praying for the passage of House bill 11027, for the prevention of the manufacture and sale of adulterated and misbranded lard. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition quite numerously signed by members of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Nebraska, and ex-Union soldiers belonging to Frank P. Blair Post, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of Mrs. Lucinda Gould, of Montpelier, Vt., praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3663) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, and Platte County, in the State of Missouri, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 124) relating to the salary of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3713) granting an increase of pension to Maria A. Rousseau, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3721) authorizing the President to appoint William English an officer in the Regular Army of the United States, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PALMER (for Mr. INGALLS) introduced a bill (S. 3801) granting an increase of pension to Addison M. Copen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 3802) granting a pension to Mary Hayne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 3803) for the relief of Miss Anna Ella Carroll; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3804) for the relief of the inhabitants of the town of Flagstaff, county of Yavapai, Territory of Arizona; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3805) granting a pension to Betsey Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE CLAIM.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to re-examine and audit the claim of the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864, for which reimbursement was provided by act of April 12, 1864 (14 Statutes, page 32), and to report the balance found due thereon for the consideration of Congress, provided the appropriation made by said act is not available for the payment thereof.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolutions; which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed, when the river and harbor appropriation bill shall be reported, to report as to each public work for which an appropriation is made in said bill the facts which render such appropriation advisable and of national importance, and the condition of the work if begun.

Resolved, That there be an assistant clerk of the Committee on Commerce, to be paid a yearly salary of ——, to be appointed by the said committee.

H. V. POOR.

Mr. HOAR. I submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid to H. V. Poor, from the contingent fund of the Senate, the sum of $1,500 for his services under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations in obtaining and digesting information with regard to the relations of this country with Canada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHACE in the chair). The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it must be referred finally to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, but I desire to have the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Relations in the first place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Jacob Cramer be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. VEST. I hope the motion will not prevail. We are getting along now very satisfactorily with the tariff bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable except by unanimous consent. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask for a division.

There were on a division—ayes 25, noes 11; not a quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON. The yeas and nays will disclose the presence of a quorum. I ask for them.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I have transferred my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], so as to enable the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FARWELL. I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is detained in his committee-room, and asked me to pair with him on this question. I announce the pair.

Mr. MORGAN. I inquire if the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allison,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Berry,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Blair,	George,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Chace,	Hale,	Payne,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Platt,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Ingalls,	Pugh,

NAYS—17.

Blackburn,	Colquitt,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.
Butler,	Gibson,	Turpie.
Cockrell,	Gray,	Vance,
Coke,	Hampton,	Vest,

ABSENT—28.

Aldrich,	Bowen,	Edmunds	Harris,
Bate,	Call,	Eustis,	Hearst,
Beck,	Daniel,	Evarts,	Hoar,
Blodgett,	Dawes,	Farwell,	Jones of Arkansas,

Jones of Nevada,	Morgan,	Quay,	Sabin,
Kenna,	Paddock,	Ransom,	Stanford,
McPherson,	Pasco,	Riddleberger,	Voorhees.

So the motion was agreed to.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute reported from the Committee on Finance will be resumed at paragraph 411.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

411. Leather.—Bend or belting leather and sole-leather and leather not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

412. Calf-skins, tanned, or tanned and dressed, dressed upper-leather, including patent enameled and japanned leather, and skins of all kinds not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, and chamois-skins, dressed or undressed and finished, 25 cents per pound; sheep and goat skins, including lamb and kid skins, dressed and finished, 20 per cent. ad valorem; skins for morocco, tanned but unfinished, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

413. But leather cut into shoe uppers or vamps, or other forms, suitable for conversion into manufactured articles, shall be classified as manufactures of leather, and pay duty accordingly.

Mr. VANCE. In paragraph 412, line 1732, I move to strike out "25 cents per pound" and insert "20 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1732, after the word "finished," it is proposed to strike out "25 cents per pound" and insert "20 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

Calf-skins, tanned, or tanned and dressed, dressed upper-leather, including patent enameled and japanned leather, and skins of all kinds not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, and chamois-skins, dressed or undressed and finished, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I believe I have heard no complaint anywhere about the duties upon leather. I believe there has been no application, at least I have known of none, to increase the duty on this kind of leather. Leather is the most profitable perhaps of all our trades, for various reasons, the principal one of which is that the raw material of leather, hides, is permitted to come into the country duty free.

This is a change from 20 per cent. ad valorem, which is the existing law, to 25 cents per pound. The expert in the Treasury Department in making the calculation stated that he was unable, for want of data, to show what this increase would be, but it is evidently a very considerable increase; and as we do not need the revenue, and as there seems to be little or no complaint in relation to the inadequacy of the protection afforded by the present law, I hope that the present law will be maintained at the rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem upon these leather goods.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is mistaken in stating that there is no complaint as respects the existing rate of duty on leather. Those who have had special examination of this part of the bill have had many requests to increase the duty on leather. But the objection made by the leather manufacturers as to this particular item is that we have on a large amount of leather reduced the duty; that is to say, 25 cents a pound is a less rate of duty than 20 per cent. ad valorem; and those of us who have this matter under special consideration are now examining the question as to whether this particular provision should not be changed to an ad valorem rate on the ground that it is a large reduction of the duty, which perhaps would be unjust to many manufacturers of leather in this country.

I hope the Senator will allow his amendment to lie over for the time being and call it up again.

Mr. VANCE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Paragraph 412 will be passed over informally, and the reading of the substitute will be resumed at paragraph 414.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

414. Lime, 5 cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if this change from ad valorem to specific upon lime is not a large increase. It would appear from the computation of the Treasury Department to be an increase of nearly 400 per cent., from 10 per cent. ad valorem to 5 cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that it is an increase.

Mr. VANCE. Is there any particular reason for it?

Mr. ALLISON. Just the percentage of increase I would not like to state. At present lime really pays no duty, because under existing law packages are not included, and the duty is assessed upon the lime in packages without valuing the packages at all. It was deemed by those who are most familiar with the lime question necessary to have a specific duty in order to correct a general disposition to undervalue this particular article. I think this paragraph is an increase of duty, I will say frankly to the Senator.

Mr. VANCE. I move to make the duty 10 per cent. ad valorem, instead of 5 cents per hundred pounds. I can not see any necessity for this increase to so great an amount on a small importation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 414 it is proposed to strike out "5 cents per hundred pounds" and insert "10 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

Lime, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to call attention to the fact that the export lists show that in 1887 we exported $107,770 worth of lime and cement, and in 1888 $122,421 worth. So it seems that we supply the domestic demand and then have a quantity of it for export.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAMPTON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. I see he is not in his seat, and I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina withdraws his vote.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to inquire if the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] responded to his name?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Then I withdraw my vote. I agreed to pair with him. He is detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bate,	Coke,	Gorman,	Vest,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Gray,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Payne,	Walthall,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Butler,	George,	Turpie,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Vance,

NAYS—27.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Blair,	Frye,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Hale,	Paddock,	Stockbridge.
Chace,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

ABSENT—27.

Beck,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Daniel,	Hearst,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Stewart.
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

415. Manufactures of alabaster, amber, asbestos, bladders, coral, cork or cork bark, catgut or whip-gut or worm-gut, jet, paste, spar, or wax, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1743, I move to strike out "cork or cork bark." I do so with a view of inserting the words after the word "chip," in line 1748, when that paragraph shall have been reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1743 it is proposed to strike out the words "cork or cork bark."

Mr. VANCE. What is the object of the Senator in having those words stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. In order to insert them later on, in the next paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "act," in line 1746, I move to insert the words "and osier or willow prepared for basket-makers' use."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to offer an amendment to paragraph 415.

The present law is 10 per cent. ad valorem. The increase proposed by the Committee on Finance is to 25 per cent. ad valorem, being an increase of the present duty of just 160 per cent. I move to strike out the words "25 per cent." and insert "10 per cent."

This is another large increase upon a small article, and as we do not need the duty I can see no object upon earth for increasing it, except to embarrass the Treasury and to oblige the manufacturers of these small articles of ornament.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 1346 and 1347 it is proposed to strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so as to read "10 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that some of the articles included in this paragraph are now at 10 per cent., some at 20, some at 25, and some at 30 per cent. We gathered them into a single paragraph and put them at 25 per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FARWELL. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Coke,	Gorman,	Vance,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Gray,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Reagan,	Voorhees,
Butler,	George,	Saulsbury,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Turpie,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Allison,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Stockbridge.
Blair,	Frye,	Paddock,	Teller,
Brown,	Hale,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Platt,
Chace,	Hiscock,	Plumb,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Sherman,

ABSENT—31.

Beck,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Call,	Hampton,	Mitchell,	Sabin,
Daniel,	Harris,	Morgan,	Sawyer,
Davis,	Hearst,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Payne,	Stewart.
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

416. Manufactures of bone, chip, fur, grass, horn, india rubber, palm-leaf, straw, weeds, or whalebone, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert, after the word "chip," the words "cork or cork bark."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1748, after the word "chip," it is proposed to insert "cork or cork bark."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

417. Manufactures of leather, gutta-percha, human hair, and papier-maché, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

418. Manufactures of ivory, vegetable ivory, mother-of-pearl, and shell, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I move, in line 1761, to strike out "40" and insert "34.31," which is the present law. The existing law establishes a duty of 34.31 per cent. The House made no change in that duty, but the Senate bill increases it to 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri will notice that 34.31 per cent. is the average. The rate on a large part is now at 35; it varies from 25 to 40. It would hardly be proper to insert a rate of 34.31, a complicated rate like that.

Mr. VEST. Why should there be an increase? I do not care anything about the fraction. Make it 35 per cent., if you will. I make the motion to strike out "40" and insert "35" per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. The reason is that those who are engaged in the manufacture of ivory in this country can not compete with those who are engaged in the manufacture of ivory in Europe. These are all articles of luxury, and I am surprised at the Senator trying to reduce the duty.

Mr. VEST. We have heard that so long that it has become nauseous. Whenever there is an increase of duty, whether it is an article of necessity or of luxury, our friends on the other side are as compact as the Old Guard at Waterloo; but if there is an increase on an article of necessity, then we hear something about American labor. That will not do. The whole object on the other side of the Chamber seems to be to increase the duty without regard to the nature of the article at all. I can not find any data to ascertain what are the exports of these articles, though I find the imports laid down here upon the calculation of the committee. But I will modify my motion and say 35 per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1761 it is proposed to strike out "40" and insert "35;" so as to read:

418. Manufactures of ivory, vegetable ivory, mother-of-pearl, and shell, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. But for that I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transferred my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] and will vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BROWN (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to change my vote to "nay;" and in this connection I will say that I think these pearls and ivory are articles of luxury, and I prefer that the duty should stand as it is. I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the negative). I promised the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to see that he was paired and I have heard no pair announced with him, and therefore I withdraw my vote and allow my pair to stand with the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. I should vote "nay," but as it does not appear to be necessary that I should vote to make a quorum, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Berry,	Eustis,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Butler,	George,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Turpie,
Coke,	Gray,	Vance,

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Blair,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	Hale,	Paddock,	Teller,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chace,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Manderson,	Sherman,

ABSENT—29.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Beck,	Evarts,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Call,	Hampton,	Pasco,	Stewart.
Daniel,	Harris,	Plumb,
Davis,	Hearst,	Pugh,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be resumed at paragraph 419.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

419. Marble of all kinds.—In block, rough or squared, 65 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "forty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 764 it is proposed to strike out the words "sixty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

419. Marble of all kinds.—In block, rough or squared, 40 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. VEST. I see by the report from the Treasury Department of 1880 that the cost of the labor of marble and stone work is 32.6 per cent. of the product. Here is a duty of 53.8 per cent. ad valorem to compensate, I suppose, or make up the difference between the price of labor in this country and abroad, and I see no necessity for increasing this duty over the House bill from 40 to 53.8 per cent. I move, therefore, to reduce the duty, and ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and would vote "nay" if he were here; but I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAMPTON. I will announce once for all that I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the negative). I notice that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska withdraws his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Payne,	Vest,
Cockrell,	George,	Reagan,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Gibson,	Saulsbury,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Gray,	Turpie,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hiscock,	Sherman,
Blair,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Brown,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Frye,	Paddock,	Teller,
Chace,	Hale,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Hawley,	Platt,

ABSENT—33.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Beck,	Evarts,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Berry,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Blodgett,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Harris,	Pasco,	Stewart.
Call,	Hearst,	Plumb,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

420. Veined marble, sawed, dressed, or otherwise, including marble slabs and marble paving-tiles, $1.10 per cubic foot (but in measurement no slab shall be computed at less than 1 inch in thickness).

421. Manufactures of marble not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

422. Matches, friction or lucifer, of all descriptions, per gross of 144 boxes, containing not more than 100 matches per box, 10 cents per gross; when imported otherwise than in boxes containing not more than 100 matches each, 1 cent per 1,000 matches.

Mr. VANCE. I rise to make an inquiry of the Senators having charge of the bill whether or not this is an increase in the duty on matches. We are without information from the Treasury Department as to whether it is an increase or not. If it is not an increase, the Senators on that side having the bill in charge ought to know.

Mr. ALLISON. I am quite sure it is no increase.

Mr. VANCE. Then what is the object of changing it from an ad valorem to a specific duty?

Mr. ALLISON. To make a specific duty instead of an ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. To prevent undervaluation, I suppose?

Mr. ALLISON. The old story; yes.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, "the old, old story." If the Senator can not give me any assurance that it is not an increase, I think I may take it for granted that it is "the old, old story" and contains two versions generally, one to prevent undervaluation and the other to increase the duties upon these articles of common necessity. With that impression of the story, I move to strike out the words "10 cents per gross," in lines 1774 and 1775, and insert the words of the present law, "35 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 1774 and 1775 it is proposed to strike out the words "10 cents per gross" and insert "35 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read:

422. Matches, friction or lucifer, of all descriptions, per gross of 144 boxes, containing not more than 100 matches per box, 35 per cent. ad valorem; when imported otherwise than in boxes containing not more than 100 matches each, 1 cent per 1,000 matches.

Mr. ALLISON. The experts of the Treasury Department say that the specific rates proposed are equivalent to the present ad valorem rates as ascertained by actual test at the custom-house, and that both these articles have been troublesome on account of undervaluation.

Mr. VEST. Equivalent, but not more?

Mr. ALLISON. Are equivalent to the present ad valorem rates as ascertained by actual test at the custom-house.

Mr. VEST. The reports of the Treasury Department as to the cost of labor in the production of this very necessary article, used everywhere and for all purposes throughout the United States, is that the labor cost is 11.5 per cent. The duty is 35 per cent. in the existing law, made the same in the Senate bill, and I should like very much to reduce the duties myself in the existing law. So much was said yesterday about going outside of the Mills bill that I think I shall not persist to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be again reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 1774 and 1775 it is proposed to strike out "10 cents per gross" and insert "35 per cent. ad valorem."

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I have transferred my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (after voting in the negative). I have voted, but I notice now that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] is not present, with whom I am paired, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Coke,	Gray,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Vest,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	George,	Reagan,	Walthall.

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Blair,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Plumb,
Brown,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Chace,	Hale,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Teller.

ABSENT—32.

Allison,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Frye,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Call,	Hampton,	Pasco,	Stewart,
Daniel,	Harris,	Pugh,	Turpie,
Davis,	Hearst,	Quay,	Wilson of Iowa,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

423. Cocoa matting and mats.—Matting, 10 cents per square yard; mats, 5 cents per square foot.

424. Paintings, in oil or water colors, and statuary, not otherwise provided for in this act, 30 per cent. ad valorem; but the term "statuary" as herein used shall be understood to include only such statuary as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from a solid block or mass of marble, stone, or alabaster, or from metal, and as is the professional production of a statuary or sculptor only.

Mr. VEST. I do not know that I exactly understand the effect of this provision, but it seems to me that it is not right. By the provisions of this paragraph 424, "such statuary as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from a solid block or mass of marble, stone, or alabaster, or from metal, and as is the professional production of a statuary or sculptor only," is put under a duty of 30 per cent. I will not stop to enter into a criticism upon the language in lines 1785 and 1786, "the professional production of a statuary or sculptor only."

I do not know how a "statuary" or a "sculptor" if he is engaged in his profession could make any other production except a professional one. He might turn himself into an amateur and go back to his profession, but it would be right hard for the excise officers to find that out. But what I want to call attention to particularly is this: That where there is any statue made out of marble, stone, alabaster, or metal, by machinery and not by hand, it is not included within this clause, as I supposed. If made of alabaster, for instance, it would come in under section 415, which says that—

Manufactures of alabaster, amber, asbestos, bladders, coral, cork or cork bark, cat-gut or whip-gut or worm-gut, jet, paste, spar, or wax, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Then if a statue should be made out of alabaster by machinery it would bear only 25 per cent. duty, whereas if it was made by hand it would bear 30 per cent. duty. Is that the meaning of the committee? It seems to me if any discrimination is made it ought to be made in favor of the statue which is made by hand. A higher duty is put upon that—30 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. In that particular case it is 30 per cent. and in the other 25.

Mr. VEST. Exactly; the higher duty is put upon the hand work and not upon the machine work.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me that ought not to be done.

I saw not long since in the Scientific American a very interesting account of the manufacture of all sorts of statuary out of stone and marble and even of metal by a turning lathe, invented by a New England mechanic. I recollect some years ago in the Statuary Room of the Capitol I saw statuettes of Webster, Clay, and Calhoun, all made by the turning-lathe, a very extraordinary thing to me; but that is the statement of the Scientific American, and those samples were put here. I recollect that the gentleman who invented that lathe was applying for an extension of his patent and he brought this product of his work here for an exhibition to Congress.

It seems to me that this distinction ought not to be made as between the hand work and the work that is made by machinery, the increase of burden being put upon the artist who exercises his genius and his proficiency; and because he does that the preference is given to the machine work and the smaller duty is put upon that.

Mr. ALDRICH. That only applies to alabaster.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me we ought to encourage the artists of this country abroad who make these works and bring them back for the American people.

Mr. ALDRICH. The article of alabaster work to which the Senator alludes is a very insignificant and unimportant one.

Mr. VEST. I know that.

Mr. ALDRICH. So far as the section applies to manufactures of marble it would increase the duty from 30 to 50 per cent., and that, I understand, being the purpose of the Senator from Missouri, his wish will be gratified except as to alabaster, which is a very insignificant and unimportant matter.

Mr. VEST. The only point I make is that I do not think we ought to increase the duty or impose additional burdens upon the works of an American artist abroad because he does it with his hand, because it is the production of his genius, his original invention, if I may use the expression, in his profession.

Mr. ALDRICH. We do exactly what the Senator from Missouri wants, with the exception of alabaster, for the purpose of making a uniformity in regard to these articles.

Mr. VEST. But I state that it applies also to marble, stone, and metal.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon; so far as marble is concerned the rate on professional productions is retained exactly as at present. If they are mechanical reproductions they pay 50 per cent. ad valorem, and pay the same rate under existing law.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope that before this bill has passed from the final consideration of the committee the committee will conclude to put all works of art, both painting and sculpture, upon the free-list. I do not believe there is any American artist who desires to have his work protected as against the free competition of all mankind. It does not come at all, it seems to me, within any argument which is advanced in favor of a protective tariff. The genius of an artist is neither developed nor encouraged nor in any way helped by a policy which gives him any advantage which does not belong to him as a matter of pure superiority and merit.

I do not propose to make any motion. I desire to defer to the committee in regard to the bill; but I trust the committee will come to that conclusion, which I believe is the desire of every American who is engaged in the production of works of art, either of painting or of sculpture, without any considerable exception.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Massachusetts will refer to some subsequent paragraphs he will see some rather similar provisions in this bill about which he has spoken, paragraphs 791, 792, 793, upon the subject of works of art, paintings, sculpture, etc.; but those can be discussed when we reach them.

I go back now in regard to the point I made with reference to this paragraph, about which I do not think I can be mistaken. Let me say to the Senator from Rhode Island by way of an object lesson, suppose an American artist abroad makes a statuette out of alabaster with his own hands as an original work of art; he brings it into the United States, and unless it comes under paragraphs 791, 792, and 793, hereafter he must pay 30 per cent. duty.

Mr. ALDRICH. If an American artist living abroad produced it, it would come in free.

Mr. VEST. Say it is not an American artist, because that is not the point I am making; suppose it is some other artist. He then pays 30 per cent. ad valorem. Now, suppose it is made by machinery; he pays 25 per cent. ad valorem. Very good. Now, I say there is no reason for the distinction.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will follow up the inquiry he will find that if made of marble and an original production the artist will pay 30 per cent., and if it is a mechanical reproduction he will pay 50 per cent. If of metal the original would be 30 per cent. and the duplication 45 per cent. So what the Senator says with regard to alabaster does not apply to anything but alabaster.

Mr. VEST. If machinery has been applied—and I think that can be used by way of this turning-lathe to the creation of statuary—then what I say would apply just as well to stone and metal as to alabaster. The argument is just the same. If the artist is a foreign artist and uses a turning-lathe to produce statuary, then he pays only 25 per cent. when he brings it to this country; but if he does it by hand he pays 30 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. That difficulty can be obviated by the Senator from Missouri moving to increase the rate on the manufactures of alabaster.

Mr. VEST. I am not for increasing just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHACE in the chair). There being no amendment proposed, the Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary read as follows:

425. Pearls, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out "25" and insert "10."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1787 it is proposed to strike out "25" and insert "10;" so as to read:

Pearls, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I hope that matter will not be taken up until the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] returns to the Chamber. This is an article of luxury, and he, I believe, has a very settled conviction that no duty ought to be decreased on an article of luxury, without regard to the surplus in the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection——

Mr. VEST. For myself I do not object to any decrease on anything in this bill, but I know the Senator from Georgia would feel aggrieved if the duty were decreased on an article of luxury while he was absent.

Mr. VANCE. I ask, in order that there may be no mistake, whether the Senator from Iowa is aware that this is a decrease.

Mr. VEST. A decrease of 15 per cent.

Mr. VANCE. I suppose there is no mistake about that. From 25 per cent. to 10 per cent. is a decrease.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the same rate as provided for in the existing law.

Mr. VEST. But it is an article of luxury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri make any motion?

Mr. VEST. No, sir.

Mr. VANCE. We have an increase on matches and a decrease on pearls!

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, Mr. President, though jewelry is put up to a rate of 40 or 45 per cent., I think that pearls had better be kept at 25, and I believe the good sense of every Senator is already convinced that there is no object in putting on a duty that can not be collected, for all experience shows that smuggling occurs in every case where jewelry, gold watches, pearls, or things of that kind which can be carried in the pocket are put at a high rate. I shall vote as I did yesterday for a practical rule rather than what might sometimes be called a demagogical rule. It is very popular to say that these things ought to pay the highest duties. That is true, but we ought not to levy a duty so high that it can not be collected.

Mr. VANCE. It seems to me that general articles of jewelry are things which it is very easy to get in by smuggling, and pearls and jewelry are taxed at 25 per cent., and yesterday jewelry was increased to 40. A man can smuggle other species of jewelry quite as easily as pearls, and pearls are in general use in connection with jewelry, generally set in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays. I should like to see a record made on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Blair,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Evarts,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Frye,	Palmer,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Payne,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Platt,

NAYS—20.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Pugh,	Vance,
Berry,	George,	Saulsbury,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Spooner,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Jones of Arkansas,	Teller,	Walthall.
Coke,	Plumb,	Turpie,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—31.

Beck,	Call,	Davis,	Gray,
Blodgett,	Cameron,	Farwell,	Hale,
Bowen,	Cockrell,	Faulkner,	Hampton,
Butler,	Daniel,	Gorman,	Harris,

Hearst,	Kenna,	Quay,	Sabin,
Hoar,	McPherson,	Ransom,	Stanford,
Ingalls,	Morgan,	Reagan,	Stewart.
Jones of Nevada,	Pasco,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

426. Pencils of wood filled with lead or other material, and pencils of lead, 50 cents per gross and 30 per cent. ad valorem.
427. Pencil-leads not in wood, 10 per cent. ad valorem.
428. Percussion-caps, 40 per cent. ad valorem.
429. Pipes, pipe-bowls, and cigar-holders of wood, one-half of 1 cent each and 70 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. The present law imposes a duty upon these articles of pipes, pipe-bowls, and cigar-holders, made of wood, of 70 per cent. This addition for a half a cent each, 6 cents a dozen, would amount in many cases on many qualities of these goods to 200 or 300 per cent. I move to strike out the words "one-half of 1 cent each and," in line 1795, so that the rate will remain as in the present law, which is certainly high enough.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 429, line 1795, it is proposed to strike out "one-half of 1 cent each and;" so as to read:

429. Pipes, pipe-bowls, and cigar-holders of wood, 70 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. MORRILL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and I vote "nay."

Mr. FARWELL. I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is paired with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. Is my vote recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The votes of both the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] are recorded.

Mr. ALLISON. Both recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I am reminded that I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and therefore I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote of the Senator from Illinois will be withdrawn.

Mr. STEWART. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], and withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Vance,
Berry,	George,	Payne,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Gorman,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Plumb,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Chace,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hale,	Palmer,	Teller.
Dawes,	Hawley,	Platt,

ABSENT—33.

Allison,	Daniel,	Ingalls,	Sabin,
Beck,	Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Sherman,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Gray,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Butler,	Hampton,	Pasco,	Wilson of Iowa.
Call,	Harris,	Quay,
Cameron,	Hearst,	Ransom,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

430. All smokers' articles whatsoever, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, including cigarette-books, cigarette-book covers, and cigarette-paper in all forms, 70 per cent. ad valorem.
431. All common tobacco-pipes of clay, 35 per cent. ad valorem.
432. Pearl and shell buttons, 2 cents per line button measure of one-fortieth of 1 inch per gross, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. What necessity is there for the increase of duty on pearl and shell buttons, except the fact of the large importation?

Mr. ALLISON. It is impossible for our manufacturers of pearl buttons to compete at the present rate of duty.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose I might add to that that the importations to this country are largely foreign prison-labor buttons that are brought here at an undervaluation with practically no price upon them.

Mr. VEST. That would apply particularly to these?

Mr. HISCOCK. That applies particularly to this clause. I might add in this connection that in some countries in which these buttons are made the manufacturers are prohibited from selling them in those countries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

433. Plush, black, known commercially as hatters' plush, composed of silk, or of silk and cotton, and used exclusively for making men's hats, 10 per cent. ad valorem.
434. Precious stones of all kinds, cut but not set, 10 per cent. ad valorem; if set, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. In line 1810, after the word "set," I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert "twenty-five."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 434, line 1810, after the word "set," it is proposed to strike out "10" and insert "25;" so as to read:

434. Precious stones of all kinds, cut but not set, 25 per cent. ad valorem; if set, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I am aware of the plea given why this duty is kept so low, that it is on account of the facility of smuggling the article; but I can not reconcile piling duties mountain high upon the common necessaries of life which are used by the poor, and this article being upon our statute-book permitted to come in at only 10 per cent., therefore I make the motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. The rate fixed upon diamonds cut, but not set, is the same as in the existing law. At various times in the history of American legislation the rates have been fixed very much higher than the rate here proposed, and the experience of the Treasury Department has been that more revenue was collected at the lower rate, and I understand that to collect revenue is, according to the theory of the Senator from North Carolina, the purpose of tariff legislation. More revenue has been collected at 10 per cent. ad valorem than at 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The Senator from North Carolina understands, as well as any Senator on this side, that diamonds are very easily smuggled, and if a high rate is imposed the duty will not be paid at all. The danger of the detection of smuggling does not deter people who desire to avoid the payment of a large duty from bringing in an article like that; and if revenue is the purpose of the tariff, then this duty will yield a better revenue than the one proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

There is certainly no American industry to be protected in this case, and I am surprised that the Senator from North Carolina should move to increase the duty, apparently, judging from the experience of this country, solely in the interest of smugglers.

Mr. VANCE. It is not in the interest of smugglers, though there might be a worse reason found than that. The Senator knows very well that it is a principle of human nature that if the duties are high there will be smuggling. He knows that a tyrannical government will breed rebellion. He knows that if you do not feed the dog at the kitchen-door, he will scratch at the smoke-house. [Laughter.] That is human nature. For that reason I have objected to these enormous duties. But, sir, a man who would swear to a lie at the custom-house for a diamond worth $100 to save $10 on the hundred, would swear to it under any other circumstances. It is one of those things that the Government has to meet in the best way it can; and it does not satisfy me, as I said in my other remarks, to put upon our statute-book that we only tax this article of luxury used by the rich 10 per cent. whilst we pile mountain high the duties on the articles of common necessity.

I want to increase the duty to 25 per cent. at least and make the trial and see if the law can not be enforced against smuggling diamonds as well as against smuggling in any other form. They can be just as easily smuggled in sets as when unset, and a difference is made in this paragraph between those which are set and those which are unset. I want to try it, anyhow. The amount of duty that will be evaded by smuggling will not be greater than the amount of duty that will be saved, which we can collect at 25 per cent., in my opinion.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from North Carolina confounds undervaluation with smuggling. He speaks of affidavits of the party, and says that if a man is making a false affidavit it will not make any difference whether the rate is 10 per cent. or 25 per cent. The trouble is that his affidavit is not taken at all. These articles are brought in without any appraisal or examination. They are smuggled.

I do not quite understand the object of the Senator from North Carolina in making this motion. Does he think the country needs greater revenue, or is he willing to accept the experience of the Treasury Department that 10 per cent. produces more revenue than 25 per cent.? I do not quite understand what the Senator wishes to accomplish unless it is to put upon the statute-book a rate which he knows can not be collected, and which the experience of this country for more than half a century shows can not possibly be collected.

Mr. VANCE. I do not know that. That is something that I do not know.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me? Has he the report of the Treasury Department where the fact is stated that we lose more by smuggling than we make by a higher rate?

Mr. ALDRICH. I can not point at this moment to any particular report of the Secretary of the Treasury to that effect, but I can bring to the Senator from Georgia, if he desires, the experts of the Treasury Department here, and the experts from the Treasury Department in New York, who will tell him that fact, and if he prefers to have it in writing I will see that he has it. It is the universal experience and opinion of the officers of the customs not only here but in New York and all the ports of entry in the United States that 10 per cent. produces more revenue than 25 per cent., and that the only effect of a high duty on diamonds has been to increase smuggling.

Mr. BROWN. When did you try it at 25 per cent.?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will inform the Senator. By the act of July 30, 1846, the rate upon diamonds was 30 per cent. By the act of March 3, 1857, it was 24 per cent. By the act of March 2, 1861, it was 25 per cent. This was continued until 1874.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Rhode Island will allow me to call his attention to the fact that that was the duty on set diamonds.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am answering a question of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I only call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that duty was on set diamonds, and not on unset diamonds.

Mr. ALDRICH. All diamonds under some of these acts were dutiable at 25 per cent. Under some of the others cut diamonds were at one rate and uncut diamonds at another rate. There have been various rates at different times upon various kinds of diamonds.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. But on unset diamonds in the years that the Senator states the tax was 30 per cent., while the tax upon unset diamonds was 10 per cent. and in the next tariff it was 4.

Mr. ALDRICH. Which year?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In 1846.

Mr. ALDRICH. Fifteen per cent.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Ten per cent.; and in 1857 it was 4 per cent.; and in 1861 it was 5 per cent., and 5 per cent. again in 1862 and 1863.

Mr. ALDRICH. I see that the Senator is right as to diamonds which were not set.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. That is what we were discussing.

Mr. ALDRICH. In some of the years as to which I have read the duty upon all diamonds was 25 per cent., and in some of the other acts it has varied from 10 per cent. to 30 per cent. in various years, and the experience of the Department has been that we collect more revenue at 10 per cent. that at any other rate.

Mr. BROWN. Ought not the Treasury reports to show it if that is so?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am curious to know when a tax of 25 per cent. upon diamonds existed. As I have just read, the tax upon unset diamonds in 1846 was 10 per cent.; in 1857 it was 4 per cent.; in 1861 it was 5 per cent.; in 1862 and 1863 it was 5 per cent.; in 1866 it was 10 per cent., and it has been 10 per cent. in each succeeding tariff on unset diamonds.

Mr. ALDRICH. They were free part of the time, according to the table I have before me.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The statement from which I read is the official statement from the Treasury Department, and I presume is correct. I do not know under what authority the Senator has found that diamonds were ever assessed at more than 10 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will look it up in the statutes, and will refer to it hereafter. I do not care to detain the Senate now.

Mr. VANCE. Has the Senator any authority to show the importations under the high rate and the importations under the low rate?

Mr. ALDRICH. I have not the statistics before me, but I know that is the fact. The Senate will remember how the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] made a statement day before yesterday from his own experience as Secretary of the Treasury. I know that the experts in the Treasury Department who were before the committee made that statement, and I know that the appraiser's office in New York, when the committee visited that city, made the same statement. It has been the universal judgment of all the officers connected with the Treasury Department that the duty upon diamonds ought not to be more than 10 per cent.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator knows the object of my asking for the amount of importations under the different rates. The Senator will know, of course, that as the country has increased in wealth, naturally the use of those things has increased, and therefore, with regard to the question of how many were smuggled, many more would be shown in the importations. I wanted the amounts, if the Senator could give them.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have not the statistics before me, but I shall take pains to get them from the officers of the Treasury Department, and submit them to the Senate at some subsequent date.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will contribute this additional suggestion to the debate, that diamonds, under the tariffs of 1816, 1825, 1830, 1832, and 1836, were not taxed. They were first put upon the dutiable-list in 1842, with a tax of 7½ per cent., and unset diamonds never have been above 10 per cent. At the same time that a tax of 7½ per cent. was fixed in 1842 on unset diamonds, 25 per cent. was the tax upon set diamonds, and that difference has run through all the time.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is no doubt but that the ancient policy should be returned to now, and that uncut and unset diamonds should be put upon the free-list and the duty of 25 per cent. retained upon those set and manufactured as articles of luxury.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that the ancient policy which put unset diamonds on the free-list also put set diamonds on the free-list, and that set diamonds were put in the tariff at almost the same time that unset diamonds were?

Mr. HISCOCK. They were then only half right. Perhaps they were entirely so, for the reason that very likely at that time we did not have the labor in this country to cut and set the diamonds. That whole industry now should be transferred to this country. If they were put upon the free-list, doubtless that would be the effect and the result.

I see no difficulty, so far as I am concerned, with reference to this revenue question, for I say very frankly that I do not vote here for a duty upon any article where it is purely a revenue article. I am not in favor of that policy, and I am entirely willing to join an issue of that character with the Senator from North Carolina with reference to this bill.

The bill is not constructed, the country does not understand it to be constructed, upon the line of raising revenue from purely revenue articles. It is constructed on the line of protection, and the Senator has been battling the bill day after day on that ground. I do not propose at this time on this item to abandon the spirit of the bill, the policy of the bill, and the policy of those who favor it; but in the interest of protection, in the interest of American labor that they as well as we seem to be in favor of, I say as to uncut diamonds and precious stones of all kinds, cut but not set, 10 per cent. ad valorem, all of that might better go upon the free-list and the industry be transferred to this country.

Mr. MORRILL. In my experience of over thirty years we have never had a Secretary of the Treasury who has recommended a rate of duty upon diamonds higher than 10 per cent. I wish to say also that we have had the importers of these articles before us, respectable and upright men, who brought their samples of the article here to exhibit to us, and it was shown how easily they might be concealed in the hands of those who wanted to evade the duties, or in the hem of their garments, and so escape any duty at all.

The regular importers have informed the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and the Committee on Finance of the Senate that they could make contracts with foreigners abroad to bring diamonds here at 7 per cent. when the duty was 10, but they preferred to do an honest business and pay 10 per cent. rather than to engage in smuggling. There is no doubt upon the subject. Anybody who is familiar with it would not raise the question at all.

Mr. VEST. I must be permitted to say that I do not exactly understand how the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] yesterday voted for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to increase the rate of duty on jewelry from 25 to 40 per cent., and now takes the position he does in regard to what is substantially the same article.

Mr. ALDRICH. The manufacture of jewelry in this country is a very large industry, and I am sure that 40 per cent. ad valorem is too great a rate for the protection of American jewelers. There is no industry in this country engaged in the production of diamonds—I do not know of any at any rate—and therefore the duty upon diamonds is simply a revenue duty and nothing more. The jewelry of this country comes in competition with the cheap jewelry made in Birmingham, England, and in various parts of France and Germany, and the duty upon jewelry is a protective duty as well as being a duty upon an article of luxury.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it might well be added that so far as the higher grades of jewelry are concerned, the more expensive kinds of jewelry, the effect of an increase of duty would be to transfer it to this side. So far as the cheap grades of jewelry are concerned the present duty is prohibitory; it is all made here. The amendment was moved and voted for by gentlemen upon the other side, I grant, in the direction of protection, for it will doubtless have the effect to transfer to this country the manufacture of many higher grades of jewelry which now our people are unable to manufacture. Therefore, I was in favor of it and voted for it.

Mr. VEST. I voted against it because the reports which I read yesterday show that we export a large amount of jewelry, besides supplying the domestic market.

Mr. HISCOCK. We do export large amounts, and there are large importations, as I said, of the most valuable and the most highly finished kinds, upon which large amounts of labor are expended; and the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia will be to transfer that industry bodily to this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. At the rate of 25 per cent. the importations in 1887 were $427,873 in value. If the amendment of the Senator from Georgia becomes a law I believe that those importations will be very largely reduced.

Mr. VEST. Our friends upon the other side of the Chamber are under a debt of gratitude to a Democratic Senator at any rate.

Mr. ALDRICH. We acknowledge the debt of gratitude.

Mr. VEST. They made the discovery since the bill was reported and made it suddenly after a motion to amend was made yesterday from this side of the Chamber.

But, returning to what was stated by the Senator from Rhode Island, he says no diamonds are produced or manufactured in this country. That is true, but I call his attention to the fact that the setting and cutting of diamonds is as much a part of the mechanical pursuit of a jeweler as is the manufacture of bric-a-brac or anything else; and they have recognized that in this identical provision, because precious stones of all kinds, cut but not set, bear only 10 per cent. ad valorem. It is the setting of the stone that gives the profit to the jeweler. There is very little margin upon the stone itself. The stones bear the same value nearly all over the world, according to the water of the diamond; but it is in the setting, after they are cut, that the American jeweler, and every other jeweler, makes his money.

The committee recognized that, for they put upon stones cut but not set only 10 per cent., while upon those set and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act they put 25 per cent. ad valorem. As a matter of course, that was in order to protect the labor of the American workman. If the stones come in set, then the duty is 25 per cent.; if they come in not set it is only 10 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will admit that the rate in the last clause of the paragraph should be increased (to conform to the action of the Senate yesterday on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia) from 25 per cent. to 40 per cent.

Mr. VEST. From my standpoint I made a very unfortunate argument, for I am against all increases. It seems that I am assisting the other side of the Chamber without intending to do it.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I may call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to it, under the rates proposed by this bill as reported jewelry and set diamonds bore the same rate of duty, and they were classified together. There was great difficulty and confusion in the Treasury Department in the classification of these goods. Jewelry and diamonds formerly belonged to one class, and the Senator from Missouri will see that having supported that provision yesterday he should also support an amendment to this paragraph increasing the duty.

Mr. VEST. But I did not support it. I voted against the amendment of the Senator from Georgia; I did not support it. What the Senator from New York says as to the classification is true, because on page 159 of the table prepared by the committee I find that set diamonds are included as to quantity with jewelry. But the felicities, if I may use the expression, of this tariff legislation are eminently illustrated by comparing paragraphs 434 and 435, which seem providentially to be in juxtaposition in this bill.

434. Precious stones of all kinds, cut but not set, 10 per cent. ad valorem; if set, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Those are articles of pure luxury, of the highest sort of luxury, of the deepest sort of luxury, using the superlative, but eminently luxuries.

435. Stone.—Freestone, granite, sandstone, and all building or monumental stone except marble, unmanufactured or undressed—

Just as the diamond is not set—not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 14 cents per cubic foot.

The one luxury, pure and simple, comes in at 10 per cent. ad valorem. The other, an absolute necessity for building purposes, comes in at 14 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri to say that foreign building-stone is a necessity in this country?

Mr. VEST. I say that any sort of stone is a necessity when it gets here.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the Senator take the position that all foreign stone that is imported here is not really brought here as a luxury and simply for the purpose of embellishment?

Mr. VEST. That is going into the individual motives of the importers, which I am certainly not expected to do.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is not that true in reference to jewelry? I imagine it is true in the much-abused Northern States, where these industries are thriving, that the same class of people use rich articles of jewelry who use imported stone. They are used by the same class of people.

Mr. VEST. I am speaking simply of the nature of the material, freestone, sandstone, and building-stone.

Mr. REAGAN. It comes in as ballast.

Mr. VEST. As my friend from Texas says, it comes in as ballast. It is not considered as a luxury. In my State stone is exceedingly abundant. Freestone and sandstone can be found anywhere in the State of Missouri and through almost the entire West.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I supposed. That is the reason why I suggested that foreign stone was not a necessity.

Mr. VEST. But I speak of the nature of the material. As to whether it is a necessity depends upon the individual who brings it in. Of course, if he has plenty of stone, it is no necessity, it is a luxury; but nobody before has ever claimed within my knowledge that freestone or sandstone for building purposes could be considered a luxury. We classify these things according to the uses to which they are put.

Mr. HISCOCK. What we claim, if the Senator will pardon me, is that this class of stone upon which this duty is imposed, foreign stone, is brought here as a luxury.

Mr. VEST. I can not see how such stones are brought here as luxuries, unless they are used for luxurious purposes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly they are.

Mr. VEST. They are not used for luxurious purposes.

Mr. HISCOCK. They are used for ornamentation, for ornamental buildings.

Mr. VEST. I have never heard before that freestone and sandstone were used for ornamental purposes. They may be in certain cases.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will visit the city of New York he will find sandstone and brownstone used for ornamental purposes.

Mr. VEST. Of course, and so you will find limestone occasionally used for ornamentation, and yet you may find it in the large majority of cases used simply for building purposes without regard to ornament. So in the West we use a stone called cotton-rock, which is a plastic limestone, for fencing and for building purposes, and yet at the same time it can be used for ornamentation very successfully, but we never consider it a luxury. It is a building rock, out of which you can make a house to protect you from the weather, and that is the whole of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 434, line 1810, it is proposed to strike out "10" and insert "25;" so as to read:

Precious stones of all kinds, cut but not set, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I simply desire to explain my vote. I shall vote against this amendment because I believe the statement made by the Senator from Ohio as to his experience when Secretary of the Treasury is borne out by the facts. Any one who has crossed over to Europe knows perfectly well that such legislation as is proposed by my friend from North Carolina would be imposing a premium on smuggling, while honest people would pay the duty. I simply rose to explain my vote. On some other occasion I hope to express my views upon the bill, which will leave no doubt as to my position on the general question of taxation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. He is not present, and I withhold my vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COLQUITT (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. I see he did not vote, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I have been requested to announce a pair between myself and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	George,	Reagan,	Voorhees,
Berry,	Gibson,	Spooner,	Walthall.
Brown,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Coke,	Palmer,	Vance,

NAYS—18.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Blair,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Stockbridge.
Davis,	Frye,	Payne,
Dawes,	Hawley,	Platt,

ABSENT—41.

Beck,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Butler,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Call,	Gray,	Morgan,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hale,	Pasco,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chace,	Hampton,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.
Chandler,	Harris,	Pugh,
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Quay,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Ransom,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call having shown that a quorum is not present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Bate,	Edmunds,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Berry,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	Fry,	Paddock,	Teller,
Cameron,	George,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Chace,	Gibson,	Payne,	Vance,
Chandler,	Hampton,	Platt,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hiscock,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sawyer,
Davis,	Manderson,	Sherman,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Shall further proceedings under the roll-call be dispensed with? It is so ordered if there be no objection. The roll will again be called upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). I announce again my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT]. I presume that one announcement will answer until his return. If he were present, I should vote for the entire report of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], and vote "nay."

Mr. HAMPTON. As I am relieved from my pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bate,	Gibson,	Pugh,	Vance,
Berry,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Mitchell,	Spooner,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Morgan,	Teller,
George,	Palmer,	Turpie,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Sherman,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Evarts,	Paddock,
Cullom,	Frye,	Platt,

ABSENT—32.

Beck,	Daniel,	Hearst,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Quay,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Call,	Gray,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Hale,	Pasco,	Stewart,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Payne,	Vest.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

Mr. BROWN. Before passing from this paragraph I desire to offer another amendment to it. I understand that when diamonds are cut and set they belong to the class of articles known as jewelry, and with a view to conforming to my amendment yesterday, which prevailed, putting the duty on jewelry at 40 per cent. ad valorem, I move, in line 1812, to strike out "25" and insert "40;" so as to read:

If set, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

I do this both with a view of conformity to our action in the other case and with a view to the encouragement and protection of American labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 434, line 1812, before the words "per cent.," it is proposed to strike out "25" and insert "40;" so as to read:

If set, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

435. Stone.—Freestone, granite, sandstone, and all building or monumental stone except marble, manufactured or undressed, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 14 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. VANCE. In this paragraph all stone undressed, in the rough, is taxed 14 cents per cubic foot. It is not for the benefit of the laborer engaged in dressing stone that this duty is imposed. It can only be for the man who owns the quarry in this country. For that reason I am not willing to impose upon the building-stone that people use in this country so heavy a duty for the mere profit of the man who happens to own the stone which is found in the soil. Such stone ought to be upon the free-list. The stone that comes into this country by cheap water transportation in an undressed condition, upon which the labor of our stone-masons is exerted, and which gives them profitable employment, constitutes the raw material of their trade, and for their sake it ought to be admitted free.

In line 1817, I move to strike out the words "14 cents per cubic foot" and to insert "shall be admitted free of duty."

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to correct the statement of the Senator from North Carolina in reference to whether labor is involved in the item that has been read and which he seeks to amend. I think if he investigates the question he will find that the quarries of stone are about as valueless as the adjacent land in which there is no stone, and it is to protect the labor which is employed in quarrying the stone and taking it out of the earth that this rate has been fixed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

436. Freestone, granite, sandstone, and other building and monumental stone, except marble, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, hewn, dressed, or polished, and burr-stones manufactured or bound up into millstones, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

437. Grindstones, finished or unfinished, $1.75 per ton.

Mr. VEST. In paragraph 437, lines 1823 and 1824, I move to strike out "$1.75 per ton," and to insert the word "free;" and I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1823, after the word "unfinished," it is proposed to strike out "$1.75 per ton" and to insert "free;" so as to read:

Grindstones, finished or unfinished, free.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that upon this question the yeas and nays may be entered upon the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I wish to announce that I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. I am paired for the day.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] or I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and I withhold my vote. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should vote "nay" upon this question if I were not paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the negative). Is the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is recorded.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I withdraw my vote, being paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Berry,	George,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Payne,	Walthall.
Coke,	Hampton,	Reagan,

NAYS—22.

Call,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Vest,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Gray,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Daniel,	Harris,	Quay,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It being ascertained by the vote that a quorum is not present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Coke,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Cullom,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sherman,
Bate,	Colquitt,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Blair,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Bowen,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Teller,
Cameron,	Hale,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Chace,	Hampton,	Payne,	Vance,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Platt,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hiscock,	Reagan,	Walthall.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-four Senators having answered to their names, if there be no objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with. The Secretary will again call the roll upon the question of agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BOWEN. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Chair if a quorum has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum has voted.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and refrain from voting.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bate,	George,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Berry,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Coke,	Gray,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.

Call,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Voorhees.
Cameron,	Hale,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Quay,
Daniel,	Hawley,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

438. Umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades: Covered with silk, alpaca, or similar material, 50 per cent. ad valorem; if covered with other material, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

439. Waste, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

440. Watches, watch-cases, watch movements, parts of watches, watch-glasses, and watch-keys, whether separately packed or otherwise, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting at the end of the paragraph the words "and gold watches and all parts of gold watches, 40 per cent. ad valorem."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported from the desk.

Mr. ALLISON. May I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that that may create confusion where parts of watches are imported. They might be inserted in silver cases. I think the Senator ought to confine his amendment to gold watches and gold watch-cases.

Mr. BROWN. I will accept that modification.

Mr. ALLISON. That will cover what the Senator has in view. There are a good many watch-movements imported and a great many exported.

Mr. BROWN. Then I accept the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be read from the desk.

Mr. ALLISON. It should read:

Gold watches and gold watch-cases.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, that will do: "Gold watches and gold watch-cases."

The SECRETARY. After the words "ad valorem," in line 1834, it is proposed to add the words:

And gold watches and gold watch-cases, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. BROWN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VEST. Let me inquire of the Senator from Iowa what he proposes to do with silver watches? What section do they come under?

Mr. ALLISON. They will come under the general term "watches."

Mr. VEST. I understand this is to be amended so as to include gold watches.

Mr. ALLISON. No; the Senator from Georgia proposes to add his provision at the end of the paragraph providing that silver watches shall come in as now, at 25 per cent.

Mr. VEST. The section now reads:

440. Watches, watch-cases, watch-movements, parts of watches, watch-glasses, and watch-keys, whether separately packed or otherwise, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Then it is proposed to add:

And gold watches, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

If so, I think the phraseology is very unfortunate, because it would include gold watches, and then gold watches are provided for afterwards in an additional provision. I suggest that there had better be a change.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think there is any trouble in the way.

Mr. ALLISON. There may be something in the criticism suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. Both clauses would include gold watches if you make the amendment as proposed, because as a matter of course "watches" include gold watches, and then you provide for gold watches afterwards.

Mr. BROWN. We provide a different tariff for gold watches.

Mr. VEST. That is true; but the present item in the bill includes gold watches in the first clause, and then there would be 40 per cent. provided on gold watches in the second clause.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not really think that much will be accomplished by the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. We make gold watch-cases now as cheaply as they are made anywhere. They are made by machinery and made by our own people. As to watch-movements, we export very large quantities of watch-movements from this country, as we have the machinery here to manufacture them very successfully.

I hope the Senator from Georgia will not insist upon the amendment, as I think there will not be much accomplished by it except the still further protection of our gold-watch-case manufacturers.

Mr. BROWN. I do insist on the amendment. The Senate yesterday increased the duty on jewelry to 40 per cent. ad valorem instead of 25. The present rate on jewelry is 35 per cent., and the present rate on gold watches is 40. I simply propose to put gold watches here as they are under the present tariff.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think gold watches are at 40 per cent. now.

Mr. VEST. They are at 25 per cent.

Mr. BROWN. My recollection is 40 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. Watches are already 25 per cent. ad valorem. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that there is no complaint made by our manufacturers as to this rate of duty.

Mr. BROWN. The record seems to be against me, but my impression is that gold watches are now at 40 per cent. duty.

Mr. ALLISON. Twenty-five per cent. by the law. I have before me a copy of the existing law—"watches, watch-cases, parts of watches, etc., 25 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. VEST. It is the same in all three cases in the Mills bill and the Senate bill at 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BROWN. Why should they not be put at the same rate as other jewelry?

Mr. ALLISON. Jewelry may be made of gold or silver or precious stones, and so on, and silver jewelry is now being made in large quantities. It does not seem to me to be necessary to raise the duty on gold watches, unless it is intended to keep them out altogether, for the benefit of our own manufacturers.

Mr. BROWN. When we put 40 per cent. on jewelry and 40 per cent. on diamonds, it hardly seems to me proper to leave gold watches at 25 per cent.

Mr. VEST. It ought to be said for what it is worth, that gold watches, whilst in one sense they may be called articles of luxury, yet to some extent are articles of necessity. They are different from bric-a-brac, which can not be used at all. We know a watch is extremely useful as a time-keeper.

However, I said all I desired to say on this subject yesterday, and I voted against the increase yesterday upon jewelry to 40 per cent. because there is a large exportation of it from this country, and we do not need the revenue; and the evidence is overwhelming—if the Senator from Georgia has not examined it, I have—that we are to-day excelling the whole world in the manufacture of watches. The Waltham Company, in New England, can make a better watch than is made in Europe, and the old-time Geneva watch is being forced out of the market. It is true they do send some watches to this country, but they are very cheap and very inferior watches, compared with the American manufacture.

There can be nothing in the shape of giving any additional advantage to the manufacturer in this increase of duty, and we certainly do not need the revenue.

Mr. BROWN. In reply to the Senator from Missouri, I will say that it is not a question of protection at all. It is a question whether we shall raise more revenue on luxuries and less on the necessaries of life. I desire to raise a larger revenue on gold watches and take something off other things that are common necessaries of life; and for that reason and not with a view to the protection of anybody, I favor the amendment.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will permit me a single word in reply to him. If I saw the slightest chance of taking the duty off anything, I would recognize the force of his argument; but here we are confronted with an absolute certainty in this Senate that there will be no decrease of duty upon necessities, and then it comes to a question whether we shall add to the surplus in the Treasury by putting an additional duty upon the articles mentioned in this paragraph. If I saw any chance for doing the other thing I might assent to his proposition, but I do not see any.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is fighting very faithfully on the line of other things, and I prefer to fight on the line of raising the revenue on articles of luxury and especially on gold watches.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks for the yeas and yeas on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to change my vote, and I ask if it would be in order for me to give a reason for changing it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I vote "nay."

Mr. BLAIR. On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bate,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Berry,	George,	Morgan,	Teller,
Brown,	Hale,	Paddock,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hampton,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,
Colquitt,	Manderson,	Reagan,

NAYS—20.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Allison,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Gray,	Saulsbury,	Vance,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,	Vest,
Dolph,	Ingalls,	Sherman,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—34.

Beck,	Daniel,	Hawley,	Quay,
Blackburn,	Davis,	Hearst,	Ransom,
Blair,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Butler,	Farwell,	McPherson,	Turpie,
Call,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Voorhees.
Cameron,	Gorman,	Platt,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pugh,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I would like to have the last paragraph that was acted on read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to paragraph 440?

Mr. TELLER. Paragraph 440.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

440. Watches, watch-cases, watch-movements, parts of watches, watch-glasses, and watch-keys, whether separately packed or otherwise, 25 per cent. ad valorem; and gold watches and gold watch-cases, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. TELLER. If it be in order, I would like to go back to that, or I will wait until the bill gets into the Senate. I supposed when I voted for that amendment I voted to include watch-movements as well as watches. I wanted to include all in the duty at 40 per cent. I will take occasion some time when we get into the Senate to move that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FREE-LIST.

SEC. 2503. The following articles when imported shall be exempt from duty:

441. Acids used for medicinal, chemical, or manufacturing purposes, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.
442. Aconite.
443. Acorns, raw, dried or undried, but unground.
444. Agates, unmanufactured.
445. Albumen.
446. Alizarine, natural.
447. Alizarine, artificial.
448. Amber, unmanufactured, or crude gum.
449. Ambergris.
450. Aniline salts.
451. Animals brought into the United States temporarily for a period not exceeding six months, for the purpose of exhibition or competition for prizes offered by any agricultural or racing association; but a bond shall be given in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; also, teams of animals, including their harness and tackle and the wagons or other vehicles actually owned by persons emigrating from foreign countries to the United States with their families, and in actual use for the purpose of such emigration, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I understand from paragraph 451 that animals brought into the United State for breeding purposes would not come in upon the free-list, but if brought for racing purposes that they do come upon the free-list.

Mr. ALDRICH. For a period not exceeding six months.

Mr. VEST. Exactly; it does not make any difference about the time. If they are brought here for racing purposes, for six months and not longer, they come in on the free-list and for no other purpose. If they are brought in for breeding purposes then they are not upon the free-list under this paragraph.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator object to this provision?

Mr. VEST. I object to it, but of course it is no use for me to make any motion about it; I only want to point out the objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. Judging from our previous experience I think it might be the subject of a motion. We have heard such exalted professions on the subject of protection in that part of the Chamber that possibly if the Senator will make a motion it may be adopted.

Mr. VEST. I think if the Senator will look at my record he will find that I have not been in the majority since the bill was taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

452. Annatto, roucou, rocoa, or orleans, and all extract of.
453. Antimony ore, crude sulphide of.
454. Apatite.
455. Argal, or argol, or crude tartar.
456. Arrow-root, raw or unmanufactured.
457. Arsenic and sulphide of, or orpiment.
458. Arseniate of aniline.
459. Articles in a crude state used in dyeing or tanning not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.
460. Articles specially imported for the use of the United States, provided that the price of the same did not include the duty.
461. Articles, the growth, produce, and manufacture of the United States, when returned after having been exported, without having been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of manufacture or other means; casks, barrels, carboys, bags, and other vessels of American manufacture exported filled with American products, or exported empty and returned filled with foreign products, including shooks when returned as barrels or boxes; but proof of the identity of such articles shall be made, under general regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and if any such articles are subject to internal tax at the time of exportation, such tax shall be proved to have been paid before exportation and not refunded: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any article upon which an allowance of drawback has been made, the reimportation of which is hereby prohibited except upon payment of duties equal to the drawbacks allowed.
462. Asbestos, unmanufactured.
463. Ashes, wood and lye of, and beet-root ashes.
464. Asphaltum and bitumen, crude.
465. Asafetida.
466. Balm of Gilead.
467. Barks, cinchona or other.
468. Baryta, carbonite or witherite.
469. Baryta, sulphate of, or barytes, unmanufactured.
470. Bauxite, or beauxite.
471. Beeswax.
472. Bells, broken, and bell-metal broken and fit only to be remanufactured.
473. Birds, stuffed, not suitable for millinery ornaments.
474. Birds and land and water fowls.
475. Bismuth.
476. Bladders, including fish-bladders or fish-sounds, crude, and all integuments of animals not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.
477. Blood, dried.
478. Bologna sausages.
479. Bolting-cloths.
480. Bones, crude, or not burned, calcined, ground, steamed, or otherwise manufactured, and bone-dust or animal carbon, and bone-ash, fit only for fertilizing purposes.
481. Books, engravings, photographs, bound or unbound etchings, maps, and charts which shall have been printed and bound or manufactured more than twenty years at the date of importation.
482. Books and pamphlets printed exclusively in languages other than English.
483. Books, engravings, photographs, etchings, bound or unbound, maps and charts imported by authority or for the use of the United States, or for the use of the Library of Congress; but the duty shall not have been included in the contract or price paid.
484. Books, maps, and charts specially imported, not more than two copies in any one invoice, in good faith, for the use of any society incorporated or established for philosophical, literary, or religious purposes, or for the encouragement of the fine arts, or for the use or by order of any college, academy, school, or seminary of learning in the United States.
485. Books, or libraries, or parts of libraries, and other household effects of persons or families from foreign countries, if used abroad by them not less than one year, and not intended for any other person or persons, nor for sale.
486. Brazil paste.
487. Braids, plaits, flats, laces, and similar manufactures suitable for making or ornamenting hats, bonnets, and hoods, composed of straw, chip, grass, palmleaf, willow, osier, or rattan.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, this paragraph ought not to be here. It is intended simply for the benefit of the manufacturers of this country, and if the commonest necessaries of life in use by the great majority of the people can have no favors extended to them, I am opposed in this manner to extending favors to the manufacturers, whose productions are already heavily protected.

The amount of duty collected on these articles in 1887 was $822,704.33. That was the amount of duties collected under the paragraph, whereas the duty upon cotton-ties used in the great industry of the production of 7,000,000 bales of cotton was only $346,000, and that is retained, whilst the duty upon the cotton-bagging with which the cotton is prepared for market amounts to $900,000. In the one case it is more than twice as great, and in the other it is almost as great. These duties are retained upon the cotton industry, and $822,000 is to be given to this little industry of the people who manufacture what are called notions, bonnets, head-gear, etc., for the ornamentation of the women of our country.

Now, sir, if we undertake to treat people fairly we must put these articles upon the dutiable-list. It is true we do not need the duty, but to take it off accommodates nobody except the manufacturers of these articles, as I have stated, whose productions are already heavily protected, and I therefore move to add at the close of line 1943:

Shall pay a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 487, at the end of line 1943, it is proposed to add:

Shall pay a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem.

So as to read:

Braids, plaits, flats, laces, and similar manufactures suitable for making or ornamenting hats, bonnets, and hoods, composed of straw, chip, grass, palm-leaf, willow, osier, or rattan, shall pay a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. Why does the Senator from North Carolina propose to increase the present rate of duty on these articles? The present rate of duty is 20 per cent. ad valorem. Is there any reason why that should be increased?

Mr. VANCE. I will make it 20 per cent. if that will give the Senator any aid in voting against it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator's motion was to make these braids pay 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I will say 20.

Mr. ALLISON. The present rate being 20, I desired to know why he wanted to increase it.

Mr. VANCE. That was an oversight. I thought 25 per cent. was the present duty and I wanted to retain the duty. I will conform my motion to the suggestion of the Senator and make it 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 487, at the end of line 1943, it is proposed to add:

Shall pay a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. The only reason of the committee in putting these articles upon the free-list was that they are not made in this country at all, and can not be, and of course will not be.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], however, is in exact accord with all the manufacturers that I know of in this country who use this raw material. I think without exception they have insisted that this duty shall remain, because the business of manufacturing straw hats, bonnets, etc., is a business confined to a very few persons, and they have a very good arrangement respecting their method of manufacture, the mode of selling the goods, etc. They want this duty retained. They are in thorough accord with the Senator from North Carolina. The committee believe that if this raw material is brought in free, the result will be to diffuse and disseminate this manufacture far beyond what it now is.

Mr. ALDRICH. The consistency of some of the Senators upon the other side is well illustrated by the amendment now offered by the Senator from North Carolina. There is not a man, woman, or child in the United States who does not use at some season of the year the articles which are made from the braids and plaits which are covered by the paragraph now under consideration. These braids and plaits can not be made in the United States, have never been made here, and never will be made here. The duty is simply a revenue duty which adds to the cost of every straw hat or bonnet worn by every woman and child in the United States 20 per cent. ad valorem, and the Senator from North Carolina, agreeing with the manufacturers in this case who desire to confine the business to their own limits, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has very well said, seeks to impose upon the people of the United States a useless and unnecessary tax, and therefore I believe an unjust tax, according to Democratic authority, upon this article of common consumption.

Mr. VANCE. I do not know that we have hit upon any article that better illustrates the difference between Senators on the other side and myself. This is a useless and unnecessary tax, the Senator says. Why? Because the tax when collected is not divided with some manufacturer in this country, but every dollar of it goes into the Treasury. Therefore it is useless and unnecessary and unjust. I have no doubt but that the Senator is perfectly sincere in that declaration. That the Congress of the United States should undertake in the exercise of its constitutional powers to levy money upon the people that all goes into the Treasury is something outrageous, I admit, in their estimation.

Mr. ALDRICH. The memory of the Senator from North Carolina must be exceedingly short. In the first statement he made upon this question he stated that he proposed to put this duty on because it was only the manufacturers who wanted the article free, that it was for their benefit to have it free.

Mr. VANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now he says it all goes into the Treasury and is no benefit to the manufacturers at all.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator should quote me correctly. The Senator could hardly have understood me that way.

Mr. ALDRICH. The RECORD will show.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; the RECORD will show. I said it was for nothing but to accommodate the manufacturers. I did not know whether they had entered into that private arrangement that has been going on all the time before the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance and made their wishes known. They did not do me the honor to consult me about it. I presume, of course, if they came here they went to the subcommittee and made their wants known there. I know that this clause will help them, there being no reduction in the duty on the articles which they manufacture, and I know that the furnishing to them of the raw material free will increase their profits. That is as plain as any proposition in arithmetic could be made.

The whole theory of this free-list, I admit, is contrary to my ideas of what a free-list ought to be. The putting of spices and pepper and all these things that can not be produced in our country on the free-list I think was a departure from the true principles of taxation. I think those things the duty upon which was all revenue should be the things which should be made to assist in bearing the taxation in this country, and I am opposed, and have so announced again and again, to increasing the free-list with those things which can not be produced in this country, for the reason that the revenue all goes into the Treasury.

I am not sufficiently acquainted with the process of manufacturing these articles to know whether the manufacturers really desire the duty retained or not. I have never heard them say so, and there is nothing that I have seen in the testimony taken before the subcommittee which indicates their desire in this regard, though it may have been taken and may be there and I may not have seen it, and I do not assert that it is not there; but I do know very well, to repeat myself, that the furnishing free of this raw material to these manufacturers without any reduction in the duties upon their goods must inure to their benefit, and in all probability will not inure to the benefit of anybody else.

Mr. VEST. When paragraph 336, under the flax, hemp, and jute schedule, which embraces neck-rufflings and ruchings made of cotton, was under consideration, I moved to put it back under the basket clause instead of having it at 50 per cent. ad valorem, as it is now in this bill, and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] reminded me that I was very inconsistent in that I proposed to decrease the duty upon an article of luxury; and when reminded of the fact, which he admitted, that those articles of cheap cotton manufacture were used by people in moderate circumstances and the poorer classes in the United States, he said still they were articles of luxury and he was surprised that I wanted to decrease the duty upon them. Now, here is an article of pure luxury, "braids, plaits, flats, laces, and similar manufactures suitable for making or ornamenting hats, bonnets, etc.," put upon the free-list.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I simply rise for the purpose of suggesting to my friend from Missouri that there is a marked difference between these two items. The article of ruchings when it comes in, comes in, I presume, for consumption by the people. There is no reason from the standpoint of this committee why on anything intended for the consumers in this country the tariff should be reduced, or that goods should be allowed to come in cheap; but when a similar article intended to be consumed by the manufacturer comes in the duty should be reduced, by their theory. What is intended to be consumed by the people or intended to go simply into the hands of the people all over the country instead of the manufacturers is to be taxed higher, while the articles to be consumed by the manufacturers must come in free.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to learn both from the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas what they understand "braids, plaits, flats, and laces" to be made from?

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt in the world that the laces that are spoken of here are what are called the straw laces, laces made out of articles of that sort; but that does not prevent their being articles of luxury.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly the Senator from Arkansas does not understand it in that way.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I made the point that the difference in the action of the committee depended upon who was to be the consumer of any given article; that on those things which are introduced for the purpose of being consumed by the manufacturers the tax is reduced, but when any article similar in character, which is a luxury in itself, is introduced for the purpose of being consumed directly by the people they want to increase the tax instead of decreasing it.

Mr. HISCOCK. In answer to that statement, if the Senator from Missouri will pardon me, I will say as to these articles "braids, plaits, flats, laces, and similar manufactures suitable for making or ornamenting hats, bonnets, etc.," if the duty is taken off the raw material out of which they are made, as has been suggested by the Senator from Iowa, it is supposed that the result will be to diversify the manufacture and create a wider competition in reference to it, and take it out of the control of the few manufacturers who are engaged in it now.

Mr. VEST. The very same argument would be equally as forcible in regard to any other raw material; and yet when we come to flax we are met with opposition to putting it on the free-list, and we have been voted down in this Chamber when we attempted to do it; and yet flax is used for articles of absolute necessity. Here are articles of simple and pure luxury for ornaments——

Mr. ALLISON. Do you call straw-braid a luxury?

Mr. VEST. The Senator hardly expects me to answer a question of that sort when the clause is right before him. What is in this clause?

Braids, plaits, flats, laces, and similar manufactures suitable for making—

Now, if it stopped there my friend from Iowa would have a right to interject his statement; but it proceeds—or ornamenting hats, bonnets, and hoods, composed of straw, chip, grass, palm-leaf, willow, osier, or rattan.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator said these articles were articles of pure luxury. The great majority of them are articles of necessity.

Mr. VEST. In commencing my few remarks I alluded particularly to laces for ornamentation, and I say they are purely articles of luxury. Is there any limitation in this paragraph upon articles of luxury or ornamentation? What is the operation of this? Take a gentleman like Mr. Wanamaker, who has the largest establishment in the United States, and has a department of it which is devoted to this particular manufacture of hats, ornamented hats, hoods, etc.; what is the result of this? Mr. Wanamaker gets these articles to be used in ornamentation free. It assists him in his business; it is directly in his interest. But when I propose to reduce the duty on neck-ruffling and ruchings, which I confess are not articles of necessity, but which the servant-girls and the poorer classes—for they are generally very cheap—use for ornamenting their persons (which they have a perfect right to do), I am met by the statement on the other side, "Oh, that is an article of luxury and you must not decrease the duties upon it!" It shows with what sort of facility our friends can twist and change their speeches and votes when different interests are involved.

Mr. ALDRICH. The purpose of the committee in fixing the duty upon neck-rufflings and ruchings composed of cotton, silk, and other materials was that those articles should be made in this country by American labor and by American manufacturers. The paragraph now under consideration does not contain the description of one single article which can be made in the United States, which has ever been made in the United States, or which ever will be made in the United States.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to ask the Senator why they can not be made here?

Mr. ALDRICH. For the reason that the straw which grows in the United States, owing to our climate, is not fitted to the manufacture of these various articles.

Mr. MORGAN. Can not the straw be imported?

Mr. ALDRICH. The straw can not be imported, I will say in answer to the Senator from Alabama, and can not be preserved and brought here owing to the frail nature of the straw itself. The straw is grown in China and Japan and Italy. We have never been able to grow a single one of these peculiar kinds of straw, owing to dampness or other climatic causes in the United States—not one single one of the varieties of straw which are required to make the articles described in this paragraph.

That being true, the only purpose of keeping a duty upon them must be for revenue. The object of taking off the duty is to reduce the cost of straw hats and straw bonnets to the people of the United States. If Senators upon the other side say that straw hats or straw bonnets are a luxury, when they are used, as I said before, by every person in the United States, then the state of the argument would be changed somewhat. But straw hats are not luxuries; they are articles of necessity; and the question involved is simply one whether you are willing, as you claim to be, as you are pretending to be every day, to reduce the cost of an article of universal consumption when the revenue is not needed.

Mr. VANCE. Then I understand that the Senator takes the position that it is his duty to reduce as much as possible the cost of manufactured goods made in this country to the people?

Mr. ALDRICH. Wherever it can be done without injury to American industry.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, just so; but whenever it can be done without any injury to the pockets of the people who have it to pay, then just bring your machine out. That is the position of the Senator.

I should like to ask the Senator if the laces mentioned here could not be made in this country, and the flats, whatever they are?

Mr. HISCOCK. No, they can not be made in this country.

Mr. VANCE. What are they composed of?

Mr. HISCOCK. They are composed of the materials described in the after part of the paragraph—composed of straw, chip, grass, palm-leaf, willow, osier, or rattan.

Mr. VANCE. Willow grows in this country.

Mr. HISCOCK. "Willow or osier or rattan." We know what that is.

Mr. VANCE. Willow and osier both grow in this country.

Mr. HISCOCK. "Or."

Mr. VANCE. "Willow or osier;" they both grow in this country.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is a peculiar foreign product which is cut fine, and which is braided and does not grow in this country. It is something that can be stripped fine and braided up.

Mr. VANCE. Where does it grow?

Mr. HISCOCK. It comes from China, it comes from Japan, and comes from a great many points; but it is not grown here.

Mr. VANCE. Does not the Senator admit that enough protection would overcome the edicts of nature, and that we could grow it all in this country if we made the duty high enough? [Laughter.] If it grows in Japan, that is pretty much on the latitude of the State in which I live.

Mr. HISCOCK. We are not in favor of protecting oranges so that they can be raised in New York.

Mr. VANCE. Unless they can be raised in New York. It comes simply down to this, that this will inure to the benefit of the manufacturers, as I have said before. It cheapens their raw material, and every dollar of money that has heretofore been paid, or that will continue to be paid if the law is not to be changed, as a duty upon these articles will go into the Treasury for the common benefit and none of it will go into the pockets of the Senator's constituents. Therefore I think it ought to be restored to the dutiable-list and we ought to reduce the revenue by bringing down the duty upon objects of prime necessity which are now so heavily taxed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again reported.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 1943 it is proposed to add:

Shall pay a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. BOWEN,] and vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who is compelled to be absent this evening.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior member from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall withdraw my vote, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois withdraws his vote.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the negative). If a quorum has voted I will withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa wish to have his vote recorded?

Mr. ALLISON. I am at liberty to vote in order to make a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum is yet recorded.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HOAR. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Bate,	Eustis,	Reagan,	Walthall.
Berry,	George,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Gibson,	Turpie.
Coke,	Hampton,	Vance,

NAYS—20.

Colquitt,	Hale,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	Harris,	Plumb,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It being ascertained by the state of the vote that a quorum is not present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Eustis,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Bate,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Frye,	Morrill,	Teller,
Brown,	George,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Chace,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Vance,
Chandler,	Gray,	Payne,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Platt,	Walthall,
Coke,	Hiscock,	Reagan,	Wilson of Iowa.
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Saulsbury,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sherman,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. Is there objection to dispensing with further proceedings under the call? The Chair hears none. The roll will be called upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. ALDRICH. I appeal to the Senator from North Carolina, the state of the vote having been disclosed, to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VANCE. The roll-call, so far as it has proceeded, I suppose will stand upon the record?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the proceedings that have been taken are journalized and recorded.

Mr. VANCE. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. The Chair hears no objection. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. It is very true, as has been stated by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Rhode Island, that the raw material in the shape of straw may not be produced in this country, but it is also very true that the use of this material when brought in for the making or ornamenting of hats, bonnets, etc., constitutes the point in this item. That is the American labor that is in the product. The part of this paragraph that I object to is that part which puts upon the free-list these articles used for ornamentation. I therefore move, in line 1941, to strike out the words "or ornamenting." The paragraph would then read:

Braids, plaits, flats, laces, and similar manufactures suitable for making hats, bonnets, and hoods, etc.

That answers the arguments of Senators upon the other side who ask us if straw hats and straw bonnets are not necessaries. Admitting that they are, I propose to change this paragraph so that the material for making these hats and bonnets may come in free, but not the material for ornamenting them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 487, line 1941, after the word "making," it is proposed to strike out the words "or ornamenting;" so as to read:

Braids, plaits, flats, laces, and similar manufactures suitable for making hats, bonnets, and hoods, composed of straw, chip, grass, palm-leaf, willow, osier, or rattan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is material.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but will transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and vote "nay."

Mr. VEST. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Frye,	Morgan,	Vance,
Berry,	George,	Payne,	Walthall,
Brown,	Gorman,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Gray,	Saulsbury,

Cameron,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Voorhees.
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Plumb,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call disclosing the absence of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,

Colquit,	Hampton,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.
Davis,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Reagan,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum being present, the Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri consent to withdraw his call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. VEST. The Senator had better consent to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Frye,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Berry,	George,	Morgan,	Vance,
Brown,	Gibson,	Payne,	Vest,
Coke,	Gorman,	Reagan,	Walthall,

Hawley,	Kenna,	Quay,	Standford,
Hearst,	McPherson,	Ransom,	Voorhees.
Hoar,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

488. Brazilian pebbles, rough or unmanufactured.
489. Breccia, in blocks or slabs.
490. Bristles, raw or unmanufactured.
491. Bromine.
492. Bullion, gold or silver.
493. Bulbs and bulbous roots, not edible.
494. Burgundy pitch.
495. Cabinets of old coins and medals, and other collections of antiquities; but the term "antiquities" as used in this act shall include only such articles as are suitable for souvenirs or cabinet collections, and which shall have been produced at any period prior to the seventeenth century.
496. Cadmium.
497. Calamine.
498. Camphor, crude.
499. Castor or castoreum.
500. Cassia, cassia vera, and cassia-buds, unground.
501. Catgut, whip-gut, or worm-gut, unmanufactured, or not further manufactured than in strings or cord.
502. Cerium.
503. Chalk, unmanufactured.
504. Charcoal.
505. Chicory-root, raw, dried, or undried, but unground.
506. Cinnamon, and chips of, unground.
507. Civet, crude.
508. Cloves and clove stems, unground.
509. Coal, anthracite.
510. Coal slack or culm, such as will pass through a half-inch screen.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out paragraph 510.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 510, in the following words:

510. Coal slack or culm, such as will pass through a half-inch screen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

511. Coal stores of American vessels; but none shall be unloaded.
512. Coal-tar, crude.
513. Cobalt and cobalt ore.
514. Cocculus indicus.
515. Cochineal.
516. Cocoa, or cacao, crude, and fiber, leaves, and shells of.
517. Coffee.
518. Coins, gold, silver, and copper.
519. Coir, and coir yarn.
520. Copper, old, taken from the bottom of American vessels compelled by marine disaster to repair in foreign ports.
521. Copper, when imported for the United States Mint.
522. Coral, marine, uncut, and unmanufactured.
523. Cork-wood, or cork-bark, unmanufactured.
524. Cotton, and cotton-waste or flocks.
525. Cryolite, or kryolith.
526. Cudbear.
527. Curling-stones, or quoits, and curling-stone handles.
528. Currants, Zante, or other dried.
529. Curry, and curry-powder.
530. Cutch.
531. Cuttle-fish bone.
532. Dandelion roots, raw, dried, or undried, but unground.
533. Diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut (not including pearls), and diamond dust or bort.

Mr. VANCE. In paragraph 533, I move to add, at the close of line 2003, the words "shall pay a duty of 25 per cent.," so that all diamonds uncut will be in the same position in which I attempted to put diamonds cut and unset. As to the question of revenue and the danger of smuggling, I can only say that if people succeed in smuggling every unset diamond that is brought to this country from any portion of the world, we shall not lose any more revenue than we do now when they come in free, and I see no reason why they should be on the free-list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to paragraph 533:

Shall pay a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem.

So as to read:

Diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut (not including pearls), and diamond dust or bort, shall pay a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I make the announcement for the day.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who is to be absent during the evening.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I make this announcement for the rest of the afternoon.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Berry,	Gray,	Pugh,	Vance,
Coke,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Walthall,
George,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—20.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Sawyer,
Chace,	Eustis,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Evarts,	Palmer,	Teller,
Davis,	Frye,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—40.

Beck,	Cockrell,	Hearst,	Quay,
Blackburn,	Colquitt,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Blair,	Daniel,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Sherman,
Brown,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Spooner,
Butler,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Call,	Hale,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Harris,	Pasco,	Vest,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Plumb,	Voorhees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appears by the roll-call that a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Eustis,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Evarts,	Jones of Arkansas,	Stewart,
Berry,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Teller,
Chace,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Chandler,	Frye,	Morrill,	Vance,
Cockrell,	George,	Paddock,	Vest,
Coke,	Gibson,	Payne,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Gorman,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cullom,	Gray,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.
Davis,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Reagan,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will again call the roll upon the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 14, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Bate,	Gray,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Berry,	Hampton,	Turpie,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
George,	Morgan,	Vest,

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Allison,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Chace,	Evarts,	Paddock,	Teller,
Chandler,	Frye,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Gorman,	Platt,
Davis,	Hale,	Plumb,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—37.

Beck.	Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Blair,	Dolph,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Brown,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Butler,	Harris,	Pasco,	Voorhees.
Call,	Hawley,	Pugh,
Cameron,	Hearst,	Quay,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend paragraph 533 in line 2003 by striking out the words in parentheses, "not including pearls," and inserting "including glaziers' and engravers' diamonds not set."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move to strike out paragraph 534.

Mr. VANCE. I did not hear the amendment just adopted. What was it? I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2003 strike out the words "not including pearls" and insert "including glaziers' and engravers' diamonds not set;" so as to read:

Diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut (including glaziers' and engravers' diamonds not set), and diamond dust or bort.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that pearls are not regarded as precious stones, and that glaziers' diamonds and engravers' diamonds unset should be on the free-list too.

Mr. VANCE. What will the Senator do with the next paragraph, paragraph 534?

Mr. ALLISON. The next paragraph I move to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The part proposed to be stricken out will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 534 in the following words:

534. Diamonds set for glaziers' use, and diamonds set as pencils or drills for engravers' use.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. VEST. The effect of that would be to let in under paragraph 533 diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut, and diamond dust or bort, which might be brought in simply as articles of luxury, while paragraph 534 includes diamonds set for glaziers' use and diamonds used in pencils or drills for engravers' use, which is about the only useful thing connected with diamonds, and that the Senator from Iowa proposes to strike out.

Mr. FRYE. He inserts that in the preceding paragraph.

Mr. VEST. If I understood the Senator from Iowa in his amendment to paragraph 533 he simply put in diamonds for glaziers' use unset.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. In paragraph 534 they are set as an implement of trade, as an industry, and he takes that out of the free-list, but leaves precious stones, which may be diamonds not used for any mechanical purpose, to come in free.

Mr. ALLISON. Precious stones rough or uncut.

Mr. VEST. They may be used by glaziers or even for ornament if they are uncut. Under paragraph 533 they would come in free.

Mr. ALLISON. They can not be used for ornaments until they are wrought or cut.

Mr. VEST. I understand, but still the uncut diamond to be used as an ornament comes in free under paragraph 533, and when you strike out paragraph 534 you strike out the implements in an industry used by jewelers in their business.

Mr. ALLISON. We admit diamonds, unset, for glaziers and for engravers, free of duty. The work of setting diamonds for glaziers is an industry as much as any other industry. There is no reason why they should come in free.

Mr. VEST. I understand that very well, but why should we discriminate against an implement of industry and still let in the uncut diamond for ornament? That is the point I make.

Mr. ALLISON. We do not discriminate in either case.

Mr. VEST. You take that off the free-list, but you leave uncut diamonds, which may be used for jewelry, on the free-list.

Mr. ALLISON. We manufacture these diamonds; we set them for engravers and for glaziers. It is as much a business in this country as making nails, and there is no reason why these articles should be on the free-list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to strike out paragraph 534.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paragraph will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 534 in the following words:

534. Diamonds set for glaziers' use, and diamonds set as pencils or drills for engravers' use.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to strike out this paragraph. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to know what becomes of paragraph 533.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read as it has been amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. Paragraph 533 has been amended so as to read:

Diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut (including glaziers' and engravers' diamonds not set), and diamond dust or bort.

Mr. VEST. That is used for jewelry, and it is free.

Mr. TELLER. I thought we had put the duty on those diamonds at 10 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. That was on cut diamonds. These are uncut diamonds.

Mr. TELLER. I thought we put the duty on cut diamonds at 25 per cent. We tried to do that at least.

Mr. HISCOCK. We have not touched the article of uncut diamonds at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will be resumed at paragraph 535.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

535. Divi-divi.
536. Dragon's blood.
537. Drugs, such as barks, beans, berries, balsams, buds, bulbs, and bulbous roots, excrescences such as nut-galls, fruits, flowers, dried fibers, and dried insects, grains, gums, and gum-resin, herbs, leaves, lichens, mosses, nuts, roots, and stems, spices, vegetables, seeds aromatic, and seeds of morbid growth, weeds, and woods used expressly for dyeing—any of the foregoing which are not edible and are in a crude state, and not advanced in value or condition by refining or grinding, or by other process of manufacture, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.
538. Eggs of birds and fowls, and of fish and insects, and egg-yelks, unmanufactured.
539. Emery ore.
540. Ergot.
541. Fans, common palm-leaf, and palm-leaf, unmanufactured.
542. Farina.
543. Fashion-plates, engraved on steel or copper or on wood, colored or plain.
544. Feathers and downs of all kinds, crude and unmanufactured.
545. Feldspar.
546. Felt, adhesive, for sheathing vessels.
547. Fibrin, in all forms.
548. Fibers and grasses.—China-grass.
549. Istle or Tampico fiber.
550. Jute.
551. Jute-butts.
552. Manilla.
553. Ramie.
554. Sisal-grass.
555. Sunn.
556. And all other textile grasses or fibrous vegetable substances, unmanufactured or undressed, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.
557. Fish, fresh, except when frozen or packed in ice, or otherwise prepared by any process, for preservation.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have some explanation of paragraph 557. It seems to me, if I read it aright, that it is a sort of a false pretense. Certainly under that provision no fish could be imported into this country practically, certainly not except in very cold weather, unless a man might land fish in one day from Canada to Maine or New Hampshire. But generally speaking, fish could not be transported in the fresh state except when frozen or packed in ice to any distance, which would make their importation a matter of importance.

I should think it would be better to strike out the words "except when frozen or packed in ice," and let the paragraph apply, if at all, to those fish which might be prepared by some process distinctively for protracted preservation. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 557 in the following words:

557. Fish, fresh, except when frozen or packed in ice, or otherwise prepared by any process, for preservation.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Kansas move to strike out the entire paragraph?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes; I move to strike it out.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator to strike out all after the word "fresh" in the paragraph, so as to leave fresh fish on the free-list.

Mr. PUGH. Strike out the exception.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to that. That will accomplish my purpose. I only wanted to have the paragraph free from the reproach that I think attaches to it in its present condition.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Strike out the words "except when."

Mr. PLUMB. I accept the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the first line of paragraph 557 it is proposed to strike out the words "except when;" so as to read:

Fish, fresh, frozen, or packed in ice, or otherwise prepared by any process for preservation.

Mr. PLUMB. No; strike out all after the word "fresh."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. No; I suggest to strike out the words "except when."

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Arkansas might have suggested to strike out the words "or otherwise prepared by any process for preservation."

Mr. VANCE. That would include salt fish?

Mr. GRAY. That would include salt fish.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out all after the word "fresh."

Mr. VANCE and Mr. VEST. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the first line of paragraph 557, after the word "fresh," it is proposed to strike out the words:

Except when frozen or packed in ice, or otherwise prepared by any process, for preservation.

So as to read:

557. Fish, fresh.

Mr. PLUMB. I will move to transpose the rest of the clause if the amendment should be carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes appear to have it.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that on this question the yeas and nays may be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. VEST. I withdraw the call.

Mr. COCKRELL. The call is withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. What was the announcement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri called for the yeas and nays; but subsequently withdrew the call.

Mr. HALE. What was the announcement by the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the amendment by the sound appeared to be agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired for the rest of the day with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], at his request, and vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PAYNE. My colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], with whom I am paired, does not appear to be present, and not knowing how he would vote, I refrain from voting.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], I believe, is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. COCKRELL. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], so that both the Senator from Iowa and myself may vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I have already voted, inadvertently; so that the Senator can vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the Senator's vote may stand. I vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Vest,
Berry,	Gray,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Brown,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Coke,	Morgan,	Vance,

NAYS—18.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Allison,	Frye,	Palmer,	Teller,
Chace,	Hale,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,
Dawes,	Mitchell,	Spooner,

ABSENT—40.

Beck,	Daniel,	Hawley,	Payne,
Blackburn,	Davis,	Hearst,	Quay,
Blair,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Butler,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Call,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Cameron,	George,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Colquitt,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Harris,	Pasco,	Voorhees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appears by the roll-call that a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Pugh,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Berry,	Farwell,	Morgan,	Teller,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Chace,	Frye,	Paddock,	Vance,
Chandler,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa.
Coke,	Gray,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.
Dawes,	Hampton,	Plumb,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. EVARTS. I move that we do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator from New York allow me to offer a resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly.

SOMERVILLE, MASS., POST-OFFICE.

Mr. DAWES. I offer a resolution for present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to; as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to communicate to the Senate copies of all leases of buildings or parts of buildings for the use of the post-office in Somerville, Mass., executed since the 1st day of December, 1887, and of all correspondence with the Department or any officer thereof since said date concerning the same.

LOAN OF FLAGS TO INAUGURAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc. It was passed the other morning, and at the time I called the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to the language of it; that it was too wide. He has ascertained by sending to the Department that certain amendments are necessary. I enter a motion to reconsider, and ask that an order be made for the House of Representatives to return the joint resolution to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the time elapsed within which a reconsideration can be moved?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered, accompanied with a request to the House of Representatives to return the joint resolution, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. EVARTS. I renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will ask the Senator from New York to withdraw his motion for a moment so as to allow me to make a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. EVARTS. I prefer to insist on the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 11, 1889, at 11 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 10, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn; and pending that, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 3, noes 28.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 62.

Mr. WEAVER (one of the tellers). No quorum.

Mr. CRISP. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted, and the gentleman from Georgia moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The roll was called, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Allen, Miss.	Cooper,	Ketcham,	Plumb,
Anderson, Kans.	Crain,	Laird,	Rayner,
Bacon,	Dargan,	Lyman,	Robertson,
Barry,	De Lano,	Maffett,	Rockwell,
Belden,	Dorsey,	Mahoney,	Rusk,
Bingham,	Dougherty,	Maish,	Seney,
Boutelle,	Felton,	McCullogh,	Shaw,
Bowen,	Fitch,	Merriman,	Shively,
Breckinridge, Ark.	Ford,	Milliken,	Snyder,
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Gay,	Mills,	Spinola,
Brumm,	Glover,	Morse,	Stahlnecker,
Bryce,	Goff,	Neal,	Thomas, Ky.
Buckalew,	Greenman,	Norwood,	Thompson, Ohio
Burnett,	Guenther,	Nutting,	Whiting, Mass.
Butler,	Hayden,	O'Neall, Ind.	Whitthorne,
Campbell, Ohio	Henderson, N. C.	O'Neill, Mo.	Wickham,
Cannon,	Hermann,	Owen,	Wilber,
Clardy,	Hitt,	Parker,	Wilkins,
Cockran,	Hogg,	Payson,	Wilkinson,
Collins,	Hovey,	Phelan,	Woodburn.
Compton,	Jones,	Phelps,

The following members were absent on leave:

Bowden,	Fitch,	Lyman,	Parker,
Breckinridge, Ark.	Guenther,	Maffett,	Perry,
Carlton,	Gay,	Mahoney,	Thomas, Ky.
Caruth,	Granger,	Moffitt,	Whitthorne,
Caswell,	Hooker,	Neal,
Dougherty,	Laird,	Penington,

After the second call,

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR said: I ask that my colleague, Mr. WICKHAM, who is absent sick, be excused.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the names of the absentees to be called, and as they are called excuses can then be made.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to know whether this is the first or the second call.

The SPEAKER. This is the second call.

Mr. TAULBEE. How many calls do we have on a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the second call of the roll is now progressing, the names of the absentees being called for excuses. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, the question I put to the Chair was whether this was the first or the second time the Clerk has called the roll? I understood the Chair to announce that this is the second call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. TAULBEE. And I wish to know whether this is a call for the offering of excuses or not?

The SPEAKER. It is for the offering of excuses.

Mr. TAULBEE. Because, if I am right in my recollection, I entered the Hall just as my name was passed, and on a subsequent call I answered to my name.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded.

Mr. TAULBEE. But that is not the point.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll of absentees.

The SPEAKER (interrupting the call). The Chair finds that the gentleman from Kentucky is correct. The attention of the Chair was occupied at the time; but the Chair has now ascertained that the Clerk had already called the roll twice.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then if a third call of the roll is not in order, I object.

The SPEAKER. The call will be suspended.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MILLS, be excused on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. HAYDEN, be excused on account of illness.

There was no objection.

Mr. McSHANE. My colleague, Mr. LAIRD, is absent, at his home, sick.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska has leave of absence.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I ask that my colleague, Mr. HITT, be excused for the day, as he was called from the city last night.

There was no objection.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I ask that my colleague, Mr. WICKHAM, be excused, on account of sickness; and also that he be granted leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The House on this call can not grant leave of absence but for the day. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Ohio will be excused for the day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to inquire whether a quorum has appeared.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and forty members have answered to their names.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 58, no 1.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the following order be agreed to by the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. Let it be read.

Mr. KEAN and others. Regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope gentlemen will hear this read before they object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let us have the regular order. No one man shall control this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was in hopes that the House was ready to transact business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the further count by tellers, and the tellers will resume their places.

After some time spent in the count,

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR said: I have a resolution which I offer as a matter of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. But the House is now voting.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I understand it is in order to offer it any time.

The SPEAKER. Not while the House is voting.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I understand it is.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will send up the resolution, it will be read, and the Chair will decide whether it can be taken up.

The Clerk read the paper sent up.

During the reading,

Mr. TAULBEE said: Mr. Speaker, is that the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has offered it as a matter of the highest privilege, and the Chair will have to hear it read to determine whether it shall be entertained.

The reading of the resolution was completed amid much laughter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it can be entertained at this time.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask unanimous consent that it be adopted.

Mr. REED. I suggest that the committee proposed by the gentleman from Ohio ought to be made permanent, so as to treat with each member as he makes his appearance, because the gentleman is only exercising a right which belongs to me and every other member of this body.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain the resolution. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TAULBEE. I think that this resolution—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the question of privilege.

Mr. TAULBEE. My question of privilege is, the resolution just read is offensive to the House and ought to be taken down by the Clerk. [Cries of "Regular order!"] That its purpose is to reflect upon some member of the House who is not named.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any rule or practice of the House that requires the Clerk to take down a resolution, except in the Journal in the usual way.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be adopted. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the vote by tellers.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask whether the resolution just read at the Clerk's desk [cries of "Regular order!"] goes into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I ask to withhold my remarks for revision. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The voting will proceed.

Mr. SOWDEN (at 1 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.). I move that the House do now adjourn. It is quite evident that there is no disposition to proceed with business, and we may just as well adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The tellers have not reported.

The tellers reported—ayes none, noes 110.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The motion of Mr. SOWDEN was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. HATCH: A bill (H. R. 12034) granting a pension to Robert Phillips—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 12035) granting an increase of pension to Maria L. Hammer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 12036) granting a pension to Peter Rowe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12037) granting a pension to Mary D. Craig—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEAL: A bill (H. R. 12038) for the relief of Sarah A. Willhite, widow of William H. Willhite, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. L. ANDERSON: Petition of Daniel K. Patterson, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BUCHANAN: Petition of the New York Typographical Unions No. 6 and No. 98, in favor of the copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CANDLER: Petition of heirs of James Ball, late of Milton County, Georgia, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Mary Haney, of Calhoun, Tenn., to be placed on the pension-rolls—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SENEY: Memorial of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, favoring the abolition of the internal-revenue system—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petition of citizens of Oneida County, New York, praying that the shipment of alcoholic liquors from the United States to heathen countries be stopped—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

The following petitions against the passage of the international copyright bill were received, and severally referred to the Committee on Patents:

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: Of printers and others, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

By Mr. COX: Of printers and others, of New Orleans, La.

By Mr. JACKSON: Of Smith Curtis and others, citizens of Beaver County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. McCORMICK: Of George N. Rianhard, of George S. Rehart, of A. J. Quinby, and of F. J. Cutter, of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. J. W. STEWART: Of J. H. Livingston, of Bennington, Vt.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 11, 1889.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "A quorum being present"——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I doubt that, Mr. President. I call for a count.

Mr. BUTLER. I move a call of the Senate. I believe I have a right to make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The third rule provides that—

> The Presiding Officer having taken the chair, and a quorum being present, the Journal of the preceding day shall be read, and any mistake made in the entries corrected.

Mr. BUTLER. There is evidently not a quorum present. The only way to secure a quorum is to call the roll of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll of the Senate will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Colquitt,	George,	Wilson of Md.
Butler,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,
Chace,	Farwell,	Paddock,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ten Senators have answered to their names.

Mr. GEORGE. I suppose a quorum will be present by the time the Journal is read. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But a quorum is not present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain any motion for the transaction of business until it appears by the record that a quorum is present.

Mr. SAWYER entered the Chamber and responded to his name.

After a little delay the following Senators entered the Chamber and responded to their names:

Messrs. VANCE, VEST, SPOONER, PAYNE, MORRILL, DAWES, WILSON, of Iowa, PLATT, HISCOCK, REAGAN, CULLOM, SHERMAN, ALDRICH, BLAIR, STOCKBRIDGE, STANFORD, DAVIS, RIDDLEBERGER, BERRY, BLACKBURN, EUSTIS, HALE, TURPIE, FRYE, DOLPH, HAWLEY, HOAR, EVARTS, and MANDERSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum being present, if there be no objection further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., favoring the passage of a bill fixing a tariff duty of at least 2½ cents per pound on tin-plate; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3672) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 4353) to provide a temporary home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy; and

A bill (H. R. 10652) to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3046) to place James T. Peale on the retired-list of the United States Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9674) to regulate the course at the Naval Academy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 128) appointing James A. Waymire, of California, a manager for the national homes for disabled soldiers, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William Blanding; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3806) to provide for the purchase and preservation of the historic site of Fort Gage, in Randolph County, Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB, in the first line of paragraph 557, under the heading "free-list," after the word "fresh," to strike out:

> Except when frozen or packed in ice, or otherwise prepared by any process, for preservation.

So as to make the paragraph read:

> 557. Fish, fresh.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the objection I have to the paragraph as it stands is just this: Under it people in Maine and at all other points along the water line between the United States and Canada can avail themselves of the privilege of purchasing fresh fish from the Canadians free of duty, while the moment they are required to be transported 50 miles into the interior they are compelled to pay a duty. That, it seems to me, is giving to the people who live on the border and who may be supposed to have a sufficient advantage already, the opportunity of having that free which the people of the interior are denied.

Now, let it be one way or the other. Either let all fish pay a duty, or give to the people of the interior, remote from the points where the catch is made, the same opportunity to buy them free of duty that the people of Maine, and of Ohio, and of Michigan, and of Illinois, and so on, have. The rule ought to be applicable alike to all the people of the United States so far as it can be. Here is a manifest discrimination.

I want to say one thing further about the fishing business. For some reason or other, in some way, the fish in this country seem to be entitled to a greater amount of consideration than the beef or the pork. I am aware that our New England friends, by reason of a very conspicuous ability, the power of concentrating their interests, etc., have had very considerable control of legislation. I do not object to their having everything they are entitled to, but while we have always been compelled in the interior to pay duty upon the salt which we buy for the purpose of packing our beef, pork, and so on, and preserving our butter, the New England people have had the privilege of curing their fish by salt imported duty free. In other words, they are free-traders when that is to their interest, and for protection when it is to their interest. That is of course a very proper position to take, because we are all here contending for the interests of our respective constituencies.

Now, we are asked to say that they may buy Canadian fish if they please free of duty. The Senators from Maine and Massachusetts and the residents of all the border line between Canada and the United States have the privilege, under this paragraph, of buying fresh fish free of duty from their Canadian brethren, but, as I said, the moment we come to transport the fish into the interior, and require for such purpose of transportation to pack them in ice, they are to pay a duty, and thereby all the great body of the people of the United States remote from the outer periphery of this country, are compelled to pay for that particular article of food, which is as necessary to them as it is to anybody else, a duty which is, if not greatly burdensome, at all events a discrimination.

I say let us all be put as nearly as possible on the same footing, and then I am willing to take it whether it be a benefit or a burden, but I object to the discrimination which is provided for in this paragraph as it stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not think the policy which has been adopted by the committee in proposing the present clause in the bill, or the policy which has prevailed in this country in one form of statutory provision or another from the foundation of the Government, rests at all upon the principle to which it is attributed by the Senator from Kansas. I do not think that the bounties or the protection or the exemption which have been granted from time to time to the fishermen of the northeastern coast have been the result of greed or rapacity or a desire on their part to get an advantage of their country or any of their countrymen.

The present proposition, as I understand, grows out of the fact that the Canadian authorities refuse to American fishermen the opportunity to send to the American market through Canada or to put up in ice and preserve for the market fresh fish upon their soil. Therefore, Canada, unless there be some provision of this sort, must have the monopoly and control of the American market for fresh fish. She pays her fishermen a smaller compensation in wages, she gives them a bounty, her territory is close to the fishing-grounds, and she is enabled, therefore, to control the American market of fish by prohibiting our fishermen from making use of her territory either for transportation or for the preparation of fish and the protection of fish against decay.

I do not understand that the policy which makes it desirable to prohibit that involves at all the general question of protection to the American industry. If it did I suppose the argument would be sufficient, certainly for myself and for the persons on this side of the Chamber who agree to that principle. But this rests on an altogether different theory, and that is that it is necessary for this country, if it is to be a commercial power among the nations of the earth, to be able to furnish in time of war a navy capable of contending upon equal terms with the navy of any other nation on the face of the earth.

Mr. Webster said long ago what I suppose nobody denies, that the rank of any country among commercial powers must depend on the amount of military or fighting strength which it can at any particular time cause to be water-borne.

We have conceived that instead of establishing costly schools for the training of seamen, for the training of officers competent to command ships, for the training of men accustomed to exposure and to danger and to the prompt use of all resources of mind and body in the hour of trial, it is better to cultivate a peaceful occupation under the fostering care of the Government which would accomplish that result. Instead of paying ten, twenty, or fifty millions of dollars for as many naval schools like Annapolis or schools corresponding in the Navy to West Point, we have supposed that it would be for the interest and would be the pleasure of the entire American people to submit to the slight increase of cost of this article of food to accomplish this result.

The result has been to vindicate the wisdom of the policy of our fathers in this matter. We have had from this source, from this peaceful occupation, a ready supply of seamen in all our naval wars. We had it in the Revolution. It has been shown by an accomplished historical scholar very recently that the number of sailors in the Revolutionary war was larger than the number of soldiers.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question on that point?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. To what extent are the sailors of whom he speaks Americans?

Mr. HOAR. That is a point I will deal with presently. I suppose more than 75 per cent., from the best information that can be got by comparing the different census reports.

Mr. TELLER. The Department report gives it at 75 per cent.

Mr. FRYE. Over 85 per cent. of the Maine sailors are Americans.

Mr. PLUMB. I should suppose that all Maine sailors are Americans.

Mr. FRYE. Of the Maine fishermen, I mean.

Mr. HOAR. They are native Americans and men who become Americans. A very prominent and skillful public speaker went down to Provincetown, in Massachusetts, to make a political speech a little while ago, and thought he could get great favor by denouncing the Bluenoses. It turned out that among the substantial citizens of that town who were voters, of the audience which he was addressing, a very large number of the men who had engaged in the fishery business were natives of the British provinces who had come to this country and become domesticated, Americanized, and naturalized.

But what I was saying when the Senator interrupted me was that this policy has been signally vindicated by its success in all our wars. In the Revolutionary war it has been lately shown by an eminent historical investigator that there was a larger number of seamen than there were of soldiers engaged in the battles; and it was not the tax, it was not the capture of Cornwallis, it was not the discomfiture of the British arms in our land battles, glorious and brilliant as they were, which led England to make peace. Her people would have stood increased tax, they would have stood increased debt, they would have stood military reverses, but it was the destruction of the West and the East India trade, and of the trade with the Mediterranean itself, by the American Navy and privateersmen, of whom Paul Jones, and Abram Whipple, and Tucker, and others were the conspicuous examples, which compelled the mercantile class of England to clamor for peace. Marine insurance, even in the Mediterranean, went up to a range of from 40 to 60 per cent.

The history of the war of 1812, which still in some parts of the country passes by the name of "the late war," has been rehearsed in this Chamber too recently to make it worth while for me to allude to it again. But I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony on this subject of the service of these fishermen in our war of 1812, the sailors of the Navy who were obtained from among these fishermen, which came to my knowledge only last evening.

I bought two or three weeks ago a book just published in England, entitled "Some Correspondence of George Canning," being the correspondence of Canning which it was not thought discreet to publish immediately after his death, when his life was written, and which is now in a much larger part given to the world. Here is a letter near the end of the second volume which I think will be interesting to every Senator to listen to. It is written by Mr. W. James, the distinguished author of the Naval History of Great Britain, and one of the great historical authorities of that country, to George Canning, then prime minister. It is dated January 9, 1827, twelve years after the close of the war of 1812, twelve years and one day after the battle of New Orleans. He writes to Mr. Canning. I will read a few sentences from this letter, and I think it is one which is calculated to make the heart of every American swell and glow in his bosom:

PERRY VALE, KENT, January 9, 1827.

SIR: Allow me to present you with a copy of the new edition of my "Naval History of Great Britain." * * * The menacing tone of the American President's message—

Which was the message of John Quincy Adams of December, 1826—

The menacing tone of the American President's message is now the prevailing topic of conversation, more especially among the mercantile men in whose company I daily travel to and from town. One says, "We had better cede a point or two than go to war with the United States." "Yes," says another, "for we shall get nothing but hard knocks there." "True," adds a third; "and what is worse than all, our seamen are more than half afraid to meet the Americans at sea."

This is from the author of the Naval History of Great Britain, addressed to the prime minister:

Unfortunately this depression of feeling, this cowed spirit, prevails very generally over the community, even among persons well informed on other subjects, and who, were a British seaman to be named with a Frenchman or a Spaniard, would scoff at the comparison. Whence has this arisen?

Then Mr. James goes on to say that this has arisen in part from the fact that the American accounts of the battles have remained uncontradicted. He goes on to say that he in his naval history has corrected them and has shown that the British seamen did better than was supposed. Now, he says:

Pray, sir, read over my accounts of American warfare. As I know how fully occupied your time is, and how valuable every portion of it, I would not presume to ask this, did I not believe that a case will soon occur when as a statesman you will feel it necessary to touch upon American affairs, were I not convinced that a sentence falling from your lips in Parliament, expressive of a conviction that in the late war between this country and the United States, so far from British seamen having evinced any want of spirit, they had afforded indubitable proofs of bravery and devotedness, would tend very much to dissipate those ill-founded alarms spread over the country.

Then he goes on to say how the British showed their spirit in the war of 1812:

It is defeat oftener than victory that tries the stamina of a seaman or soldier.

Then he goes on:

Surely, sir, there never was a war so badly conducted at its commencement and so unseasonably brought to a termination.

Then he goes on to say:

One reason that the Americans are so angry with you for shutting out their vessels from the British West Indies is that it deprives them of a nursery for their seamen. * * * Keep the Americans from the fisheries and from trading with the British possessions in the provinces and the West Indies and you will clip their means of becoming formidable at sea.

Then the editor goes on to explain this letter, and he says that undoubtedly the Americans felt kindly towards Mr. Canning.

It was difficult to persuade them—

That they had much to fear from the warm-hearted and brilliant statesman, about whom they probably felt, in the curious, jealous way that citizens of the United States do feel in regard to illustrious Englishmen, a sincere and sympathetic admiration.

No doubt our cousins will think none the worse of our spirited naval historian for his anxious wish to inspire Canning with a sense of the permanence of British pluck and energy if wanted for a war with their most formidable rivals.

Mr. President, the letter of Admiral Porter in which he expresses his strong sense that the support and fostering of these fishermen was never so important to our naval strength as it is now, and that the change from sailing vessels to vessels propelled by steam has made the necessity for this training much greater instead of much less than it was before, and the testimony of Admiral Luce to the same effect is,

I have no doubt, fresh in the recollection of all Senators; and it seems to me that if it were true that the fostering of this industry would not in the end bring down the price of fresh fish to all Americans, which I firmly believe, still that we ought to adopt this policy, that it is the cheapest and wisest, the most economical and the most patriotic. The governor-general of Canada, in a recent utterance, indorsed and published, cited by the clerk of the Canadian council, is most emphatic to the same effect, while he points out that the great fortifications of England on the two seas, at Halifax and at Esquimalt, on the Atlantic and the Pacific, will enable Great Britain to command both the Atlantic and Pacific seas if she can have in addition to that a hundred thousand Canadian fishermen on whom to call in case of the breaking out of war.

While this attempt to menace us on both seas is not only going on but is avowed, it seems to me that the same policy which dictated the rejection of the fisheries treaty and this proposition for free trade in fish ought to induce the Senate and both Houses of Congress and the country to support heartily and generously the policy which has been announced by the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to ask the Senator a question before he gets through. I would have been glad to have had him keep up these historical reminiscences during the remainder of the session, so far as the mere pleasure of listening to him is concerned, but it is entirely apart from what I had to say on this question.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator does not suppose that I meant to attribute to him any want of patriotism. He is the last man in the country to whom I would attribute a deficiency of patriotic spirit.

Mr. PLUMB. But I want the Senator to meet the point. I want him to tell the Senate and the country why the people living along the border adjacent to Canada should have free fish if it is so necessary to keep up the American marine, and yet the privilege of free fish is denied to people who live away from the coast, which is the effect of this provision as it now stands in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think there is the least possibility of that. I do not see that there is any distinction. We do not propose to buy Canadian fish cheap.

Mr. PLUMB. It is proposed to buy them free, whether cheap or dear.

Mr. HOAR. Not at all.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly; every man who lives along the line between Canada and the Unitad States can buy his fresh fish free of duty, and every one who lives away from that line, far enough to require his fish to be packed in ice in order that he may have them, has to pay a duty on them. Let the rule apply to all, if it is so important to keep up the New England sailors or the American marine. Let it be done by imposing a tax upon all the people who buy fish, the Yankees along with the rest.

Mr. HOAR. It does not strike me that the Senator's point is well taken. As I understand the bill, all fish preserved in ice, which may be preserved six or even twelve months, is made subject to a duty, and that the fish just caught and which will perish in a day or two are allowed to be sold when brought in, no matter who brings them in. I wish to say one word, which I may properly say at this time. The letter of Admiral Porter, which I quoted in full in the debate during the last session on the fisheries treaty, contained a sentence or two which was thought to be and I think in part was disrespectful to a portion of our foreign seamen who man our naval vessels, of the Scandinavian race, from Sweden and Norway, and I shall ask the opportunity to say here what I have said emphatically elsewhere, that my observation and my knowledge of the people of that race lead me utterly to disclaim any concurrence with any such idea or opinion.

The city where I live has a very large number of Swedish immigrants. They are filling up the cities, especially where any manufactures of iron go on; and as we all know they are coming in very large numbers to the States in the Northwest, and without disparagement to any other class of immigrants, I desire to say that they are inferior to no emigration which ever came to this country, including in that remark the original Puritan emigration which took place to New England and the original Cavalier emigration which went to Virginia and Carolina. They take kindly instantly to our institutions. They are industrious, thrifty, wise, temperate, lovers of home, lovers of Sunday, lovers of order, lovers of education. They are found on the honest side of every public question. They have a large public spirit, and it is one of the most hopeful things in the future of this country that these people are coming over to us in such large numbers.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate more than a single moment. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas and the Senate to the operative words in this provision. They are "for preservation." The settled policy of the Government, from which no one suggests any departure at this time, is that fish preserved in salt shall not be admitted free; and it seems to me very strange that any one should, while adhering to that proposition, agree to a proposition which allows fish preserved by any other process to come in free. It is strange to me that any one desires that fish preserved by any other process should come in free while he holds that fish preserved in salt should pay a duty. Those are the operative words here.

Now it has come to pass that there are other processes besides the use of salt by which fish can be preserved indefinitely and come out in the end just as they were put in. That subverts the idea which governed the putting of fresh fish upon the free-list. Originally it had attached to it this phrase, "fish, fresh, for immediate consumption." Now fish are frozen by a new application of an old process of using ice. They are so frozen when taken as to become like a solid rock, and they are kept six months or a year or longer in precisely that state, and are then brought out as fresh fish for immediate consumption. That is an entire subversion of the original idea. The original idea of allowing fish for immediate consumption to come in free nobody objected to when it was put in the bill, and if honestly administered as then understood nobody would object to it now. It was not put in for the benefit or at the suggestion of anybody on the coast. It is of no sort of advantage to any city or town or inhabitant of Massachusetts or Maine. They do not get their fresh fish for their tables from Canada. The fishermen living on their coast go out and catch fish for immediate consumption and supply them; but the Canadian fishermen close by there, beyond Eastport and in that neighborhood, sought the opportunity to bring their fresh fish for immediate consumption into our ports, and it affected nobody's interest substantially. It was conceded; and thereupon and thereafter this new process of applying ice to them turned them into fish preserved precisely and essentially as fish are preserved in salt; and it is to meet that view that this phraseology is put into the bill, if I understood the committee aright.

That is the complaint which has been made, and the Treasury Department for a long time were of the opinion that fish so prepared were not fresh fish for immediate consumption. Now, if fish could be packed in ice in the ordinary way sufficiently to enable them to be carried into the interior for the table, nobody would object to the immediate consumption in that way; but they are so frozen by this process as to become blocks of stone, and are then carried and kept for six months or a year, so that the market which is usually stocked with salt fish that everybody claims should pay a duty is supplied in that way by frozen fish.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts in this connection upon what theory, or what the reason is, that salt used in packing fish should be entitled to a rebate? I should like to understand that.

Mr. DAWES. There are two reasons. The original reason has been elaborated very ably by my colleague [Mr. HOAR]. Another reason is that while American salt has come to be shown to be better for all the uses of salting meat and butter and the products of the farm, American salt has not been demonstrated as yet to be of such quality as to preserve fish as well as the foreign salt; but the principal reason, I have no doubt, is the reason alluded to by my colleague. Upon that question I have no argument to make myself, for I have no knowledge of the different qualities of the salt. But I have understood that that enters into the consideration.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not desire to let the Senator's statement in reference to the character of American salt being inferior to foreign salt pass unchallenged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is well settled that the American salt is superior, and if the Senator from Massachussetts will take occasion to investigate that question and take the testimony of the men who use salt on the coast, he will learn that they regard American salt as the more valuable and the purer of the two. On that question there is no sort of doubt.

Mr. DAWES. I am very glad to know it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am willing to leave that question to the fishermen on the coast of New England and take their testimony upon that subject. I confess for myself I have never been able in any of the arguments made by the Senator from Massachusetts or by anybody else to see a good reason why protection should be sought for fish and at the same time free salt demanded by the fishermen.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I am very glad to know that the superior qualities of American salt are being so demonstrated that they can not be brought in question. I have stood by the Senator from New York and those who have preceded him in Congress here for thirty years answering the reasons given for free salt in this country, the great body of which was the inferior quality of American salt. I have battled for and contended that American salt was just as good as any salt that could be imported, and have stood by the tariff upon salt until I have seen it brought down from $3 a barrel to 65 cents a barrel under the operation of the protective duties.

I have understood, however, that in the matter of curing fish the fishermen have not been brought up to acknowledge what the Senator now says; if they have, that element is eliminated from this question; and having confidence in the statement of the Senator from New York, I shall not use it any more. But the argument that it is necessary to protect the calling of the fishermen and the seamen in our marine, to encourage them, the argument that is brought to the support of giving them this encouragement, being all that can be given them, is quite as potent as it is to encourage those engaged in bringing the American salt to the surface in day labor by putting a duty on foreign salt generally. I will not quarrel with the Senator on this point. I rose merely to try to make the Senate see clearly and the Senator from Kansas in particular that it was not fresh fish for American consumption that anybody stood on this floor objecting to. If anybody wants fresh fish taken right out of the water for immediate consumption or carried in ice to any table where it is to be immediately consumed, it will not hurt or help the tables of the consumers on the coast. They get their fresh fish just as easy and just as cheap when they buy them from the American as from the Canadian; but when people undertake to put these new processes in the place of salt for the preservation of fish, consistency requires either that we make salt fish free, or that fish preserved by any other process to the end that salt fish is preserved should pay the same duty.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator a question. I want now to ask the Senator from Massachusetts who has just taken his seat the same question I asked his colleague: Why the people who live along the Canadian coast and the line between this country and Canada—and especially why the people on our northeastern coast, who are so much interested in building up the fishing industry—should insist upon the privilege of getting fresh fish free from the Canada side and deny that privilege to the other people of this country?

Mr. DAWES. They do not do it. My answer to the Senator from Kansas is that, so far as this side of the American line is concerned, our people do not object; and if the Senator will devise a phraseology and an administration of the law that will bring it back to the original idea of fresh fish for immediate consumption, those on the border, so far as I understand, do not object to that. The men on the other side who want it are the few fishermen on the immediate border who want to come in alongside of the fishermen this side of the border who do supply the morning table with fresh fish. That is my answer. The Senator does not seem to see any force in the statement that fish preserved by any other process ought to be put in the same condition with salt fish.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, let us see precisely what the meaning of the proposed amendment is—the amendment to strike out the words proposed by the Senator from Kansas, which would leave fresh fish free of duty to all the people everywhere. By paragraph 267, a paragraph which we have already passed upon, it is provided:

> Foreign-caught fish (imported otherwise than in barrels or half-barrels), smoked, dried, salted, pickled, frozen, packed in ice, or otherwise prepared for preservation, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

The effect of the two provisions together, as they stand and as they would be without the amendment, would be that only those on the immediate border could be entitled to receive free of duty fresh fish. The Senator from Massachusetts who has just taken his seat [Mr. DAWES] says that the people on the border do not want that. If they do not, why is it here and in whose interest is it put here? He suggests, as I understood him, in the interest of Canadian fishermen or fishermen whom he described as "on the other side." Now this protection tariff bill, I had understood all the time, went upon the idea that it would protect America labor, not Canadian labor.

So I take it for granted it is meant that those who live upon the immediate border shall receive their fresh fish free from duty, and that all other people shall receive their fresh fish if they are "frozen, packed in ice, or otherwise prepared for preservation, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act," burdened with a duty of one-half a cent per pound.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me, I will relieve him from that argument. There is not a man, there is not an interest, there is not a representative, so far as I know, of the border that wants fresh fish for immediate consumption introduced free. They do not ask it. It is conceded, not asked.

Mr. REAGAN. If they do not want it and if it is manifestly unjust, then we ought to agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If nobody wants this privilege, as it is called, if we can all see the manifest injustice of making some people pay duty on fresh fish while exempting others, if the injustice of it is so manifest that, as the Senator says, nobody wants it, it seems to me the amendment ought to be adopted without division.

Mr. DAWES. Did the Senator hear me state that if anybody could devise a phraseology to insure an honest administration so that it should be confined to the original design of the law, we would not object?

Mr. REAGAN. Then I think I can suggest to the Senator what would meet his view in that respect. It is to take paragraph 267 down to the word "pickled" and strike out the other portion of it and just say "fresh fish" in the other clause. Let paragraph 267 stand in this way: Foreign-caught fish (imported otherwise than in barrels or half-barrels), smoked, dried, salted, or pickled, shall pay a duty of a half cent per pound. Then leave out the rest of that clause. It will be seen that paragraphs 262, 263, 264, 265, and 266 relate to other portions of this question; and then if paragraph 267 is amended so as to strike out all after the word "pickled," and paragraph 557 is amended as suggested by the Senator from Kansas, we shall have the formulation of the idea, it seems to me, suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts who has just taken his seat [Mr. DAWES]. That, it seems to me, would be just and fair; nobody would be wronged; fresh fish would come in free, but all salted fish would go taxed to all consumers.

But the Senator from Massachusetts suggests that since the process of freezing fish, packing them in ice, etc., has been discovered, they are placed upon the same basis as fish preserved in salt. But the salt does not go in, that element does not go into the preservation of the fish; they are fresh fish, and as fresh fish they ought to go on the same terms with regard to duty to everybody. But the provisions of law ought not to be made manifestly in the interest of a particular class of people of a portion of the country while other portions of the country and other people are excluded from its provisions.

The other Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests a policy in relation to this question that we should cultivate the fisheries as a means of increasing and improving our seamen, so as to be better prepared for the defense of the country. So far as it will have that effect, that, of course, is a good argument; but so far as the strengthening of the naval power of this country is concerned, I believe every vote, every action of mine has shown that I am disposed to do whatever can be done to give us an efficient Navy and to give us useful, and active, and experienced, and trained seamen; and to that end during the last session of Congress, on account of representations made from the fishing interest of our northeastern coast, which the Senate will doubtless remember, I proposed the following in a bill which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

> That from and after three months from the passage of this act the officers and at least three-fourths of the crews of any merchant vessel belonging to citizens of the United States, engaged in the transportation of merchandise or passengers, or both, to or from any foreign country, or between the States, and all fishing vessels owned by citizens of the United States and engaged in fishing in waters outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, and all whaling vessels belonging to citizens of the United States and pursuing their vocation in waters outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, shall be either native-born or naturalized citizens of the United States: Provided, That this act shall only apply to whaling vessels which leave the ports of the United States after its passage.

I introduced that bill for the purpose of training American seamen and to stop the process of American capital training Canadian seamen, and I did it because of representations coming from those interested in American seamen. If we really desire to train American seamen in the business of fishing, let us adopt provisions that require the owners of these vessels to put at least three-fourths of Americans, either naturalized or native, on board. That would go far to meet the case, and would be of infinitely more advantage in improving the naval school and giving sea-faring employment to our people than anything contained in the provisions of this bill will do.

So it seems to me that on fair consideration the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas ought to be adopted, and when adopted that we ought also to go back to paragraph 267 and strike out all after the word "pickled." That will make the bill in this respect fair and just. That will make preserved and salted fish come in subject to duty and allow fresh fish to come in free of duty, and there will be no discrimination. I do not see that the amendment can in any way affect to any conceivable extent the question of the training of seamen.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question.

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the law at present with reference to foreigners engaging as seamen on American vessels?

Mr. REAGAN. I am not able to answer the Senator from Mississippi as to what the law is, but this bill of mine was drawn with reference to the practice, and I regret to say has never been reported by the Committee on Commerce. The practice, as was fully demonstrated here by information sent to us and discussed upon this floor pending the Canadian treaty, is largely to man American fishing vessels by Canadian fishermen and Canadian sailors, and it was to meet the practice that the bill was introduced. I did not go into the law. The Senator from Vermont will no doubt be able to tell us what the law is.

Mr. GEORGE. I would like to ask that question of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], what the law now is with reference to foreigners serving on fishing vessels; are they allowed, and to what extent?

Mr. FRYE. There is no law preventing foreigners serving as seamen on American vessels. There is a law which prevents them attaining the position of first or second officers, and that has this effect upon Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island men, who, by the way, are just as good men as can be found anywhere in the world, and who make as good citizens as we have in the United States after they become naturalized. That law has induced these active seamen coming on our vessels to become naturalized, because each one of them is ambitious to become first or second officer of a fishing schooner.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that the law, then, is at present that any foreigner can serve on a fishing vessel except as captain or mate.

Mr. FRYE. Except as first or second officer.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine another question on that subject. What was the law originally on that subject, and when was the law modified so as to allow foreigners to serve on vessels? Originally, was not the law different from what it is now?

Mr. FRYE. The law, I think, touching fishing vessels and coasting vessels has not been changed for a large number of years, but the law concerning vessels engaged in the foreign trade has been changed within the last ten years. As to coasters and fishermen, I do not think there has been any change in a great many years.

Mr. GEORGE. In the early administration of the Government, when fishing bounties were first granted, what was the law then?

Mr. FRYE. My understanding is that it was the same as it is to-day.

Mr. GEORGE. The same as to-day?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. That all foreigners might serve?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the people among whom I immediately live in the State of Vermont are not engaged in the fishing industry at all, and we therefore have, and I therefore have, no more interest in it than my friend from Texas or my friend from Kansas. We want to get all kinds of food as cheap as we can, and we wish to sell everything that we can make as high as we can; and I take it that is the rule all over the United States and everywhere else. But we have had the opportunity by absolute experience on two long occasions with Canada and the British provinces and the Government of Great Britain of knowing precisely what has happened when the duties upon fish have been entirely removed and they have been admitted into the United States, brought by Canadian fishermen and imported in British vessels, absolutely free of duty. If that resulted in an increase of the American fishing industry, the number of its ships, its officers, its sailors, and the people engaged in it, and consequently in advantage to the United States in the respects that Senators who believe in having a navy at all and sailors of experience on the high seas, then it ought to be followed; but if on the other hand, on the two occasions when for ten years at a time we have tried it, the reverse has been proved to be true, and the American consumer of fish paid what he did before for the fish on his table, and the Canadian dealer, or the American importer, or the Canadian fisherman, or whoever he was, made the profit that otherwise would have gone into the Treasury, and the consumer got no benefit from it, and the American industry was broken down or decreased and the British fishing fleet enormously increased, and the British provinces enormously increased, then it would be a pretty good time now not to repeat the experiment.

Mr. President, in the year 1886 a committee of the Senate was directed to investigate the fishery question, not particularly as it regarded the tariff but as it regarded the situation of American and Canadian fisheries as a matter affecting our foreign relations. That committee proceeded to Boston, to Provincetown, to Gloucester, to Portland, and so on, and took the sworn testimony of ship-owners, ship-captains, fish importers, fish-dealers of every kind, without regard to political selection; and they were carefully examined, and cross-examined, and sifted. The concurrence of their testimony was all one way with the exception of one or two gentlemen, the principal of whom, as I now remember (for I have not time to run through the whole of this extensive testimony), stated that he thought the consumer bore the duty on fish, and that we ought for the benefit of the consumer to have free fish again; but it turned out that he was the agent of the British shippers in the British provinces and that the business that he carried on was their business. That of course would diminish the weight of the testimony if it was exactly opposite to and not in accordance with the testimony of all the other people who were engaged on their own account, and who were citizens of the United States and doing a United States business.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Senators—my friend from Texas in particular, who is interested, as every patriot ought to be, in keeping up the material for a navy—to the testimony of the deputy collector at Provincetown, Mass., which the Senator knows, of course, is a great fishing port, as to fleets going along the coast and to Canada and on the high seas to operate in fish.

Mr. REAGAN. The last report?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The print which I have before me embraces the very last report on the treaty (which does not touch this question), but it also embraces the former report and all the testimony, and for convenience, to have it all in one book; on page 646 the gentleman to whose testimony I now call attention states that he has been in that office for eighteen years; and I repeat that Provincetown has its affairs and its collections and its ships and everything engaged almost exclusively in this business. This gentleman, being asked to state what had followed the reciprocity of 1854, and more particularly the reciprocity of 1871, as it was as to fish, you understand, although it was not a universal reciprocity in 1871, gave these statistics:

I will first give you the products of the British fisheries to show the effect of the treaty from 1872 to 1884—

A period of twelve years. I said ten before, but I forgot that there was a one year's notice, and it was a little lapsus— and the amount of importation into this country.

In 1872 the value of British products—

Meaning Canadian fish, as he afterwards explained—

the value of British products—

That is to say, fish in the provinces—was $7,532,200. We imported that year into the United States $1,020,081 worth.

Q. That is fish products?
A. Yes, sir. The intervening years I will not give, but give them for 1884.

Then he is asked if he has the figures for the intervening years and he says he has, and then we asked him, in order to save our time, to make a table of those years and attach it to his testimony, which you will find later on.

The WITNESS. In 1884 the value of British products was $17,852,521; we imported that year $5,633,566; the gain being in products of Great Britain—

Meaning all the time, you understand, the Canadian fisheries—

the gain being in products of Great Britain $10,320,521, and the gain in importations, from 1872 to 1884, inclusive, into this country was $4,613,455.
The increase of Canadian fishing vessels and boats during the same time was as follows:
In 1873 the fishing vessels numbered 402, and fishing boats 9,009.

I may remark that we all understand, I suppose, that the Canadian people keep their government statistics in a much more exact way, and I must say also in a much better arranged way, and put them together better than we do. So this gentleman having them was able to bring it down even to the precise amount of 9,009 of fishing boats.

In 1884 they had 902 fishing vessels and 12,772 boats, a gain of 500 sail of fishing vessels and 3,763 boats.
In 1882 the Province of Nova Scotia alone added 143 fishing schooners, chiefly bankers, and 1,526 men, to her already large fleet.
And in this connection I refer the committee to Report on the Canadian Fisheries for the year 1883, page 21. I have that report with me.

That is one of these Canadian reports to which I made allusion.

I will now state the decrease in American tonnage during the same period.
In 1873 the fishing tonnage of the United States was 109,519 tons.
In 1884 it was 82,565 tons, the loss amounting to 26,954 tons.
I will now state the decrease in the number of fishing vessels in the six ports of Cape Cod, that is, in this county—

The district of Barnstable.

In 1873 the number of vessels belonging to Provincetown was 190 sail. (I would say that this is taken from the official records at Barnstable, from the latest authority.) In 1885 there were 118 sail.
In Wellfleet, in 1873, there were 71 sail; in 1885 there were 47 sail.
Dennis had in 1875 46 sail, and 19 sail in 1885.
Chatham had 18 sail in 1873, and 20 sail in 1885, being a gain of 2, and the only one that has gained.
Plymouth had one in each of those years.
Hyannis had one each year.
The total for the six ports in this district was 266 sail in 1873, and 206 sail in 1885, a loss of 60 sail and 2,000 tons during that time.

So much, Mr. President, for what followed in a time of peace and of general prosperity under the reciprocity treaty as it regards fish with Great Britain, affecting the Canadian provinces and the United States from the treaty of 1871 until we abrogated it in 1885.

The substantial destruction certainly, not to state it too strongly, the crippling of American interests and American business, and the corresponding increase and advantage of foreign interests and foreign business, was what followed.

If we received a compensation for that, if the people of the United States who live in Kansas and Texas and Vermont and wish to eat fish received a compensation by the price of fish falling, so that the injury to this business interest and to the naval interests of the United States was countervailed and balanced and an advantage secured to the people of the United States in cheap fish on their breakfast tables, then we should be bound, perhaps, to say "amen."

Mr. PLUMB. Has the Senator any other statistics in regard to these subjects since the date he has mentioned, to show whether there has been any increase of our fishing tonnage since the changed condition arose?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not, because since 1886, when this testimony was taken, I have had no occasion or opportunity to ascertain what it is.

Mr. PLUMB. I wanted to know whether the change of conditions has resulted in any increase of tonnage on the American side of the line.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be a desirable thing, but as the treaty was extended by the President and Secretary of State for six months after it was abolished by Congress, and as the fact was that the fishing business had been crippled and tremendously depressed, so that its recovery everywhere is always slow, it might not appear that yet even, if it would in the end, any considerable increase has happened; but I do not know how that is.

Mr. PLUMB. For fear the Senator will forget the point I have made and the only one, will he please tell the Senate in the line of his argument how it will help to reconstruct the New England fishing marine to give to the New England people free fresh fish brought from the Canadian side, which this paragraph proposes to do?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say that I can not do it, and I do not believe it. I hope that answer is fair.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly it is if the Senator believes that this proposition is vicious. Then I am happy to agree with him to that extent. That is, the proposition to admit fresh fish free under conditions which will enable the people who live on the immediate line of border between Canada and the United States to purchase them free of duty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not on that proposition at all.

Mr. PLUMB. That is the only proposition which is pending.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand that perfectly, but the debate is upon the question of the duties on fish, because in one way or another they are all correlated.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from Vermont will allow me to state to the Senator from Kansas that I do not believe the people of New England desire any discrimination, and if I can obtain the floor at the end of the remarks of the Senator from Vermont, I will make a motion which will dispose of that point which has been so vehemently urged by the Senator from Kansas in setting up a difficulty which does not exist and which is easily removed and which the Senate can remove.

Mr. PLUMB. How will he remove it if it does not exist?

Mr. HALE. Strike it out.

Mr. PLUMB. There must be something to remove, or else it can not be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I come to the question of the effect of duties. We have seen that the effect of putting Canadian interests on an absolute equality with those of the United States in regard to the fishing business on the Atlantic coast has been disastrous to the American fishing interest and extremely advantageous to the British fishing interest; and the same may be affirmed to be true as it regards the Pacific coast and as it regards the Great Lakes. There is no difference in longitude that affects this question at all.

Now I come to what the effect of duties or no duties is upon the cost of this kind of food to the people who have to eat it. I have lived long enough in the neighborhood of free fresh fish under the law to know that the price that the consumers of the State of Vermont have paid under these long periods of free fish and under the intervening and comparative periods of dutiable fish has not been changed on account of the fact that the fish were admitted free and that the man who eats a fresh codfish for breakfast has during any one of these years had to pay his grocer or retail fish dealer in the market or at the corner store just as much as or more than he did before, according to the quantity of fish that were caught in the sea and got to the market, and that the difference in profit that was made by taking the duty off fresh fish went into the pockets of those who originally caught the fish or were engaged in the business of employing men to catch them or of the men who imported them or of the wholesale dealer who is always at a few great places in the coast markets, and when you have left the wholesale dealer and have got to the place where the individual citizen buys for his table, whether fresh or salt, the odor of saving has lost itself and he stands exactly where he did before.

This testimony, which is open to all Senators and to the public, is full and complete upon this subject. If you may believe the concurrent testimony (with the modification or exception that I have stated) of a large number of gentlemen, some of them Republicans, some of them Democrats, some of them wholesale dealers, some of them persons engaged in the ownership and fitting out of ships to bring the fish in, salting them, repacking them, shipping them abroad (and they all swore that when they shipped them to Hayti, Portugal, or France, or wherever, they had to pay the duty, and not the Portuguese, the Haytians, or the Frenchmen), their statement as to the business they knew about and the statistics of which were daily reported in the newspapers just as much as the Journal of the Senate shows what we did last year, shows that the price of fish to the consumers of fish, either fresh or salt, was not affected by ten years of free trade under the reciprocity of 1854 or by twelve years of free trade under the reciprocity of 1871.

If, therefore, the point is to relieve the consumer of fish by diminution of duty or putting it on the free-list—I do not care whether fresh or salt, for I see no distinction—you have failed in that particular; but you have accomplished what the British and Canadians have so much desired, the breaking down of the American fishing industry and the American people who are to be officers and seamen in our Navy, and the legitimate and entire business of the men who are engaged in these perilous employments, and have gained no benefit to the people of the United States as consumers, but have put into the pockets of the foreigner enormous advantages in the transaction.

I do not wish to take the time of the Senate by reading these long statements going into details and showing exactly how the fact is, but I will state the result.

I ought to say as to the one gentleman, Mr. Wrightington, who said that the consumer bore the duty, that when he was pressed he stated that he was a dealer, and the agent, I believe, of a Canadian shipper, but in regard to the fact as to the price of fish before and after the treaty of 1871, he finally was obliged to say that on looking it up he did not see that the price was changed, but sometimes the fish would be plenty on account of the variations in their habits and then the price of fish would fall in the wholesale market; but as to the codfish, he and all of them said that the price of fresh codfish remained the same all the year round.

I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate in going through these marked passages; but here is the evidence. It is accessible to all.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator from Maine allow me a moment?

Mr. HALE. I will yield for a moment to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to make some responses to the remarks of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HALE. I am willing to yield for a few moments.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is rather a compound question of whether we shall have free fresh fish for a part of the country and fresh taxed fish for another part of the country, and I wish in the interesting observations of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that he had stated his views upon that question.

Mr. HALE. It may be well, if the Senator proposes to discuss that proposition, to state to him what was my object in claiming the floor, and that is to move to strike from the bill the provision which is numbered 557, so that this apparent discrimination which has been referred to and discussed by the Senator from Kansas shall be removed.

I propose to submit some remarks in support of that, but if the Senator desires to go on first I will not take him from the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to interfere with the object of the Senator from Maine, but I have a few remarks to make, and would be glad to make them at this point.

Mr. HALE. I will yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator from Vermont has presented us some very interesting statements going to show that under the reciprocity treaty in relation to fish the fishery interests of Canada have greatly increased, both the shipping and the business aspects of the fisheries, and that the like interests of the United States had decreased. I think his statistics fully sustain the view which he presented on that subject. The only feature about that which causes any regret with me is that we should ever have to think of that reciprocity treaty in which we paid $5,500,000 in the end for the privilege of being cheated, monstrously cheated, by the treaty-making power of Great Britain. I never think of that treaty and the Clayton-Bulwer treaty but that I feel a disposition to shrink from them, because it seems to me that our interests in both cases were deliberately sacrificed, perhaps not intentionally, but they were sacrificed. That is the only observation I desire to make about that.

What the statistics presented have to do with the question before the Senate I hardly understand, unless it is to be assumed that the admission of free fresh fish on the eastern coast will increase the fishing force of Canada and reduce the fishing force of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not made any argument or suggestion (but have stated exactly the reverse) in support of admitting fresh fish free of duty, because this very same testimony and on that very point on the page I have opened states in the clearest and most positive terms that as to fresh fish right along the coast it does not benefit the consumer a hair, but it benefits the Canadian and the wholesale dealer and the importer, and nobody else.

Mr. REAGAN. If it does not benefit the consumer to make the fish free there I do not see how it could affect the consumer to make them free elsewhere. The difficulty is the discrimination between making free fresh fish for a few people and taxing other people for them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not defend any such discrimination. I condemn it.

Mr. REAGAN. I am glad to hear the Senator say he does not approve it. Now, then, so far as the general subject of taxing fish is concerned, if we turn back to paragraphs 262 to 265 we find—

262. Fish.—Mackerel, pickled or salted, 1 cent per pound.
263. Herrings, pickled or salted, one-half of 1 cent per pound.
264. Salmon, pickled, 1 cent per pound.
265. Other fish, pickled, in barrels, 1 cent per pound.

Then, passing over paragraph 266, which relates to sardines, we come to paragraph 267, which reads:

267. Foreign-caught fish (imported otherwise than in barrels or half-barrels), smoked, dried, salted, pickled, frozen, packed in ice, or otherwise prepared for preservation, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

So all such losses as those caused by the reciprocity treaty by having free fish admitted into this country and all such gains as Canada made by it are obviated by the provisions of the bill as reported by the committee, and meets the argument suggested by the Senator from Vermont. That is all I understood that was in his argument, and that argument is met by the provisions of the bill as they stand, and turns us back to the question before the Senate as to whether there shall be fresh fish for a small part of the American people and taxed fish for all the other American people.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move to strike out clause numbered 557, which reads:

557. Fish, fresh, except when frozen or packed in ice, or otherwise prepared by any process, for preservation.

Mr. PLUMB. Is that in order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves to amend the amendment of the Senator from Kansas by striking out all of the paragraph.

Mr. PLUMB. Is that in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that it is in order.

Mr. PLUMB. Is not that in the third degree? This substitute is itself an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that when a motion is pending to strike out and insert, the part proposed to be stricken out and the part proposed to be inserted are both regarded as original questions; so that for purposes of amendment, the amendment of the Committee on Finance is treated as an original question.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] seeks to interpose any technical objection to my motion, because the root and purpose of my motion is to remove the difficulty that he has so earnestly suggested, that retaining the provision makes a discrimination in favor of the market upon New England and the eastern coast, and the Senator has said, with iteration and reiteration, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has repeated the argument, that this is an unjust discrimination; that no reason exists why New England and the Atlantic coast should have fresh fish free when other parts of the country pay duty upon them. I recognize the force of that, although practically, as applied to the New England and the Eastern market, the question would never arise.

The real operation of the law as applied under this paragraph, if it remains in the bill, would only operate along the little line of the St. Croix River in favor of small provincial fishermen who catch a boatload or a string or a hundred or fifty pounds and bring them into the market there. It was not intended, not framed, with any idea of discriminating in favor of the New England or Eastern market. But as the Senator from Kansas has raised the point and has earnestly urged it, to meet his objection, to meet that suggestion of discrimination in favor of the New England and Eastern market, I move to strike out the whole clause. That leaves all fresh fish under the duty fixed in another portion of the bill, at one-half cent per pound. Then New England and the Eastern market get no benefit over and above the other markets in other parts of the country, and I am willing to stand there.

Now, in addition, Mr. President, I wish to say that this opens what was at the bottom underlying a large part of the purpose and discussion around the negotiation of what is known as the fisheries treaty. All the fear that was raised in that negotiation came from the desire of the Canadians to secure the markets of the United States for their fish. I had occasion to say in the course of the debate which arose upon that treaty that if Canada could obtain the markets of the United States for her fish she would yield everything else. That was the purpose underlying the negotiations set on foot and the determined stand taken by the Canadian and the British negotiators backing up the Canadian negotiators, and that whole subject is raised here. If the Canadians can get possession of the markets of the United States they will be content, and if they can get possession of a portion of the markets of the United States for a portion of their fish they will to that extent be content. If they can bring in their fish preserved not by salt but by freezing processes, as has been described by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], then to that extent they are content, and win the victory over our industries, because, Mr. President, the fact is that lying at home, as the fisheries do, at their door, or near by, with the difference in the cost of their outfit and in the wages that they pay, you give them the benefit of the markets of the United States for their product, for their catch—which is the technical word rather than "product"—they will drive from the sea the New England fishermen. That is as inevitable as tide and sunrise. That will come just as surely as the precession of the equinoxes. Every New England fisherman knows that. He knows that he can not stand that competition; and it is because of this, and because of the interest felt in this hardy class that have been the nursery of the American Navy for years, that from the beginning the forefathers took this interest in hand as a nursery for the Navy, and have protected it and favored and subsidized it from the earliest day.

So much so was this done that a bounty direct was paid in the olden time to the American fisherman, so much per ton for every fishing smack that he sailed out in and caught and brought his fish in. Money from the Treasury was directly paid out for years and years, until at last, because of the objections to this bounty and because under it excesses and abuses had grown up, it was repealed; and all that is left to the American fisherman to-day is the protection that is afforded him by the duty and the salvation of the American market for his enterprise, and the little benefit that he gets in being allowed free salt in bond to cure his fish. That is all that is left to the American fisherman, who was foremost with the fathers, with the early legislators, in his claim and in being recognized as an interest and an industry that should be protected by the Government. Pretty much everything has been stripped from him. He stands to-day with nothing else than this protection afforded by the duty laid on his rival, who can drive him out of market with free fish, and the little boon that is afforded him by free salt to cure his fish; and it is proposed now to take away both the duties, open the market to his rival, and take away what little help he has in the nature of the drawback upon salt.

Mr. President, if the American Senate to-day is prepared to take that unpatriotic stand with reference to the American fishermen, then it will do different from what I believe it will.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maine, for I did not quite catch the drift of his remarks in that respect. I understand him to say that if the tax is taken off fish the American fisherman will be driven out of his business. I should be very glad to be informed why it is that the American fisherman can not proceed with his business as safety and as economically as the Canadian fisherman? Are not the same conditions surrounding both of them?

Mr. HALE. The same conditions do not surround them by any means.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator be kind enough to state what the difference is?

Mr. HALE. The Senator could not have heard me. I did not go into that.

Mr. BUTLER. I was trying to get the drift of what the Senator said, but I did not do so.

Mr. HALE. I alluded first to the fact that the Canadian fisherman is at home close by the fisheries, and he can build his vessel, he can man and sail it and supply it, and particularly in the item of labor, at 50 per cent. of what ours can.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not in a large measure the American fisherman at home also? Can not he build his own ships, can not he build his own schooners or fishing vessels, and is it not a fact that a very large number of those engaged in American fisheries are Canadians, brought here by Americans?

Mr. HALE. No; the extent of that is very much exaggerated. The proportion is small, and of the foreigners who are employed in American fishing vessels a large proportion come here and settle and become naturalized.

In addition to the advantages that the Canadian fisherman has which I have referred to, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests that he can take his fish into port and send them overland, getting the benefit of the competition of the two kinds of transportation. He stands head and shoulders in advantage above the American fisherman to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I confess I can not understand it.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say here that during the long-protracted and interesting discussion that took place upon the fisheries treaty, other Senators will remember with me that Senators upon the other side of the Chamber in alluding to this condition of the American fishermen expressed themselves as ready to keep for his benefit all the duty that is laid and all the protection that is afforded him by the statutes as they exist now. The burden of the discussion was that nobody proposed to take that off, and yet when we approach this subject I admit there is this other assault on the fisheries.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it a fact that the Canadian Government pays a bounty to its fishermen now?

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has the figures.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Maine will allow me——

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say that there is one controlling reason why the American fisherman can not compete with the Canadian fisherman. The Dominion of Canada has voted $4,000,000 of the $5,500,000 paid to them by the United States Government under the arbitration award, and devoted that as a fund for the protection and encouragement of their fishermen, and they pay the income of that sum of $4,000,000 in the way of direct bounties to Canadian fishermen to the extent of $3 for each person engaged in the fisheries, $2 on each ton of tonnage of all the fishing vessels engaged, and $1.50 for each boat. These direct bounties to the Canadian fishermen amounted in 1885 to over $100,000, and for three successive years prior to that time the average was in the neighborhood of $100,000 per annum.

Mr. BUTLER. Practically, then, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, the money from which those bounties are paid came out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. Precisely. We are furnishing the money which the Canadians are now using, and the Senate of the United States is asked to assist in the work of destroying the American fisheries with the money which we paid them.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no desire whatever to destroy the American fisheries. I should like to do justice to all industries.

Mr. HALE. I think from the Senator's question the Senator from South Carolina is with us.

Mr. BUTLER. No, I do not know that I am with you to the extent that you desire to go; but I should like very much, as I always like, to do justice, and I simply want to understand the situation. If it be true that these bounties that are paid now to the Canadian fishermen came out of the Treasury of the United States and the Canadian people outwitted us in getting that money, I do not think we ought to complain about that. We made a bad bargain according to all accounts, and we ought to stand up to it like men, and I do not think that ought to be suggested now as an argument.

Mr. ALDRICH. I only suggested it as a fact, not as an argument.

Mr. BUTLER. To sustain an argument, then.

Mr. HALE. It shows the advanced position of the Canadian fisherman, and it shows how impossible it is without some protection from us for the American fisherman to maintain his avocation.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from South Carolina asked what advantages the Canadian fisherman had. I did not mean to intimate that there was any additional advantage, but that the money was paid to Canada by the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. I rather thought that was the purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. No, I was only stating a historical fact; and Canada levies a duty of half a cent a pound on all fresh fish imported there.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I thought if one thing was accomplished by the debate we had last spring and summer upon the fisheries treaty, so called, it was that the idea that the New England fisheries were the nursery for the American Navy had been exploded. It seems to have been abandoned towards the last of that debate by Senators on the other side who were opposing that treaty, and it was stated in the course of that debate from statistics——

Mr. TELLER. I should like to hear what the Senator says was abandoned. I did not catch what he said.

Mr. GRAY. I said it seemed to me that if one thing was accomplished by that debate it was the explosion of the idea that the New England fisheries were a nursery for the American Navy, and that it seemed to me that Senators on that side towards the close of that debate rather abandoned the extreme claims they had made in its beginning that the fisheries were so important to the United States in that point of view. That is what I said, or intended to say.

But, Mr. President, from the statistics which were produced in that debate on this side, and from our sources of information, such as they were, it was distinctly shown that a very large per cent., more than one-half, of the fishermen who manned American fishing vessels owned by these great New England fishing syndicates were Nova Scotians or from the provinces, not citizens of the United States nor intending to be, but men who shipped for the season, returned to their homes after the fishing season was over, and were in no sense, as far as they were concerned, material from which the American Navy could be recruited. On the contrary, they were the material from which a British navy would naturally be recruited. But one thing which was very apparent to those who were examining that question, on this side at least, was the extreme difficulty with which any exact information could be obtained from the owners of the vessels.

The fishing industry of the United States or of New England has changed since those halcyon days when it was in fact a nursery of American seamen and manned the ships that in the war of 1812 humiliated British pride upon the sea, and it has followed, as other American industries have followed, the direction of concentration in the hands of a few capitalists who own the ships, owning from a dozen to twenty, and manning them where they can obtain fishermen and sailors the cheapest, and resorting to that great source of fishermen and sailors, the Britsh provinces, recruiting their men and fitting out their crews from that great hive of sailors and fishermen, pursuing—as they had a right to pursue—their calling in a way that would be most for their benefit, and getting sailors and fishermen where they could get them cheapest.

But what I was going to say is that since that debate closed it has come about that a committee appointed by the House of Representatives, the committee called the Ford committee, that has been investigating the matter of contract labor, has disclosed the fact that we underrate the percentage on this side of Canadian fishermen who are employed in American fishing vessels, and that committee asserts, and I believe it has been so published, certainly I have been so told by a member of that committee who has been actively conducting the investigation, that 75 per cent. was an estimate quite within bounds of the number of Canadian fishermen, not men who came down from the provinces and expected to be naturalized, but of men who shipped for the season and went back to their homes in those provinces after the fishing season was over. So I believe the argument, such as it is, drawn for the purpose of maintaining a nursery for American seamen, has been by this time thoroughly exploded.

I admitted the force of that argument when the facts supported it. I should be the last one to deny the necessity of encouragement to that hardy class of our fellow-citizens who in time of war and upon the seas would man our vessels; but the facts do not exist from which that argument can be drawn. Conditions have been modified and changed since that was an argument which properly appealed to American pride and to the intelligence of the American people.

Now, about this fresh-fish clause; the argument of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is pretty much the argument we have heard so often here that somebody or other in this country owns the American market and that a few people can stand up in the face of the great body of American citizens all over this continent and say, "You are our market; we have a proprietary right in your earnings; we have branded you the home market, and you belong to us;" as if down here in the Washington market some thrifty housewife should go with her basket and be told when she went to the stalls, "You and those like you in this city are our market, those of us who live on the north side of the Potomac, and nobody from the south side shall sell a bunch of vegetables or a wild turkey or a bit of game, and you must buy from us." That is the one-sided transaction which is involved in this argument of "our market" and "the home market."

We are only considering one side of the bargain. A great mass of consumers all have a right to a market, they have a right to say that some market is their market where they want to buy, and their right to buy as cheaply as possible under the circumstances of the case deserves some consideration if not protection. If the poor people of this country, people of moderate means, can have upon their breakfast-table fresh fish for breakfast, not only along the Atlantic seaboard but away inland and across the Mississippi, from this new process of packing in ice and freezing, then, sir, it ill becomes the American Senate to say them "nay." And when the Lenten season arrives, that is now fast approaching, when millions upon millions of our fellow-citizens are required by their faith to confine themselves to a diet of which fish is a very large and important component, they are to be told that the cost of living is to be increased to them because, forsooth, the fish market belongs to a few capitalists in New England who will insist on the fact that the buyers of this article are their legitimate prey under the phrase of being their market!

Mr. President, so one-sided, so selfish a consideration as this can never obtain, it seems to me, the approbation of the American people, but will some day come back to plague those who are now supporting that view. I believe that this great food product, which is to become yearly of more and more importance, should be conserved, should be protected, in the interest of the great mass of the consumers of this country. I united some three sessions ago on a bill that was introduced here and came from the Committee on Fisheries proposing to enact a law which we hoped at that time would tend to preserve the fish supply of those waters near the Atlantic coast, and tend to retard or interfere with the wholesale and reckless destruction of the mackerel fisheries, because I believe more and more as population becomes dense on this continent that source of food supply will be of importance to the people of this country. But it is not to be preserved for the benefit of fish syndicates of New England. They have their rights, and the people who buy from them have their rights also.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he sits down. All the way along the Canada line and everywhere that our occupations come in the vicinity of occupations in any foreign country, I find the laboring people flocking to America and working in and producing in American industries and receiving American compensation. Now, the argument which the Senator makes seems to be to this effect, that because laboring people who come from Canada are engaged in the fisheries of New England, therefore the fishing interests of New England are not entitled to that same protection which is extended to all other occupations under the theory of this bill. That being the case, reminding him, as I might, of the great number of Canadians who work in the lumbering interests all along the Canadian frontier, I ask why it is that he selects this particular New England interest for his objection and does not assail the entire system of occupations as well?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, it is not my purpose, if I can help, to assail any occupation. I want even-handed justice, if I can get it, or approximately at least, in the laws of our common country.

I did not use the argument that merely because Canadian fishermen were engaged in manning American fishing boats, therefore and for that reason alone fresh fish should be allowed to come into this country free of duty; but I instanced that fact, which seems to have been sufficiently ascertained, that a very large proportion, to wit, so large as 75 per cent. in my belief, of the men employed in American fisheries were Canadian fishermen, and that fact destroyed the argument of these fisheries being a nursery for the American Navy; and it is upon that ground, and that ground principally, if not alone, that the American fisheries have been held up for these many years, for at least three generations, as an object of peculiar regard and a subject for the especial protection of the Congress of the United States. That was the connection in which I alluded to the fact.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Delaware will allow me a word. The Senator makes a very important statement, which I should be glad to have verified further or corrected, because it is in direct contradiction of the statement made by the Senator from Maine. The Senator from Delaware now says that 75 per cent. of these fishermen are Canadians. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] only a few moments ago stated that 85 per cent. of the fishermen that went out from Maine, were engaged in the fishing industry, were Americans. So it seems now we have a great disparity, one insisting that nearly all our fishermen are foreigners and the other insisting that they are practically all our own people.

Mr. HALE. Right there let me say that I have seen myself hundreds of these fishing craft fitted out and sent to the banks to catch fish from the different fishing ports of the State of Maine, and I have never known in all twenty foreigners out of the hundreds and thousands that manned those vessels. So far as the State of Maine is concerned, the Senator's figures are all wrong, utterly disproportioned, and fail to give what is the true condition. I do not know where he has got his figures, but they are not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. GRAY. It is of course somewhat embarrassing for me when the Senator from Maine, whose accuracy and intelligence and honesty I so entirely respect, throws into this debate his own personal testimony and I have no experience of the kind with which to meet him. I was relying upon such investigation as I had been able to make last summer into this matter as one gentleman engaging in the fishery debate, and upon the information that I received from a member of the committee known as the Ford committee of the House of Representatives that had been investigating under the order of the other House.

Mr. HALE. What committee?

Mr. GRAY. It is known, I believe, as the Ford committee.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Immigration?

Mr. GRAY. A committee investigating the matter of contract labor. Whatever the committee may have been called, it has been investigating this and kindred subjects, and I was told by a member of that committee—giving the source of my information—who knew that I had been interested in the debate on the fisheries treaty, so called, and that this matter had been incidentally brought into it, that we very much underrated the percentage of Canadians engaged on American fishing vessels, and that that percentage was 75 per cent., speaking within bounds, of Canadians.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator just at that point please explain to me why it is any objection to protection to these American fishermen that they employ some foreign labor, when all other occupations, all other plants, and the capital invested in other business, use foreign labor also? Why should there be a discrimination? Why not protect this as well as any other labor?

Mr. GRAY. Of course the phases in which any matter of protection or of tariff comes before this body are very multiform, and it would take a great while to discuss it in all its aspects. It is not because alone in this particular industry foreign labor is employed to so great an extent, but as I said awhile ago, I allude to this fact in answer to an argument that was principally, if not solely, relied upon as the reason why this industry should be singled out for the peculiar protection and the peculiar favor of the Government of the United States, to wit, that it was furnishing a nursery for American seamen. If the facts I have stated be true, or approximately true, it is a complete answer to that suggestion.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me one suggestion?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Delaware stated just now that the Senators on this side of the Chamber at the close of the debate on the fisheries question last year abandoned or yielded their claim in regard to the matter of this being a nursery for American seamen. I wish to put on record——

Mr. GRAY. Let me state what I intended to say. I said that it seemed to me that before the close of that debate that argument had been abandoned by them.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to put on record my understanding——

Mr. GRAY. I did not say that the Senator from Massachusetts had abandoned it.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to put on record my understanding. I think my ears were as open to what took place in that debate as those of anybody, and I did not hear anything which indicated the least expression of a belief of any Senator on this side of the Chamber that that claim was not true, that it was not true of the present as it had been of the past. On the contrary, I myself cited the earnest, emphatic statement of Admiral Porter, the head of the Navy, giving his reasons for its greater importance now than ever before, and the statement of Admiral Luce.

The Senator from Delaware made certain statements in that debate about the nationality of the fishermen employed in Massachusetts. They were based, so far as I recollect them, chiefly on one or two newspaper statements in one of the Boston papers, a free-trade paper and an administration paper, and on the fact that in some disaster it had turned out that the men who died or were lost had a certain large proportion of foreign nationality. That was encountered by putting into the debate the statistics of the United States census of 1880, the last statistics of the United States Fishery Commission, the statistics of the Massachusetts census of population of 1885, and the statistics of the Massachusetts census of occupations, taken by different persons and in a different way when being taken by going around to different employers in Massachusetts also in 1885, which I will put into this debate before we get through. I have them all here now.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. One moment, and I will yield to my friend from Wisconsin.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made a statement about which I wish to make a remark. I recollect very well the statements which were made by myself—I can not answer so well for those made by others; there were a number of statements made—in regard to the nationality of the fishermen employed on American fishing vessels. I stated then, as I state now, that it was exceedingly difficult to get definite and accurate returns from the owners of fishing vessels themselves on this point. I do not mean to intimate that they would desire to conceal that fact. I do not know it to be so, and therefore I make no averment in regard to that. But there was testimony I thought of a perfectly competent kind that came to the Senate commended as indirect and circumstantial evidence as it sometimes comes commended to a court of justice as being more reliable and more trustworthy than the direct testimony of persons having an interest in the subject in controversy, and that was that the official returns made by the agent of the syndicate of fishing concerns in New England of the losses for two successive years showed that a very large percentage, much more than 75 per cent., of those lost were men who were not citizens of the United States. That being the case, not for one year but for two years, it seemed to me not only very strong testimony, but almost conclusive testimony that the proportion of American seamen to foreigners was about the proportion stated in that account of the lost. It would be a very singular thing if two years hand running the waves and storms and lightnings on that bleak and stormy coast should direct themselves especially against the foreigners and exempt those of American birth; and, therefore, that was put in not merely as newspaper testimony, but as testimony of a very sufficient and very competent kind.

All I have to say about that is that the United States census and the statistics of the labor commission of the State of Massachusetts differ quite widely as to their estimates, and the present Labor Commissioner, Carroll D. Wright, in answer to a note written to me asking for further information on that subject, said there was a discrepancy, and that there had been great difficulty in getting the exact returns of the nativity of the fishermen who manned American fishing vessels.

But, sir, to recur to the question of the Senator from New Hampshire, it was not because there were men of Canadian birth, nativity, and citizenship engaged in this industry that it should affect our votes, but it was adduced to meet an argument on the other side, to wit, an argument that this was a nursery of American seamen that should be protected by the American Government. I do not know that the fact that numbers of Canadians come across the border every year to engage in the lumbering industry is a fact to control our votes in regard to free lumber; but, as I am in favor of free lumber, I should not let that fact interfere with my vote upon the question.

Mr. BLAIR. I simply ask leave to remind the Senator that it makes very little difference to us, so far as the maintenance of the American Navy is concerned, whether those who are to man it happen to live on this side of the line or the other. We look to the happy period, not far remote I trust, when we shall be one country, and we had better pursue, I think, a policy, as long as it has been the policy of the country and is the permeating policy of this bill, which looks to the prompt and immediate reconstruction, if I may so speak, of the entire continent, with a view to the amalgamation and the increase of all the physical forces to be found upon the entire area between the Gulf and the Pole, to say the least. The Senator from Delaware hardly makes his point against the argument on our side of the Chamber, at all events, when he says that in cultivating the interests of the Canadian fishermen we are not doing something for the American Navy.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. If my friend from Wisconsin will bear with me for a moment——

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to take the floor, and I will then yield to my friend from Delaware to discuss the question of Canadian annexation.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will never use the expression "Canadian annexation" again. To speak of it as "political union" seems to be the appropriate term. As the Senator is not a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations any more than myself, I hope he will pardon me for the suggestion.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator may prefer "political union" to "Canadian annexation."

Mr. BLAIR. I did not understand the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Chair understands the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. GRAY. I quite agree with my friend from New Hampshire that if that is the position taken by the Senators on the other side we shall have to reform our own lines in order to meet them. Like a skillful general and strategist, as I have no doubt he is, when he finds himself routed in one position he very quickly takes another. Whereas the argument was that this should be a nursery for American seamen with which and upon which to man American battle-ships, it now is that it is to be a nursery of Canadian seamen from which hereafter, in some remote future, we shall be able to draw our supplies, and that we are bringing up and nursing Canadian fishermen and Canadian sailors with which to man American men-of-war.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have not had the pleasure of listening to any of the debate upon this item except to the portion contributed by the Senator from Delaware. The argument which he makes in favor of a free fish market is not particularly addressed to this item, but is the argument which I understand to be the Democratic position at present in favor of the proposition to buy where you can buy the cheapest and sell where you can sell the dearest; in other words, what we on this side regard as the enunciation distinctly of a free-trade proposition.

I am very glad to believe that it is not popular with the American people, but that that broader proposition that we will preserve the American market, not for a few men or a few syndicates, as the Senator says, but primarily for the American people, is the one which to-day is, and I hope for the future will be, the governing one in this country.

My friend ignores one element in his proposition, that statistics heretofore taken show that the protection of the fishing marine has no relation substantially to the upbuilding of the American Navy. His assumption is that the American fishing vessels, deep-sea fishing vessels, are the vessels which alone are factors in maintaining a nursery of American seamen. He forgets that upon the Northern lakes, Lake Michigan, Lake Superior, and other lakes, thousands upon thousands of men, as hardy and adventurous seamen as can be found upon earth, are constantly engaged in fishing operations, and I think it will not be found that many of them are Canadians. Hundreds and thousands of them are our own citizens, many of them men who took part in defense of the Union in the late war.

In considering the question of the protection of American fishermen from the standpoint of national interest in a future navy, if the exigency should ever call for a great navy, that element furnished by the Northern lakes ought not to be omitted. I think Senators will agree that it is sometimes as difficult and as dangerous to navigate those lakes as it is to navigate the ocean, and men who grow to be skillful and brave seamen on those waters are capable of skilled seamanship in any part of the world.

I am a little surprised that the committee should have reported this paragraph 557 as they have. "Fish, fresh, except when frozen or packed in ice, or otherwise prepared by any process for preservation," is put by the committee on the free-list. If there was any one thing announced distinctly over and over again in the debate upon the fisheries treaty, it was that America ought not to grant to Canada facilities or favors in relation to our commerce or any part of our commerce that were not reciprocal. I am not quite able to understand why when Canada puts a duty of one-half a cent per pound upon all fresh fish caught by American citizens the Committee on Finance should put Canadian fresh fish, even for immediate consumption, upon the free-list. But it is a mistake to assume, as has been assumed in the debate thus far, that the only section of this country interested in this industry is New England. The fresh-fish industry in the West, on the Great Lakes, is enormous, and it is entitled to consideration. It is as much entitled to protection as any other covered by this bill.

I hold in my hand a letter from a gentleman whom I know very well, an able man and a man in every way entitled to credit, Hon. E. S. Minor, of Sturgeon Bay, Wis., which, with the permission of the Senate, I will read. It is addressed to my colleague and dated Milwaukee, January 7, 1889. It refers to this subject, and is as follows:

On the 4th of this month the Fishermen's Association met in convention at Green Bay for the purpose of recommending to our Legislature such changes as seemed necessary in our State laws regulating the fishing industry of our State.

Similar laws are enacted, I think, in Michigan and other States bounded by the Great Lakes.

Among other things, they recommend a memorial to Congress from our Legislature, asking Congress to levy a duty on all Canadian fish, fresh as well as cured.

So long as Canada levies a duty upon American fish, I can conceive of no possible reason why Senators, consistently with the position of the Senate upon the subject, should be willing to make Canadian fish, fresh, free.

I attended the convention as one of the fish commissioners of the State, and I was delegated to draught the memorial and such other changes as the State Fishermen's Association suggested. I know you have a tariff bill before your honorable body now, and possibly this duty may be provided for in that bill. Hence I write to ask if it has been provided for. I know Senators HOAR, FRYE, and others have had much to do with this question of protection to our fishermen, and they may have considered this question already. I wish to call your attention—

I ask the Senate to give attention to this, for it is statistical information from the West, not from New England:

I wish to call your attention to the importance of this industry in our own State. I have the figures before me as returned according to our present State law by the wardens of the three districts into which our Great Lakes are divided. The most of these fish are lake-trout, herrings, and whitefish. The law has been in force three seasons. There were caught and sold fresh in 1886 4,924,149 pounds; in 1887, 5,541,744 pounds, and in 1888, 8,568,532 pounds.

Similar statistics from Ohio, I take it, and from Michigan and other States bordering upon the lakes would show that in each the industry is rapidly increasing in importance.

He continues:

In addition to the fresh fish sold in 1888, there were 4,000 half-barrels sold of salted fish. To this may safely be added 300,000 pounds consumed and sold in a small way and not included in the above. The value of these fish taken from the waters of Lakes Superior and Michigan, and Green Bay—would amount to $400,000. The value of lake fish caught in the State of Michigan is nearly $2,000,000. At the rate our fish are increasing our waters in a very few years will produce a million dollars' worth of excellent food-fish. There is really no limit to what may be produced. We buy all our linen thread for fish nets in Scotland, and pay a duty of 40 cents per pound on it. We pay more for our labor. It costs more in every way to carry on our fishing business in America than in the Dominion of Canada, and yet they have always been allowed to use our markets free for their fresh fish. The Senators from Michigan ought to be interested in this matter.

Lying within the borders of Wisconsin, saying nothing of the other States—

The proposition of the Senator from Kansas seems to me to be nothing more nor less than a discrimination pure and simple, arbitrary and without foundation, in favor of Canadian fishermen and against American fishermen. Under the law as it stands to-day, and as it would stand if the committee's proposition is adopted as amended by the Senator from Kansas, Canadian fish can come into the United States without limit, to be transported anywhere within the United States for sale if they be salted or preserved on ice, but the American fishermen can not send a pound of fish into Canada for immediate consumption or preserved for transportation and future use without paying a duty of one-half cent per pound. That is to my mind a very singular protection to be proposed to be proffered to our fishermen by protectionists, by men who believe in the principle of protecting American industries, including American fishing interests.

The pending amendment, as I understand it, although I was not in the Senate when it was offered by the Senator from Maine, will impose the same duty upon Canadian fish coming into this country that Canada imposes at the same time upon American fish imported into Canada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair understands that the question now is on striking out the whole paragraph, as moved by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Which, as the Senator says, in connection with the other portion of the bill, leaves Canadian fish subject to a duty of half a cent per pound, all parts of the country paying alike.

Mr. BUTLER. Fresh fish?

Mr. HALE. Fresh fish.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no doubt the people of Kansas are fond of fish, and I am anxious that they should obtain fresh fish in great quantities and at low prices. Fishermen from my part of the country send them vast quantities of lake-trout and whitefish, as do the fishermen from Michigan. But I am prepared to believe that the people of Kansas would prefer, if necessary, to pay a little more for fresh fish caught by American fishermen than to turn over the American fishermen and all their interests to Canada in the way proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin, before he takes his seat, one question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senator if he thinks the fresh fish from Canada would come in serious competition with the fresh fish of Wisconsin, or Michigan, or South Carolina, or Georgia, or any other State?

Mr. SPOONER. Why not?

Mr. BUTLER. I say "serious competition." Does the Senator think that the introduction of frozen fish coming into our ports, transported by rail, paying the railroad transportation, would come in serious competition with any such fish as he adverts to?

Mr. SPOONER. Undoubtedly, all along the Canadian border. The Canadian Government gives a bounty. The fish are caught in the same waters. They are transported over the same lines of railroad. They meet us every day, and it would certainly not seem to need argument to show that that would be a competition which would be serious and which we are not called upon to bear.

Mr. BUTLER. Would it be such a competition as would really and seriously impair the value of the fisheries in the United States?

Mr. SPOONER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BUTLER. It might come in competition like a good many other things and yet not seriously interfere.

Mr. SPOONER. The writer of the letter which I have read states one fact which must be considered in connection with this competition, and that is that our fishermen pay for the netting material a duty of 40 per cent., while the Canadian fishermen pay nothing.

But I repeat that the proposition seems to me to be a monstrous one, that Canadian fish should be permitted by the American Congress to come into this country in competition with our fishermen free, while not a pound of American fish caught by American fishermen is permitted to go into Canada free.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire merely to put in a statistical table on the result of it. It will take but a moment. I should like the attention of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. The statistics of the census of 1880 and of the Massachusetts population and industry schedule for 1885 which were taken under separate direction, varied somewhat in regard to the matter of nationality. There was no result which gave less than 60 per cent. of native-born persons, if I am correct in my memory, in any of those, but they varied somewhat. Accordingly I called upon the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, an appointee of the present Administration, and pointed out to that bureau the discrepancy, and I got a letter from Mr. McDonald forwarding the following statement of Mr. Collins, the Assistant United States Fish Commissioner in charge of the division:

In compliance with the instructions contained in your letter of this date—

This is dated May 24, 1888—

(inclosing a letter from Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR) I have the honor to submit the inclosed table showing by customs districts and by totals the number and nationality of men on vessels employed in the cod, mackerel, halibut, herring, and other food-fish fisheries, from the State of Massachusetts, during the year 1886.

He then says—I will not read the whole letter—

I believe it safe to assume that these figures are not very much different from the actual facts at the present time.

These statistics for the vessel fisheries have been gathered with much care, as previously stated, by experts thoroughly familiar with the fisheries, and they are, therefore, believed to be exceptionally accurate and valuable.

That is the last Government report, for 1886, and is signed J. W. Collins.

Mr. TELLER. What does he make it himself?

Mr. HOAR. That I am about to state. He gives in that not only Massachusetts by customs districts, but gives also the entire New England States, as follows:

Detail showing nativity.

States.	United States.	Ireland.	Germany.	Great Britain.	Sweden and Norway.	Canada.	Miscellaneous.
Maine	4,017	12	8	24	1	162	20
Massachusetts	3,529	492	35	129	237	1,271	410
New Hampshire	207	.....	.....	1	4	9	5
Total	7,753	504	43	154	242	1,442	435
Rhode Island	823	18	5	18	3	12	12
Connecticut	1,198	15	8	12	5	2	20
Total	9,774	537	56	184	250	1,456	467

Mr. TELLER. A part of the Germans I suppose are citizens.

Mr. HOAR. From all these nations, the Irish, the Germans, the British, the Canadians, many of them become citizens or declare their intention to become citizens when they engage in this business.

According to this report, made when the attention of the office was expressly called to some difficulties about the previous statistics, there are 79 per cent. American-born, the bureau saying that the figures are exceptionally accurate and valuable. Here are 9,774 persons in 1886 native-born as against 2,950 persons of all nativities whatever other than those born in this country.

I also submit an extract from the report of Professor Spencer F. Baird for 1884. That is only two years before the other, which is for 1886. Professor Baird states the national importance and value of these fisheries, as follows:

The general results of the investigation, from the statistician's standpoint, may be briefly summarized as follows:

In 1880 the number of persons employed in the fishery industries of the United States was 131,426, of whom 101,684 were fishermen and the remainder were shoremen. The fishing fleet consisted of 6,605 vessels (with a tonnage of 208,297.82) and 44,804 boats, and the total amount of capital invested was $37,955,349, distributed as follows: Vessels, $9,357,282; boats, $2,465,393; minor apparatus and outfits, $8,145,261; other capital, including shore property, $17,987,413.

The value of the fisheries of the sea, the great rivers, and the Great Lakes was placed at $43,046,053, and that of those in minor inland waters at $1,500,000, in all, $44,546,053. These values were estimated upon the basis of the prices of the products received by the producers, and if average wholesale prices had been considered the value would have been much greater. In 1832 the yield of the fisheries was much greater than in 1880, and prices, both at first hand and at wholesale, were higher, so that a fair estimate at wholesale market rates would place their value at the present time rather above than below $100,000,000.

The fisheries of the New England States are the most important. They engage 37,043 men, 2,066 vessels, 14,787 boats, and yield products to the value of $14,270,393. In this district the principal fishing points in order of importance are: Gloucester, New Bedford, the center of the whale fishery, Eastport, Boston, Provincetown, and Portland.

Next to New England in importance are the South Atlantic States, employing 52,418 men, 3,014 vessels (the majority of which are small, and engaged in shore and bay fisheries), 13,331 boats, and returning products to the value of $9,602,737.

Next are the Middle States, employing in the coast fisheries 14,981 men, 1,210 vessels, 8,293 boats, with products to the amount of $8,676,579.

Next are the Pacific States and Territories with 16,803 men, 56 vessels, 5,547 boats, and products to the amount of $7,484,750. The fisheries of the Great Lakes employ 5,050 men, 62 vessels, and 1,594 boats, with products to the amount of $1,784,050. The Gulf States employ 5,131 men, 197 vessels, and 1,252 boats, yielding products to the value of $545,584.

I think it is proper to observe in connection with this last statement, which relates to 1884, that it is well known that there is a great exodus of fishermen going on daily in consequence of these Canadian difficulties from New England to the North Pacific, and that whole comparatively untilled field of the sea, Behring Sea, the sea south of the Aleutian Islands, and the whole of the North Pacific is to become in a very few years the scene of a great whaling and fishing interest. Cod, halibut, and other important sea fish swarm in those seas as they did in the North Atlantic in the earliest times.

It is idle, it seems to me, to claim that this is not an American interest, or that it is an interest confined to any section of the country. We have the most important coast line of any nation on the face of the earth, a stormy and dangerous coast line, and wherever our country borders upon the sea there you find these hardy, skilled, and brave men trained in the daily exposure to danger and privation and fatigue. It seems to me that if there is anything which can appeal to the national and patriotic spirit of Americans from all sections of the country alike, it is the desire that this great interest which has contributed so much to our prosperity, to our safety and our glory during our whole history, shall be fostered against this attempt to drive it out of the sea, partly by the competition of underpaid Canadian fishermen and partly by the superiority and skill of English and Canadian diplomacy.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I am not going to occupy the time of the Senate. I will merely avail myself of the Senator's indulgence to ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to print in the RECORD alongside of the statistics just read from the interesting speech of the Senator from Massachusetts last summer the statistics that I had the honor to present to the Senate on the occasion of that debate. I do not wish to thrash over again the old straw on that question. I have a very lively and quick sympathy with the men who "go down to the sea in ships," and I should be very sorry to be thought to oppose their interests, but I really think that my duty here is to advocate the interests of the American people, of which they are a part. I shall not detain the Senate if I may be allowed to have the statistics to which I refer printed.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senator in submitting those statistics to let the statement show the locality from which the statistics were gathered, as there is an immense difference between certain fishermen in Gloucester, Mass., and the general run of fishermen through New England.

Mr. GRAY. The statistics to which I allude, and which I ask permission to print, are those that were produced by me in the speech that I had the honor to make at the last session on the fishery question, which were replied to by the Senator from Massachusetts. I assume that the statistics which the Senator has just read were taken from his speech in the late debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware asks permission to insert in the RECORD some statistics to which he refers as having been used by him in a former debate. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Mr. GRAY. I thought I had Mr. Wright's letter here, but I have not. He goes on to analyze as far as he can, admitting the fact that it was impossible to get from the fishery outfitters and owners of vessels correct returns, because they would not give them, and he shows from the imperfect returns that he can get (he admits that they are imperfect) that nearly 50 per cent. were unnaturalized foreigners, and the large part of them were from the provinces.

Very much in the line of what the Senator from Massachusetts was saying just now when I said he was making my speech, I wish to read in this connec-

Scandinavian, that if he has been here long enough he is a citizen; and he is generally a good one. They become as patriotic and as loyal to American institutions as people to the manor born, and much more so than a great many whom it has been my opportunity occasionally to meet in this country. They have more of the loyal American spirit in them than many men who find themselves occupying high public positions in this country.

The same may be said of the Irish. If they are on our vessels they are citizens and are entitled to all the rights and privileges of American citizenship. When we called upon the people of the United States for an army a few years ago none responded more gallantly than the Scandinavians and the Irishmen, both for our vessels of war and for our armies in the field. If we are training them, if we are drawing from the European forces trained sailors for fishermen, we are drawing a very valuable class of citizens and a class who will never desert us in the hour of distress.

I want to put on record the statement that I have not myself abandoned at any time, or thought of abandoning, the position I took when I was discussing the fisheries treaty, that these fisheries are the nursery of our seamen. They have been so regarded for a hundred years. The second law that was passed in the United States provided for the encouragement of these fisheries by allowing a drawback on the fish that should be caught and exported. In 1792, by a system of bounties, that was kept in force until a few years since, these fisheries were encouraged. I want to insist that not only on the northeastern coast, but up and down the Great Lakes, we are training men all the time for the duties of superior seamanship in case their services are required on the great ocean.

I can remember forty years ago and more when it was considered a very desirable thing for a young man in this country to take a whaling trip or a cod-fishing trip. The young man in a neighborhood away off from the coast who found himself able to induce his father to let him go on a cod-fishing expedition for one season thought that he had done as much as most young men who entered the doors of a college. That was the class of men who went then. It is possible they have been somewhat displaced by the fact that foreigners have come here and are, perhaps, willing to work for less wages; but yet it will be found that very many of that class of men are to-day being trained in these fisheries for the captains of our great Atlantic steamers, and for our coasting trade, of which a Senator spoke here the other day as being the most magnificent coasting trade in the world.

If I did not think I ought not to digress, I should like to tell the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who spoke of the coasting trade with so much pride, just how that coasting trade was built up. It has been built up by just the same system by which we propose to build up the fishery interest in this country—by giving special opportunities and special advantages.

I do not intend to go over the whole fishery question. I think that when we are about to negotiate with Great Britain upon the question of our relations on the Great Lakes and on the ocean and on the Northeast, it would be well for the negotiators to be unhampered and untrammeled by any provision of this kind in the statutes. I express, as has been expressed by another Senator, some surprise that the committee should have reported this provision in the tariff bill.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it occurs to me that there are the very strongest possible reasons for adopting the amendment of the Senator from Maine, and placing a duty upon fish of all kinds equal to the duty that is imposed by Canada. We are already building up Canada at the expense of our own country in many respects. We are transferring to Canada our carrying trade. Their railroads are relieved from many of the burdens imposed upon ours, particularly under the interstate-commerce law, and our carrying trade is fast being transferred to Canada, the effect of which is to build up Canada. If our 50,000 fishermen, 20,000 or 30,000 perhaps, or whatever number there may be, are not given the additional advantages which have been pointed out here, if we take this duty off fresh fish, the effect must be to transfer the industry to Canada and build them up and increase their population vastly. I do not think that it is good policy for this Government to build up this rival power at the expense of our own people. We had better have the fishermen on our own side of the line and give them a chance to live.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] spoke of the right of American consumers to a market as well as the manufacturers or the fishermen. I concur that they have a right to a market, to not only a place to buy, but a place to sell. This provision gives them no additional place to sell. Canada has blocked us with a tariff duty, so that we can not sell there. Our fishermen have not the right to sell there, and if we did have the right to sell in Canada, wages are lower there, and we should not probably be able to do so and compete with the Canadian fishermen. Besides, they have a small population as compared with ours.

If we surrender this market to them we shall get no equivalent. I think that consideration should run through all the tariff. When we consider any proposition to levy a duty on imports we should consider whether the country from which those imports come is likely to furnish a market for our products. The Western farmer wants a market. If there is no foreign market that can be made by free trade, let us make a home industry and keep the people here, and let them labor here, so that the farmer will have a market.

The great need of this very productive country, abounding in all the products of agriculture, is a market. Where you destroy the home market by allowing competition and acquire no foreign market, it is a great damage and does harm. That is the situation we are in now, at this age of the world, in considering the tariff. All countries have denied us their markets, except for those things which they must necessarily have. We are not considering the question of trade with other countries on equal terms. Their markets are blocked against us by exorbitant tariffs. Canada pursues that course very studiously.

When we took the tariff off tea and coffee and put those articles on the free-list, and established a line of steamers to China and subsidized them, Canada immediately put a discriminating tariff of 10 per cent. on tea and coffee imported from the United States, so that we were denied their market. When we took the tariff off logs, they put on an export duty. If we take the tariff off lumber, they will put on an export duty, or raise the stumpage, as pretty much all the lumber belongs to the government.

In dealing with Canada we certainly should never grant privileges which we do not get reciprocally. Canada is hardly in a condition to give us reciprocal privileges, because her markets are so much less valuable than ours. When she shuts out our people, and our fishermen, for us to say that we will deprive them of employment and give it all to Canadians and build them up, it seems to me is an unjust discrimination against our own people.

I think these considerations should have weight. The amendment of the Senator from Maine is eminently just, and proper, and necessary, if our citizens who are engaged in the fishing business are to be fairly treated.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in closing his statement seemed to express some surprise that the committee had introduced into the free-list of this bill a provision respecting fresh fish. The committee, as Senators know, has been rather conservative in the preparation of this bill, and did not desire to change existing law unless a strong case was made for such a change. There was no application or presentation of this fish question to the committee in the form in which it is presented now. We found that fresh fish has been practically on the free-list since 1861. During most of that time it was supposed that at least the dominant party in this country was in favor of protection. I had not observed in the debates on the successive revisions of the tariff that either New England or Colorado had pressed the question of taxing fresh fish.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will remind him right there that when the revisions of which he speaks took place we had a sort of a reciprocal relation with Canada of such a character that the question could not well have been discussed, and that probably is the reason why nothing was done in that direction.

Mr. ALLISON. In 1861 we had, of course, the then subsisting reciprocity treaty with Canada.

Mr. TELLER. And I should like to remind the Senator that we have had it practically ever since, until 1885.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care to enter into that discussion. I have never heard of any debate indicating that this particular thing ought to be done. So I trust the committee at least will be charitably considered by Senators on this side of the Chamber when they allowed a provision for fresh fish, which had stood in our tariffs from 1861 down to the present moment, to be reported in this bill. Of course we desired to make no radical changes upon these questions unless it was necessary.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I will state that in 1861 the item of fish that went into daily consumption was put on the free-list for the reason that Canada allowed our fishermen to bring their fish from Canada here.

Mr. HALE. Since then Canada has put on a duty of half a cent a pound.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. We have heard of that a good many times. I am merely endeavoring now, if I can, to place the committee in a position where it will not be subjected to any severer censure than is actually necessary under the circumstances. I am now responding to the statement of the Senator from Colorado, who expressed surprise that this provision had found its way into the bill.

I desire to say another thing in defense of the committee. This provision was put in the bill at the instance of people who are interested in the fisheries.

The Senator from Kansas projects an amendment here which strikes out the conditions of limitation which the committee put upon the paragraph as respects fresh fish. The language of the Morrill act of 1861 was "fish for daily consumption."

Mr. GRAY. "For immediate consumption."

Mr. ALLISON. "Daily consumption" was the language of the tariff act of 1861. For some reason, which I have never examined, that phraseology was changed in 1874 to "fresh fish for immediate consumption." Since 1861 and even since 1874 there have been many changes

tion from the debate which took place in the Canadian Parliament, and that seems to be a favorite reference with the Senator from Maine and others in this debate so far as it has gone. On the 13th of April of this year, in debating this treaty, General Laurie, who is opposed to the treaty, and almost as emphatic and violent in his opposition as the Senator from Maine on our side, said:

"I mention this because, even in the matter of duty, as a rule the crews of vessels receive one-half the outturn. Now, it is the impression that they are protecting American fishermen, that the duty is practically a bounty which goes to American fishermen as opposed to provincial fishermen; but as a matter of fact, these fishermen, not wild, harum-scarum young men, but for the most part fathers of families, who have made a practice of going away to the United States, who own they do not do any better when they go, but who go because they have been in the habit of going and do not like to change the system, obtain one-half of the present duty so long as the duty is imposed. So the duty, instead of going into American pockets, largely goes into the pockets of our own fishermen.

"An honorable MEMBER. Oh, oh!

"General LAURIE. Perhaps if the honorable gentleman will visit the maritime provinces, he will find out that what I am saying is an actual fact. I am not speaking of what I have read, but I am speaking of what I know. There are disadvantages in connection with shipping in United States vessels. They are more reckless in sailing than our vessels, and while they do make larger returns, they also make larger losses. I now refer to the book which the finance minister was told he should have referred to more frequently, and I find that the losses of Gloucester vessels during the season of 1887 amounted to twenty-two vessels and one hundred and forty-five lives, of which I am sorry to say a very large proportion, far more than the majority, were those of fishermen from the lower provinces."

Here is a bit of what lawyers call unconscious testimony, taken at random, the return of losses of the Gloucester fleet for one year:

"Twenty-two vessels and one hundred and forty-five lives, of which I am sorry to say a very largeproportion, far more than the majority, were those of fishermen from the lower provinces."

How does it happen, Mr. President, that if the proportion is as the Senator from Massachusetts says, only about 19 per cent., when you come to foot up the losses of the Gloucester fleet for one year you find that 60 or 70 per cent. of those losses are the drowning of Nova Scotia fishermen? Were they selected as the special objects of the wrath of Almighty God? Did He direct His thunderbolts and His cyclones at the heads of these poor Nova Scotia fishermen more directly and with more of intent and purpose than He did against their Yankee shipmates? Here is testimony which speaks louder than statistics, louder than tables, that when you come to foot up the losses for one year you find that a large majority of those who were lost were from the provinces.

That was for the year 1887. I have some figures here of the same kind in a publication of Proctor Brothers' list of vessels, published in 1886 in Gloucester. That publication was not made with any intention that it should have a bearing upon this question. It was a commercial publication, and it gives the losses of life between September 1, 1885, and September, 1886, of the Gloucester fishing fleet as 104, of which 52 were Canadians, 25 were of other foreign nationalities, 17 were unknown, and 10 were Americans.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I hope the amendment of the Senator from Maine will be adopted. Representing in part the State of Michigan, bordering upon the Great Lakes, and interested in this question of the fisheries, I desire to say that the people of Michigan have no disposition to reap any advantage from free fresh fish at the expense of their own fishermen. The catch in the State of Michigan last year was something over 12,000,000 pounds of lake-trout and whitefish, caught, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, with twine paying 40 per cent. duty, and caught by men receiving much larger compensation than that paid to Canadian fishermen.

Michigan does not ask that free Canadian fish may come into her ports. Although we are at her very doors we are willing to pay the price for fish which our fishermen are willing to sell them for. Michigan believes thoroughly, as she has given good proof, in the doctrine of protection. I believe that the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine is in that direction, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that it seems to me his amendment does not accomplish the purpose which he has in view as expressed in his remarks. That purpose was that all fish should be subject to duty. The proposition is to strike out paragraph 557, which provides for free fish, under the idea that that would leave all fish to be taxed. Another paragraph of the bill bearing upon this question, as the Senator will see, is paragraph 267, which provides that "foreign-caught fish (imported otherwise than in barrels or half-barrels), smoked, dried, salted, pickled, frozen, packed in ice, or otherwise prepared for preservation, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act," shall pay a duty of one-half of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. HALE. I propose to put in "fresh fish" right after the words "half-barrels," so that, as stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, these fish will be subject to the same duty that the Canadians impose upon our fresh fish—one-half of 1 cent a pound—and that settles the whole question.

Mr. REAGAN. I simply desired to call attention to the fact. Without something of the kind it would leave fresh fish free.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I wish merely to say a word or two. I did not propose to say anything on this subject, but I am very glad that the discussion has been opened by the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. I was astonished when I saw fresh fish put on the free-list, but I supposed it was a sop thrown to Cerberus, to the kind of demoralized public sentiment which had disseminated free-trade ideas throughout the country. I suppose the reason why I have not received protests from my State has been because our people feared that if the question was opened they would suffer more than they would under the clause as formulated by the committee.

In regard to fresh fish being put upon the free-list, I regard it as an unjust and invidious discrimination against a very large class of our people. As far as the cities along the border are concerned, Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit, and up as far as Milwaukee, Canadian vessels can bring their catch there, and sell them in direct competition with our own people. Along the borders of Michigan, which has the largest coast line possibly of any State in the Union, some 1,500 or 1,600 miles, there are numbers of fishermen's villages. I see that the statistics quoted by the Senator from Massachusetts this morning show that there are over 5,000 men engaged in that trade.

I believe it has been the policy of the Government since its foundation to encourage the fisheries, and to strike a blow at that is to strike a blow at our naval supremacy if we should ever require a naval supremacy. The supply that should come to our Navy will be drawn very largely from the Lakes. The commerce there now is greater than all our foreign commerce. The sailors there are numbered by tens of thousands, and anything done to militate against their prosperity (and this certainly is a blow against their prosperity), must have a tendency to decrease their numbers.

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Maine, amending the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will prevail, and that this invidious distinction will not be made against the most worthy and hardy class of our people, people who make very little noise, but do their work assiduously and earnestly, and who live poorly. I hope that the whole clause will be stricken out and that Canadian fresh fish will not be admitted into our market.

There is another point I wish to notice. The State of Michigan has three hatcheries. The hatcheries at Detroit put last year 100,000,000 hatched whitefish into the Lakes. At Cleveland, I think, and elsewhere in the State of Ohio, there are a number of others. The United States has a number of hatcheries in Michigan.

We are stocking the Lakes for the benefit of Canadian fishermen if the amendment of the Senator from Kansas should prevail. Therefore I hope that the amendment to that amendment striking fresh fish from the free-list will prevail.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the fishery question; neither will I now discuss the tariff question. If the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] had not assumed that he had by his argument convinced everybody on this side that the American fishing waters, not only on the New England coast but everywhere else, were not a nursery of seamen, I should not have said anything.

I took some part in the fisheries treaty debate. I recollect that I especially antagonized the statistics presented by the Senator from Delaware, and called his attention to the same statistics that the Senator from Massachusetts read. Every report from every Department of the Government that could be relied upon at all has been against the assertion of the Senator from Delaware, that 75 per cent. of our fishermen are foreigners. It is possible that on some fishing smack or vessel 40 per cent. or 50, or it may be all of them, possibly except the officers, who must be American, are foreigners, but it can not be asserted here, with any evidence back of it, at least, that 75 per cent. are foreigners, nor can it be done upon the report of a committee that as yet has not made its report, a committee that I think has not gone beyond the city of New York to take testimony and has confined itself principally to taking testimony as to the arrivals at Castle Garden. It is possible they may have gone further, but if so I have not noticed the fact.

Mr. GRAY. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him for one moment in that line?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAY. That committee, the Ford committee, I am informed took its testimony in the city of Boston in regard to the matter about which we are talking.

Mr. TELLER. It is possible they have taken the testimony of one or two witnesses to that effect. The testimony taken some time ago before a committee contained the statements of some men who swore that a majority of the fishermen were foreigners, but the great burden of proof was the other way. It is possible that some of the Germans, it is quite possible that some of the Scandinavians, have become fishermen on our coast. There is a large number of those people, I have no doubt, who are fishermen on the Lakes and on the northeast seacoast, but in almost every instance it will be found that the Scandinavians, and Irishmen, and Germans, or whatever they may be, are citizens of the United States, and they become as much a part of our marine force as if they had been born in this country.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. I merely wish to reassure the Senator that as far as the Lakes are concerned, our fishermen there are Scandinavians and Irishmen and Frenchmen generally—there are some Americans—but they are nearly all naturalized citizens. I would venture the assertion that 90 per cent. of them are already naturalized, and that the other 10 per cent. intend to be.

Mr. TELLER. There are two classes of people who come to this country who are always naturalized. One is the Scandinavian and the other is the Irishman. You can always depend upon it, when you find a in modes of transacting every character of industry and business in our country. It appeared to the committee from reliable statements of gentlemen who are interested in this matter of fresh fish that the Canadians, taking advantage of this clause respecting immediate consumption, were in the habit of preserving their fish by various methods, chiefly in the form of packing in ice, and thus preserving a catch for a month or two months or three months, and under the guise of "fresh fish for immediate consumption" bringing fish into our country in active competition with our own fishermen. When we reflected, as was disclosed in the discussion upon the fisheries treaty, that the Canadians could not only do that, but that they could engage in the northeastern fisheries and ship their catch of fish by railway from Halifax to Boston or New York City or elsewhere, or all along their own northern coast and project them into Chicago, we believed that that was not a fair thing to our own people who were engaged in fishing, having a register from our own Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is not the practice of bringing in fresh fish packed in ice practically followed by American fishermen as well as Canadians, and was not the process in 1861 unknown either to Canadian or to American fishermen? I understand that now the American and Canadian fishermen both bring in fish in that way.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly that is the habit of American fishermen, but it is not the habit of American fishermen to have an opportunity of transporting their fish by cars from points where they are likely to be caught at certain seasons of the year. In other words, when our fishermen go upon the coast of Canada or into the deep waters of the sea and undertake to fish and carry their fresh fish to Halifax for transportation to Boston or New York they are informed that they can not do it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask for information, for I am not advised on that point, whether fresh fish packed in ice, Canadian or American fish, are shipped by rail? My understanding is that they are packed in a vessel in ice and brought to Gloucester, Boston, and other New England ports in ice. I am not aware that they are transferred from the ship to a railroad at any place, especially when they are packed in ice.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that they are. It was the intent and purpose of the committee not to change the general policy that had prevailed for twenty-six years, but to carry out its original spirit and purpose, namely, that fish caught in the morning might be put upon people's tables in the evening, whether they chanced to be caught by a Canadian or an American fisherman.

That was the intent and purpose of this provision. The effect of it of course we all know. It was not necessary to have a lengthy discussion to show that the effect of this provision was to exclude the fishermen who fish in large quantities and ship cargoes to this country if Canadian fishermen. We knew of course the effect of this would be to largely restrict if not absolutely cut off the business of fishing as I have described it.

Now, the Senator from Kansas puts in this amendment, because he says that the committee by this arrangement has made a provision whereby the people along the shores of New England and along the shores of the Great Lakes will have an advantage over the people who live in the interior, as he and I and as our constituents do. Therefore he says that this provision, so far as this act of limitation is concerned, ought to be stricken out, without objecting, however, to the provision that fresh fish should be placed upon an equality with salted fish or preserved fish, so far as I heard him express an opinion.

The Senator from Maine proposes to strike out this provision entirely, the effect of that being of course to relegate fresh fish to the dutiable list. After hearing this debate and discussion, I rather think I can say that our New England fishermen and our fishermen upon the Great Lakes have scored a point. They have shown, I think with reasonable clearness, that the original provision in 1861 is a provision that ought not longer to remain upon our statute-book, first, because it is a discrimination against our own fishermen, and secondly, because if our fishermen undertake to present their fish at a Canadian port they are compelled to pay half a cent a pound if they be fresh fish.

So I intend to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Maine to strike out this entire provision. Then I shall ask the Senate to go back to the provisions respecting fish and put all fresh fish in exactly the condition that Canada has put the fresh fish imported into their country from our country, and I believe that that will be the fair and just solution of this whole question as respects this particular item.

I do not believe that that will add materially, if at all, to the price of fish in our own markets. It will be an inducement to our own fishermen to engage more largely in fishing enterprises upon the Lakes and upon the shores of New England. That is all there is in this question, and the committee's effort was to confine the importation of fresh fish to the provisions of the acts of 1861 and 1874 and the intention of Congress at that time (which was, I repeat, merely to allow a fish caught in the morning to be brought on the table in the evening, whether caught by a Canadian or by an American). Since that time, however, the entire fishing business has changed, so that it has become an immense industry, amounting to many million of dollars annually to our own people and permeating our whole country. The city in which I live I have no doubt receives fresh fish to-day from New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, and at other seasons of the year we receive there fish preserved in ice from the seacoast and from the Great Lakes.

This preservation of fish in ice has become a method whereby all the people of this country can enjoy the benefits and privileges of fresh fish. So it is an industry that our people should carefully preserve and look after, especially, as the Senator from Michigan has well said, that there is no obligation resting upon us to spend a hundred or more thousand dollars annually to stock the Great Lakes with fish merely for the benefit of Canadian fishermen.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Iowa before he takes his seat whether I understood him correctly to say in his remarks that it is the fishermen themselves who desire to have fresh fish brought into the country put upon the free-list?

Mr. ALLISON. I said it was the representatives of the fishermen themselves who desired that we should put into this bill a provision whereby the original purpose and intent of Congress should be carried out, namely, that only fish fresh for daily consumption or immediate consumption should be included, and that this idea of preserving fish by packing in ice and by other preservative methods still enabling the fish to be sold as fresh fish should not be inhibited in this provision.

Mr. GRAY. Then I was right in understanding the Senator to say that the fishermen to whom this market belongs and to whom we are obliged, on the theory of the Senator from Iowa and his confrères, to pay tribute, are willing of their grace that fresh fish not packed or preserved in ice shall come to those breakfast-tables which they can reach in that condition free of duty, and that they are content if no one but the people along the Atlantic seaboard and on the shores of the Great Lakes shall be allowed to eat untaxed fresh fish.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware is putting in another form the argument made by the Senator from Kansas, which, I think, minimizes this condition and belittles and makes it a matter of no moment Surely it was not in the mind of those who framed this provision that a man who happened to live on the shores of the Great Lakes should have an advantage over a man who lived 10 miles away, or 20 miles away. That was not the intent or purpose of this provision, as I understand, either originally or by this committee. But the argument here discloses that a man who lives near a navigable water or a stream that has fish in it, or who lives near the Great Lakes, or who lives near the sea, would have an advantage not enjoyed by the people who live in the far interior. Therefore I say the committee had no such purpose of making any discrimination, and I know of nobody who asked to have these provisions inserted upon that ground, but simply that the original purpose of the law should be carried out. That was all.

I suppose, also, that these fishermen did not expect or anticipate that the committee would change what had appeared to be the policy of the country for a long time, and place fresh fish on the dutiable list.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the Senator from Delaware does not fear if this duty should be put upon the fresh fish which are caught by the Canadians that these processes by which they are preserved in ice and otherwise than salt would be excluded from our fishermen. Our fishermen could send the fish preserved in precisely that same way to every market in the United States, and it is only a question whether our fishermen shall do it or whether the Canadian fishermen shall do it when we can do the same thing here.

Mr. GRAY. I did not understand that, of course, but I did understand that the monopoly of preserving fresh fish in ice and transporting them to the interior of the country was to be confined to American fishermen, or, as the Senator from Massachusetts, by a misnomer, says, "our fishermen." He forgets they are not our fishermen; we are theirs.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know what the Senator means by saying the fishermen of this country are not our fishermen.

Mr. GRAY. We are theirs.

Mr. DAWES. I understand our fishermen are a part of this great nation, just as much as the honorable Senator and myself are. I do not know why the Senator says it is a misnomer to speak of that large class of industrious population in this country as "our people." I understand them to be a part and parcel of this great nation, entitled to the same protection that everybody else is in the lawful industries which are open to them; and if it be proper to secure to them employment in this country rather than to give that employment to laborers in other countries, then they are entitled to the same nomenclature, the same cognomen that the Senator's constituents are. They are our countrymen just in the same sense that the honorable laborers in Delaware are our countrymen. I do not understand what the Senator means by saying it is a misnomer to call those people "our countrymen."

Mr. GRAY. I did not say anything about calling them "our countrymen." They are our countrymen and we are their countrymen. But he spoke of them as "our fishermen." I said so far as the efforts of the Senator from Massachusetts and those who think with him are concerned, he makes it so that we are theirs and that they are not ours. The Senator speaks of their being entitled to the same protection that all other American citizens are entitled to. I grant it; but all other American citizens who are interested in this universal article of food, perhaps an article than which there is not a single other article more important to human happiness and human well-being, have some rights to protection; and when the great Giver of all good gifts stocked the seas near our coasts with fish he did not intend that they should be dispensed through the monopoly of a few New England fishermen.

Mr. DAWES. What does the Senator mean by "the monopoly?" There is not a man of the sixty-five millions of people in the United States who may not resort to precisely every feature of the employment of these men that my friend is unwilling to call "our fishermen." If they are not "our fishermen," it is because they are made subject to the Canadian fishermen. That is the reason they are not ours; and this policy of the Senator from Delaware to subject our industries to foreign industries may well lead him to inquire whether any of the industries of this country are our industries, or whether the laborers of this country are in any sense "our laborers." It is quite in harmony with the whole theory that we are to be subject to foreign labor and foreign industry.

Talk about a monopoly of curing fish in ice given to New England or to anybody in New England! The Senator's constituents are as industrious and are as enterprising as any constituents of any Senator here, and if there is a dollar over 5 per cent. to be made in it the capital of Delaware will find its way into it, and so will the capital of every State in this Union. There can be no monopoly in the production. The market can be surrendered, and that is what, with all due respect to the Senator's honesty of purpose, is the result of his argument and his policy.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I have not thought it useful that I should engage in any of the discussions of the items of the tariff bill. The general topics are abundantly elucidated by debaters on both sides. But this particular subject leads into larger considerations, supported on the one side or opposed on the other upon more general grounds than what belong merely to an ordinary item as between protection and free trade.

I wish at the outset very firmly to contradict any impression that has been made by the expression of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] that in the fishery-treaties debate any disputant upon this side ever yielded in any form of expression or concession or inference what had been a great and prominent feature from the beginning, to wit, the value of the fisheries as distinct from the value of the fishes caught. From the beginning to the end of that debate—I may speak with some confidence, for I believe I closed the debate upon our side—the cardinal proposition was maintained that it was the interest not of New England, not of the border States on the Great Lakes, not of those on the Gulf, not of the South Atlantic, not of the western coast, of the fish-catching and the fish-selling, but that it was the question of the United States of America, as important to the people of Kansas or the people of Nevada or Colorado as to those that bordered on the seacoast. It was an external possession of the United States in the fisheries, a possession just as much of the people of New Orleans or the people of Iowa as it was of the people of New England. If there was anything that belonged to the country at large and in whole in all the great features of the fisheries, it was this northeastern fishery of ours that was outside our territory but was kept within our possession and our benefit and our future and our plans, that we are not ready to part with upon any consideration whatever.

We can not part with it under any of these narrow and special considerations, for whatever we part with, we part with as a country, and everything that we lose is gained by another country that values it and will make its possession felt against us.

Now, Mr. President, in reference to domestic interests, it seems to me very hard that when we fall into these discussions we should all think that our people are living here or there, whether it is at the South in an interest local to climate and advantages which they enjoy, or to the West in their other advantages, and then again to New England and the Middle States, and in turn the Pacific coast possessions. Sixty-five millions of our people live in the United States. When we talk about them and their interests and legislation concerning them, it is the people of the United States. But the United States in its population is distributed to the men in New England, or the men in Texas, or the men in Florida, or the men in Oregon. Because they live in these, their habitations and their homes, do they live any the less in the United States of America, or are any of them any the less at home in the hearts and protection of the people of the United States?

I, therefore, have always looked with almost contemptuous disdain upon any of the efforts of defense of this or that interest as if it were not an interest of the United States, or so wrought into the fabric of the policy and legislation of the United States that this or that distributed interest was to be protected. I have never weighed and I think that no Senator should ever permit the interests to be weighed as bearing upon the suggestion that they affected the seaboard or affected the interior. No; all our plan here is, as we legislate for the whole country and enact legislation that affects our foreign relations in the introduction from abroad of such articles as may compete with or such as may aid our industries, to look at it as brought from abroad into the whole country, wherever it is landed or wherever it is consumed.

Now, to bring the matter nearer to this topic, it is of a foreign duty to be imposed upon a foreign product on its introduction into this country. We must look, then, to this fish industry and this fish product as it belongs to American industry and in competition with foreign industry in the same product. We must look at the particular circumstance of these competing interests.

In reference to the Northeastern fisheries, or the Lake fisheries, or again the Southern coast fisheries, those industries as toward foreign countries stand in different relations of competition. As I had the honor to point out in the fisheries-treaty debate, there are three heads alone that embrace the great interests of the Northeastern fisheries—the coasts, the fish and their habitat, and the market. The three make up the industry and determine the prosperity of the industry.

The Canadians have the advantage of us by their occupation of the shores where they live, and under the laws of the government over them. The fish by our treaty are accessible equally to us with them in right, and we control our market; and when we determine whether or not we will impose a burden of customs duties on the fish that are caught by the Canadians at home, we look not only at the general question of whether we will protect domestic industries, but we look squarely in the face the competing industries and determine whether affirmative protection is not necessary to put us upon an equal footing in respect to the province and the seat of these industries. We must fit out our fleets for the fisheries, we must bring them back in our own bottoms, and then offer the fish in our markets.

Why, Mr. President, this of all other industries where foreign and domestic competition comes in stands upon a peculiar ground. On the face of things, whatever is produced within a country is to be invaded in its market by what is brought from abroad, with the disadvantage of distance, the cost of transportation, freight, insurance, and all the elements of commerce that enter into the aggregations of sale. But here these Canadians are nearer to us in their production than we are to our country—they are on the shores, and their fishing industries are simpler and less expensive and more manageable in details. They are on our borders nearer, in fact, than we are in the importations which our eastern fleets bring back as their freights. We therefore have a protection of fish in competition with Canadian occupation of the Northeastern fisheries to put us in our market in as even and as profitable relation as they by their advantage of being nearer to the fisheries and nearer to importations than we are. Under our system, by which the privileges of transportation are allowed to them and we are not allowed the transportation of our fish there, because we are kept in the original circle of trade which imposes these great expenses and investments upon us, we are bound to impose a duty.

When we come to the Great Lakes there a line is drawn between the same waters, and the shores on either side are actually accessible as ports so far as convenience of access goes. The Canadians impose a duty of half a cent a pound upon every fish caught in these common waters—common in the sense of the same lake on our side of the line—as against what are caught on their side of the line; and when we are asked to put fish in those Great Lakes caught on our side of the line upon the same footing of protection for ours against those caught on their side of the line which they have laid down against us, an outcry is made of our imposing a burden on fish.

You will see then, Mr. President, that in respect of the great fisheries now developing themselves so much in the Great Lakes there is an equality of privilege of accessibility to the fishing grounds each on the side of the line that pertains to the country. But when you come to the question of a duty we are only asked now to put our markets against their fishermen on the footing on which they put our fishermen against their markets.

Well, we have a very great interest, and that is in the South Atlantic and on the Gulf. There Senators will observe that our American fisheries are entirely protected by circumstances. There are no circumstances which expose our markets at the South to any considerable invasion by fishermen of other nations. If I am wrong the Senator from Louisiana will correct me. As I understand it, we have no such fishing industry of a foreign nation to compete with us there at all. Are then the Southern industries of the same nature, that is, the fisheries, to stand against an equalization, a reasonable protection towards equalization of the Northeastern fisheries or the Northwestern fisheries, or the Lakes, because there is no rivalry and no encroachment and no impairment of the full market of fishery down there?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this very subject of the fisheries is one that may be proposed as an instance and an example of what the whole country is to deal with against what is an industry outside of the whole country. It seems that by instinct, or habit, or the hereditary influence of our early colonial development, New England furnishes the great bulk of American fishermen to the Northeastern fisheries. Is the effect, therefore, merely an industry of fishermen and catching fish? Not by any means. It is our great industry; it is our foreign possession in the sense that it is not within our boundaries, but is within our treaty rights, and we propose to keep it as valuable, as productive, and as a school for seamanship, and I am at a loss to understand the process of reasoning of the Senator from Delaware, by which he brings against us that, under adverse influences, if you please, undesirable influences to be deprecated, there has intruded a considerable class of employés who are foreigners not in the sense of either being native or naturalized citizens.

Is it the policy of the Senator from Delaware, is it the policy of Senators on the other side of this Chamber, that if our seamanship, our seamen, our hopes, our plans, our schemes, our pride, our glory, by circumstances that we can not and do not control, have been reduced, we should go on and squander and dissipate what there is left of them? And yet that seems to be the proposition of the Senator from Delaware; that, as the foreigners now form part of these seamen, who are being trained—he has given us statistics that we can not accept—but on what principle is it that by circumstances that we can not control, we are thus encroached upon in the development of our seamen and our seamanship, we are to be careless and indifferent and even resentful against a handful, as he terms it, that are left?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I have refrained from participating in this debate which has proceeded upon the items of this bill for the reason that I desired that action might be reached upon the bill, and I had determined that nothing I might say, unnecessarily at any rate, should retard that action. I have listened during the last ten days to much of argument and assertion and accusation and denunciation from those who are opposed to the principle of this bill to which I was tempted to reply, but I have refrained, and intend to refrain.

I am very glad that the committee does, as I understand, accede to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and remove fresh fish from the free-list, as was proposed by the bill, and assent to its being placed upon the dutiable-list. It seems to me that with any proper respect for ourselves as a Government we can not do less. If there were no principle of protection involved, the principle of reciprocity in our dealings with a neighboring foreign power, as it seems to me, would demand that we should put fresh fish upon the dutiable-list and charge the same amount of duty that is placed upon fresh fish by the Dominion of Canada when imported there.

The people who are engaged in this industry in the United States catch their fish side by side with the people who are engaged in this industry from Canada. Our people engaged in this industry are subject to many disadvantages in the pursuit of their occupation owing to their distance from the fishing grounds and the unreasonable restrictions and vexations which have been placed upon them by the Canadian Government, and yet they are not permitted to introduce fish into the Canadian ports without their being subject to half a cent a pound duty, while the Canadians, who engage side by side with our fishermen in the same business, under advantages which we do not possess, are permitted to land their fish free in our own market. Now it seems to me that that of itself ought to settle the question.

It was not, however, for that purpose that I rose, but to make some reply to what seemed to me to have been a tone of disparagement of the Canadian immigrants all through this discussion. If I understood the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], he replied to the argument that we need to maintain our fisheries in order that they may be a nursery for seamen who will man our ships in time of battle, with the statement that some Canadians are employed upon our fishing vessels, and he introduced statistics and seemed to dwell with a great deal of pertinacity upon these statistics, as showing that there are more Canadians employed by those of our citizens who are engaged in fishing enterprises than the statistics which are furnished by the Senator from Massachusetts would seem to show, as if it were any argument against the duty of this Government to do everything in reason to maintain our fishing industries in order that seamen may be trained up who shall help us in our time of need, to say that some portion of those seamen or those sailors now employed in the fishing industry are Canadian citizens.

Well, I am not going to stop here to inquire what the proportion is. I presume it is true that some portion of the sailors engaged in the fishing industry are citizens of Canada. I do not think so great a number of them as the Senator from Delaware supposes are citizens of Canada. I think that a good many of them are American citizens, and that a good many more of them, who may be citizens of Canada when they are employed upon these fishing vessels, will in the end be American citizens; but whether they be American citizens or not, I think it is very clear and very certain that in case of a war with any other country, except Canada (with which we do not wish to fight and can not fight), we could draw upon all of them to swell the number of our seamen, who would man our naval vessels and take part in defending our interests upon the water.

But this argument is simply alongside of one which has been used many times in this debate, which seems to imply that a Canadian immigrant is a person whom we ought to exclude from participation in our interests and our nationality, the same as we exclude Chinamen, and vicious and assisted immigration from whatever quarter it may come.

Now, Mr. President, I think that there is a very great misapprehension as to the character of the Canadian immigrant. It may be true that at first the Canadian who came to this country came to work in the lumber woods, and, after having earned money, went back to Canada. It may be true at the present time that some who come from Canada still go back there; but I think it is true in the main that those who come from Canada to the United States settle here, become industrious citizens, become conservative citizens, and as thrifty, temperate, moral, industrious, and religious as those who emigrate from any other portion of the globe to this country.

Speaking with one of our Government officials in the district of Quebec not long since, he told me, I think, that within the last three years more than 20,000 Canadians had left the port of Quebec to come to "the States," as they term it; that a considerable portion of those—I think he said over 800—brought their household effects and their furniture with them. That of course signified 800 families who were transferring their allegiance as well as their residence to this country. He said further that a large number of other families sold out their effects before leaving and carried their money with them to this country; and, further, that so sure was it that those who emigrated from Canada to this country came here and staid, that the provincial parliament of Quebec had appointed an agent to visit those who had taken up their residence in this country and try to induce them to return by offers of gifts of land, but that the agent was meeting with no success whatever. So this idea, which has been so industriously insisted upon here, that the Canadian is an undesirable member of our population, I think arises from an entire misapprehension of his character and his object in coming here.

I wish to refer to one or two things which have been stated by Senators as showing their regard of this question. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] on January 4, arguing that the committee was as open to the charge of free trade as were Senators on that side of the Chamber because the committee put certain things on the free-list, used the language I shall quote. He was referring to paragraph 351, "Animals brought into the United States," etc. He said:

> We can certainly raise here all the animals we want for any purpose, but because a man emigrates from Canada to the United States to compete with our coal-miners and operatives in the factories or to compete with our agriculturists we let him in free with his—
>
> "Teams of animals, including their harness and tackle and the wagons or other vehicles actually owned by persons emigrating from foreign countries to the United States with their families, and in actual use for the purpose of such emigration, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."
> Mr. ALLISON. And his clothing also.
> Mr. MORGAN. And his clothing also. Being the friends of the American laborer, and there being no such friends in the world of the American laborer as this committee, the honorable Senator from Iowa leading this committee first takes the clothes that the immigrant may choose to bring, it makes no difference how costly, how much of them, or where he got them, or at what price, and lets him in free with all his clothing. He comes here as an immigrant not pledged to stay. He does like the Canadians do; he expects to go back in a month or a year, or perhaps he expects, like the Chinaman, to go back or, after he is dead, to have his bones carried back to the old country. You let him in free with the clothing he chooses to bring; it makes no difference what its cost. You let him in free to labor for a year with clothing enough bought in cheap foreign markets to last him the whole time, so that he will not buy a dollar's worth in the United States. You let him in free because he is an immigrant, and yet you pretend to be the friend of the American laborer as against the foreign laborer!

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] speaking of Canadian immigration, used this language on the same day:

> One-half of the factories of New England now are filled with men who are not even naturalized citizens of the United States, but who come across the border from Canada and elsewhere to labor here and return with the proceeds of their labor. You welcome that foreigner when he comes in the midst of your strikes, whom you can use for the purpose of putting down and suppressing the efforts of labor to secure its share in this taxation that is imposed in its name; but when he comes with anything to sell he is anathema maranatha, and all men are social traitors who desire to purchase his products at a reasonable price. That is the history of this labor question.

Those remarks are based upon the mistaken idea which seems to prevail upon the other side as to the character of the immigrants from Canada. I speak from some knowledge on this subject. I have lived among them for the last thirty years. I have seen them in the city of my residence grow from a handful until now I suppose they are a population of perhaps 1,300. Some of them have become our best citizens. They have all conducted themselves with as much propriety, with as much regard for our institutions and customs, with as earnest a zeal to make good citizens, as have the immigrants from any other country whatever. I suppose out of this 1,300 people perhaps 100 of them own the houses in which their families reside, some of them nice houses, which they have built or purchased as the result of their daily earnings. They have one and perhaps two churches in our midst, built also with the proceeds of their daily labor, one a very fine church costing several thousands of dollars. Many of them, fifteen or twenty I suppose, are store-keepers, merchants, and engaged in other business. We find many of them as clerks in our stores and in our factories. They are in all respects a conservative, industrious, thrifty, temperate, law-abiding people, and they are subject to no prejudice in the State of Connecticut, certainly not in the city of my residence, and I think I can speak for the whole State. No man who has come to this country from any other shore has any prejudice against them.

No man born here has any prejudice against them. They have not been brought here at times of strikes to supplant the labor of people already employed by greedy manufacturers and grinding monopolists. They have come of their own free will, and they have come because they like the United States, just as those who remain at home wish to come in a lump because they like the United States. They are the advance-guard of the Canadians who, within a few years, are going to demand of their own government and ask of our Government that the boundary line which exists between us and Canada shall be obliterated, who are going to ask of our Government that they may be accepted and given a place to dwell among us. Why should they be disparaged, and why should it be necessary to resort to arguments like this?

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, ever since our fortunate alliance with the French nation, which rendered American independence and American liberty possible, there has been that strong sympathy between Americans and Frenchmen everywhere which has preserved amity between the two countries so far, and I believe will in the future for many generations to come, and the sympathy between the French population upon this continent and the people of our country has been strong, manifesting itself in every emergency whenever human sympathies naturally were excited. It has become a matter of history that in our late war the French-Canadian population sympathized in almost complete unanimity with the cause of the American Union. They largely replenished our armies, they were in almost every Northern regiment, and their blood as well as our own has entered into the cement which preserved the Union.

Not alone that, but in these recent years in proportion to the entire number of the French population that has been developed in Canada they have furnished the largest proportion of immigration to our country that has come from any foreign people whatever. Why, Mr. President, there are now in these Northern States not far from 1,000,000 men, women, and children of French-Canadian extraction. There are not more than a million and one-half or two millions, I suppose, of them remaining within the territory of Canada. The enterprising, the pushing, the vigorous element in the French-Canadian population is in the United States to-day rather than in Canada. There are not less than 50,000 of them living in my own State, and in the city where I have the privilege of residing, of perhaps of a population of 40,000 in all, not less than 15,000 are these same French-Canadians.

As the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has well said of his own knowledge, so I state from mine, that there is no element of our foreign population which deserves more of sympathy or better treatment in the policy that shall be adopted in our legislation than the French-Canadians. They are among our most industrious people; they are among our most honest and respectable citizens. Many of them are now becoming and are really extensive owners of real estate. They carry on not alone the work of the operative in the factory, but they engage in every avocation known to our industry. They have their schools, they have their churches, they have their newspapers, and they have something of the pride of race; and so long as it does not interfere with their complete amalgamation as American citizens, who would care to see destroyed that just pride of the Irishman in Ireland, or of the German in Fatherland, or of the Englishman or the Scotchman in the great empire of which they were members and in whose renown they have still a pride, although separated from the mother country? Men who have no pride in their own origin certainly never can be desirable as an accretion to American citizenship; and if in the course of this debate there has been anything of slur or of obloquy cast upon French-Canadian citizens of the United States or the general character of this immigration, for one, from the standpoint of one who knows them, I desire to repel whatever may have been said against this population. I rather desire an increase of it. I would not return from my own State or from any portion of our country a single immigrant from Canada, French-Canadian or otherwise.

Particularly, Mr. President, I think that we ought to bear seriously in mind, or cease to talk about it, the inevitable and radical and rapidly increasing tendency toward the realization of what we call "American destiny." This is no new idea. It is not simply to be confined forever to the realms of poetry and of speculation. We have been talking of this matter of manifest destiny for a century, and it is no use for us to suppose that manifest destiny can be postponed forever, and it is not wise, I think, for us to indulge in a policy of legislation which repels the unification of this continent territorially at a time when it is desirable that it should be unified if ever.

If we are to have the American continent under one flag, under one political union, it is desirable to have it before it is filled with hostile populations, before national prejudices have originated and grown strong, and the foundation, by reason of bickerings and incipient hostilities, shall be laid for future wars, and the sooner we are united politically and those tendencies which are apparent in the great mass of the population on both sides of the line between us and Canada are yielded to the better it will be with reference to the continued peace of this great continent. When the Canadian country and our own country are filled with opposing populations and shall have developed those hostilities and rivalries which inevitably result from the adjacent existence of independent and ambitious nations, it may be impossible, or at least difficult, without bloodshed and hostility, to effect a union which would now come naturally.

I trust, sir, that in the discussion of this question or of this bill nothing may be said, especially if it be unjust and practically false in its character, to repel a tendency now so manifest in the direction of the union of our peoples while yet we are comparatively few in numbers.

Certainly, whatever may be said upon the other question of the natural sympathy and the probable union coming between the country north of us and our own—whatever may be said with reference to that question, we ought to be willing to go through this debate doing simple justice to the people who have come here from the North; and I repeat, in closing what little I have to say on this question, that the French Canadian immigration to the United States, so far as I know of it, is eminently desirable and should be encouraged.

It may be said that there are differences of religion between the French-Canadians and the great mass of Americans, but they profess, as we do, the Christian religion at least. One-half of them are here to-day, and if a Catholic population is to be objected to because it be Catholic, let us remember that it is just exactly as well that we have this entire population under one union, under one political control, as it is to have it thus divided.

Those who control the interests of the Catholic Church on the other side of the Canadian frontier, I am informed and I believe, look upon this question in the same light. The French-Canadian Catholic is escaping from the church at home, and in order to preserve that relation between the French-Canadian here and in the Canadian country, a political union is desirable. If there be those in this or in any other country who hold that the Catholic Church is an abomination, I ask them to consider the question whether, if that church or organization were to be eliminated by the effort of anybody from the mass of mankind, it would be any less difficult to do it with this organization in a foreign country and operating thus through this immigration directly upon our own institutions—if it be any less difficult to do it, I say, while we are separated than it will be after we are one people?

If there be things in the organization or in the tendency of that church that are objectionable in the mind of anybody, they can only be removed by the spirit of intelligence, by the general diffusion of knowledge, which shall relieve whatsoever may be objectionable in this or any religious or other organization. I believe that by bringing the mass of mankind together, and especially that by bringing under the direct influence of American institutions in our own country those who are in adjacent territory, if there be anything objectionable it will be the sooner eliminated from the entire mass.

The fact that the French-Canadian is a Catholic is no objection to him in my own mind, and if it were I should prefer him and his whole church under our political jurisdiction rather than partly within and partly without.

The Catholic Church must and will conform to the spirit of the age and yield to the impulses of modern liberty.

There is nothing about this French-Canadian population which, to my mind, is objectionable, and so far as the Canadian immigrant is concerned, he is not wholly of French-Canadian extraction; he is not wholly of the Catholic Church. They come to us from the provinces, but the blood of many thousands of them is of other nativity or other extraction than that of the French population of Canada. They fought for us and defended us in the recent war, and they have come in large numbers since, and as the Senator from Connecticut well stated, there is every reason to expect that in future collisions (if we should be so unfortunate as to have a collision with any foreign power whatever) the French-Canadian and the Canadian of whatever extraction is as likely to seek the flag of the United States and to defend it as is the foreign citizen of any other country whatever; and to-day, sir, I believe that we could recruit armies almost as readily from Canada as from the United States to assist us, if need be, in foreign or domestic wars.

I desired to say just these few things with reference to the French-Canadian people because they are with us, and they are coming in still larger numbers, and coming to stay. I know them personally, and I feel bound, when they are assailed, in justice and truth to defend them as I would any other portion of my fellow-citizens. I have had occasion to do it before in this place, and if need be shall do it again.

With regard to the main question which led to this debate, I understand that there is substantial agreement now on both sides of the Chamber, and I shall cheerfully vote with the committee in their suggested modification of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer an amendment to the bill, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I fear the Senate is quite wearied with this debate, interesting as it has been, and I would not occupy a moment's time except that as I intend to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] I desire to say a word in explanation of that vote.

If this were simply a question between protection and free trade as to food-fish, I should vote against the amendment, as fish enters so largely into consumption throughout the country. But there is another question that will control my vote, and that is the international relations of this country with another on that subject. I am unwilling to give a vote that will place the fishermen and seamen and the vessel-owners of this country at a disadvantage with reference to the like class in Canada.

So far as fish caught in our own waters are concerned, so far as fish caught by the owners of American registered vessels in foreign waters are concerned, they come to us without duty at any rate. So it is only as to fish caught by foreigners and brought in on foreign vessels that this duty, as I understand, is to apply.

That being so, in order that our people may not be placed at a disadvantage with the Canadians on this subject, who, I understand, receive a bounty from their Government upon the fish they catch and bring to market, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the question must first be taken on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The whole tendency of this debate, I think, shows that it is the purpose of the friends of this bill and of these amendments to subject fresh fish when brought here from Canada to the duty that is now paid upon salt fish, and against that proposition I shall vote. I understand that is substantially the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maine.

There is a very large quantity of fresh fish brought here from Canada and comparatively little salt fish brought here from the Dominion provinces. I think in the port of Gloucester there were 1,800,000 pounds brought two years ago, and that is only a very small portion of the fresh fish brought into this country. According to the testimony taken in 1886 by a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations there were brought to Gloucester in the year before 1,800,000 pounds of fresh fish, and there were only brought, I think, according to my remembrance, about 25 barrels of salt mackerel to that port the same year.

So then a very large proportion of the fish we get from Canada is fresh fish. The proposition of the Senator from Maine now before the Senate is to subject these fresh fish to duty. That will deprive the people of one of the sources which they have for obtaining fresh fish by excluding the Canadian fish and subjecting it to a higher duty than is at present imposed upon it, thereby making it a more costly article of food. I am opposed to taxing the necessaries of life, which a great many people in indigent circumstances have to use, and to that extent adding to their burdens.

I think there is plenty of room in this country for all of our fishermen. I have nothing against the interests of our fishermen. I think they can make a fair profit from their business if they are relieved from certain burdens they are now subjected to. I believe in the State of Massachusetts vessel property is taxed nearly $2 on the hundred of value, and in the State of Maine the fishing-vessel property employed in that State is subject to a total taxation of over $2 on the hundred. If the local State authorities would remove their local taxation, and then we should, by our tariff regulations, relieve the articles that enter into the construction of vessels from the burdens which they are now subject to, under our tariff laws, I have no doubt that our fishermen could do a good and thriving business, and one that would be profitable to themselves.

I am opposed to giving a monopoly to a few fishermen engaged in this business on the New England coast, and thereby subjecting the people of this whole country to taxation upon fresh fish, which is so largely used. These fresh fish are brought now to our ports and shipped to every part of the country, and you are taxing every person in every section of the country for the benefit of a local interest, to protect the fishing interest of New England. That is the short and the long of it, and it is for no other purpose but to subject the people of this country, by your proposed legislation, to the expense of paying a duty upon the fresh fish which they use. To that proposition I am opposed, and I shall vote against every proposition that looks to putting any duty whatever upon fish, let them come from Canada or elsewhere.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who was just called from the Chamber, requested me in the event that he did not return before the vote was taken, to ask unanimous consent that the amendment proposed by him might be withdrawn in order that the vote should be taken first on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question then recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 557, as follows:

557. Fish, fresh, except when frozen or packed in ice, or otherwise prepared by any process, for preservation.

Mr. VANCE. I was going to suggest that some of us on this side of the Chamber desire to vote for the amendment which the Senator from Kansas has authorized to be withdrawn; but I suppose the sense of the Senate can be tested just as well by voting against the amendment of the Senator from Maine. Therefore I do not renew the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, to strike out paragraph 557?

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], whom I do not see here; but having the right to vote to keep the business of the Senate going on, I will vote at present "yea," and if I find that there is a quorum voting I shall withdraw my vote, unless the Senator from Alabama comes in and votes.

Mr. EUSTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK].

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER. I have arranged to transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GRAY. I adopt the suggestion to transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], and doing so, I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. My general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and I vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], unless my vote is necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is absent to-day, and is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] having been transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], I vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], but by consent of the parties I transfer it to my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL], and I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that in my absence a moment ago my pair was announced with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. I recognize the pair, but desire to say that I should vote "yea" if at liberty to vote.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and therefore withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his vote.

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with him.

Mr. ALLISON. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] and allow my vote to stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be recorded in the affirmative.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Allison,	Frye,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Hale,	Payne,	Teller,
Chace,	Hawley,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Dawes,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Dolph,	Mitchell,	Spooner,

NAYS—13.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Pugh,	Walthall.
Berry,	George,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Vance,
Coke,	Hampton,	Vest,

ABSENT—37.

Beck,	Butler,	Cullom,	Evarts,
Blodgett,	Call,	Daniel,	Farwell,
Bowen,	Cameron,	Davis,	Faulkner,
Brown,	Cockrell,	Eustis,	Gibson,

Gorman,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,	Stanford,
Harris,	Kenna,	Quay,	Turpie,
Hearst,	McPherson,	Ransom,	Voorhees.
Hiscock,	Morgan,	Riddleberger,
Hoar,	Paddock,	Sabin,
Jones of Arkansas,	Pasco,	Sherman,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 127——

Mr. REAGAN. Before the Senator proceeds I desire to offer an amendment that relates to this subject, in paragraph 267.

Mr. ALLISON. I was going to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. REAGAN. I will wait until the Senator's amendment is disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 127, after paragraph 267, in accordance with the vote just taken, I move to insert as paragraph 267½:

Fresh fish, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. HALE. That is the Canadian duty.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish that put in as a separate and independent paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

267½. Fresh fish, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer the following as a proviso to come in at the end of the paragraph just acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the end of what paragraph?

Mr. REAGAN. The paragraph just added.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To come in after paragraph 267½?

Mr. GRAY. May I call the attention of my friend from Texas to the fact that that paragraph has been stricken out?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; that is not the paragraph that was stricken out. I propose to offer a proviso as an amendment to the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to paragraph 267½ the following:

Provided, That from and after three months from the passage of this act the officers and at least three-fourths of the crews of any and all fishing vessels owned by citizens of the United States and engaged in fishing in waters outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the United States shall be either native-born or naturalized citizens of the United States. And that the owner or owners of any such vessel, or their agent or agents, and the commanders or masters of such vessel, found guilty after indictment in any district or circuit court of the United States of a violation of this act, shall be fined in a sum not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and may, at the discretion of the court, be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding two years.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, there appears to be a general concurrence on both sides of the Senate that the American vessels engaged in the fishing business ought, in the main, to be manned by American citizens, either naturalized or native. There is a controversy as to whether they are now so manned and have been in the past. That controversy has been of a somewhat serious character, and information has come to the knowledge of the Senate—whether correct or not, I am not able from personal knowledge to say—that a very large proportion of the men employed on the fishing vessels are not citizens of the United States, but that they are employed after coming here from the borders of Canada because they can be employed by the owners of these vessels cheaper than American citizens can afford to work for.

If the purpose of this bill is to protect American labor, here is an opportunity of doing it. It simply brings up the question squarely whether we mean to give the benefits of this legislation wholly to the owners of the vessels or divide between the vessel-owners and the men who man the vessels, those men to be American citizens.

The provisions of the section I offer are that the officers and at least three-fourths of the crews of all such vessels shall be either native or naturalized citizens. It can wrong nobody; it meets the general sentiment of both sides of the Senate, and it will settle the question for the future as to how these vessels shall be manned and officered, and settle it in the interest of American citizens.

The only general observation I have to make on the subject is that it has been my purpose all along, as far as possible, to strengthen the arms of the Government and to secure the interest of the American people, and it seems to me that this is in that direction, and that it will remove from our legislation to that extent the charge that it is being made in the interest of capital and against the interest of labor.

I trust it may be the pleasure of the Senate to adopt the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas before he sits down, what, in his judgment, would be the effect of the provision as he has it drawn? I should myself be in favor of the substance of the provision which requires a large proportion—and I do not think 75 per cent. would be any too large, and it is not as large as it is now, as I am informed—of those seamen to be American citizens. But if we put in the middle of a tariff bill these words that the duty shall be a certain amount, provided on certain ships a certain proportion of the seamen shall be American citizens, if they do not happen to be American citizens the logical result of this would be that the duty of the tariff bill would not take effect.

It seems to me that having a criminal law in the body of a tariff bill is rather an unusual way of proceeding in legislation.

Mr. REAGAN. We have, Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. One moment, if the Senator from Texas will allow me.

Mr. REAGAN. I yield.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire the attention of the Senator from Texas. If this provision is to be incorporated in the bill it should be incorporated later on among the general provisions. We have a great number of them, and I want to suggest to the Senator that he have his amendment printed as an independent provision and considered later on in the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection, if it be in order in that way, that the amendment be printed and that it be introduced as a separate proposition later. What I desire is to get the action of the Senate on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be printed if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. It can be offered at another place.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire only to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that in the bill already it will be found that there are a number of general provisions connecting themselves with the tariff legislation. I understand, of course, the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts about putting a criminal provision in this proposed statute, but to insert the provision without the penalty would leave it in a condition where it could not be enforced. It would simply be directory, and there would be no penal authority for its enforcement. So it seems to me, if we adopt the provision, it is right to incorporate with it the authority that will enable the courts to enforce it. That is all I desire to say at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from Texas waives his amendment at this particular point, and will offer it later on.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not withdraw the amendment absolutely. I leave it to be taken up at a later stage, or I will withdraw it and reoffer it. Perhaps that is the better plan. I ask to have it printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed and lie over. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

558. Fish for bait.
559. Fish-skins.
560. Flint, flints, and ground flint stones.
561. Floor-matting manufactured from round or split straw, including what is commercially known as Chinese matting.

Mr. VANCE. I move to strike out paragraph 561, which has just been read, and place that article in the dutiable-list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 561, as follows:

561. Floor-matting manufactured from round or split straw, including what is commercially known as Chinese matting.

Mr. VANCE. There were $664,000 worth of matting imported in 1887, paying a duty of $132,000. I see no reason in the world why it should be made free.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to offer this amendment because he thinks we need additional revenue?

Mr. VANCE. No, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is his purpose?

Mr. VANCE. My object is to put this article on the dutiable-list and let it bear a portion of the duty, and if possible reduce the duty upon something else that is one of the necessaries of life, and not put on the free-list articles the duties collected on which go altogether into the Treasury.

Mr. ALDRICH. We have had very strong appeals from the other side of the Chamber for an extension of the free-list in tariff legislation. It happens that every article which we have put on the free-list for the very purpose for which they contend should be put on the free-list has been objected to by Senators on the other side, and they have sought either to restore the duty or impose an increased duty.

Mr. VANCE. There is only one way to reduce duties, and that is to reduce them on those things that bear heaviest upon the people, and keep the duties upon those things which are entirely the product of foreign countries; and with that view I make this motion to strike out this paragraph and put the article on the dutiable-list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I want to inquire of the committee whether any floor-matting of this character is manufactured in the United States?

Mr. ALDRICH. So far as the committee is aware, none of it has heretofore been manufactured in this country; all of it is imported.

Mr. TELLER. If I believed it was possible to manufacture this article in the United States I should vote to strike it from the free-list. I am of the opinion that it can not be manufactured in the United States, for the reason given the other day, that we can not manufacture these straw articles for braids and things of that kind used in hats.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvana [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I do not see him in his seat, and I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I believe the pair that I announced a moment ago was only for that vote. So I shall vote "nay."

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I should vote "nay" if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] being transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], I vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. I therefore decline to vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I will not vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] being absent, I transfer that pair to him to enable the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] and myself to vote. Therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Turpie,
Berry,	Eustis,	Payne,	Vance,
Blackburn,	George,	Pugh,	Vest,
Coke,	Gray,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Allison,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Brown,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Chace,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hale,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—36.

Beck,	Evarts,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Butler,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Call,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Harris,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Teller,
Daniel,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Quay,	Walthall.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

562. Fossils.
563. Fruit-plants, tropical and semi-tropical, for the purpose of propagation or cultivation.
564. Fruits, green, ripe, or dried, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.
565. Furs, undressed.
566. Fur-skins of all kinds, not dressed in any manner.
567. Gambier.
568. Ginger-root, unground, and not preserved or candied.
569. Glass, broken pieces, and old glass, which can not be cut for use, and fit only to be remanufactured.
570. Glass plates or disks, rough-cut and unwrought, for use in the manufacture of optical instruments, spectacles, and eye-glasses, and suitable only for such use.
571. Gold-beaters' molds and gold-beaters' skins.
572. Grease and oils, such as are commonly used in soap-making or in wire-drawing, or for stuffing or dressing leather and as are fit only for such uses, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.
573. Guano, manures, and all substances expressly used for manure.
574. Gunny bags and gunny cloths, old or refuse, fit only for remanufacture.
575. Guts, salted.
576. Gutta-percha, crude.
577. Hair of horse, cattle, and other animals, cleaned or uncleaned, drawn or undrawn, but unmanufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act; and human hair, raw, uncleaned, and not drawn.
578. Hide-cuttings, raw, with or without hair, and all other glue stock.
579. Hide rope.
580. Hides, raw or uncured, whether dry, salted, or pickled, and skins of all kinds, raw or dried, salted, or pickled, but unmanufactured, except sheep-skins with dutiable wool on.
581. Hones and whetstones.
582. Hoofs, unmanufactured.
583. Hop roots for cultivation.
584. Horns and parts of, including horn strips and tips, unmanufactured.
585. Ice.
586. India rubber, crude, and milk of; and old scrap or refuse india rubber which has been worn out by use and is fit only for remanufacture.
587. Indigo.
588. Iodine, crude.
589. Ipecac.
590. Iridium.
591. Ivory and vegetable ivory, not sawed, cut, or otherwise manufactured.
592. Jalap.
593. Jet, unmanufactured.
594. Joss-stick, or joss-light.
595. Junk, old.
596. Kelp.
597. Kieserite.
598. Kyanite, or cyanite, and kainite.
599. Lac-dye, crude, seed, button, stick, and shell.
600. Lac spirits.
601. Lactarine.
602. Lava, unmanufactured.
603. Leather, old scraps.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out paragraph 603.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 603, in the following words:

603. Leather, old scraps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

604. Leeches.
605. Lemon-juice, lime-juice, and sour-orange juice.
606. Licorice-root, unground.
607. Life-boats and life-saving apparatus specially imported by societies incorporated or established to encourage the saving of human life.
608. Lime, citrate of.
609. Lime, chloride of, or bleaching-powder.
610. Lithographic stones not engraved.
611. Litmus, prepared or not prepared.
612. Load-stones.
613. Mace.
614. Madder and munjeet, or Indian madder, green or prepared, and all extracts of.
615. Magnesite, or native mineral carbonate of magnesia.
616. Magnesium.
617. Magnets.
618. Manganese, oxide and ore of.
619. Manna.
620. Manuscripts.
621. Marrow, crude.
622. Marsh mallows.
623. Medals of gold.
624. Medals of silver or copper.
625. Meerschaum, crude or unmanufactured.
626. Mica and mica waste.

Mr. ALDRICH. On the part of the committee I move to strike out paragraph 626, in the following words:

626. Mica and mica waste.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

627. Mineral waters, all not otherwise specially provided for in this act.

Mr. VEST. In line 2143, after the word "waters," I move to strike out the words "all not otherwise specially provided for in this act." I see upon page 134 of the bill before me, in paragraph 312, beginning at line 1192, the following provision:

Ginger-ale, ginger-beer, lemonade, soda-water, and other aerated waters in plain green or colored molded or pressed glass bottles, containing each not more than three-fourths of a pint, 25 cents per dozen.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment I will state that the paragraph to which he refers ought to be amended so as to have the word "artificial" before "aerated waters."

Mr. VEST. I was going to move to meet that very idea by inserting the word "natural" before "mineral," in paragraph 627; so as to read:

Natural mineral waters.

I propose to strike out the words "all not otherwise specially provided for in this act," and to let in free all natural mineral waters.

Mr. ALDRICH. That would be the effect of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me that my amendment would be better, because then there can not be any mistake about it. Hunyadi water, Vichy water, and Apollinaris water, and all mineral waters, according to the decision of the Treasury Department, would, of course, come in free, and that is what I suppose the committee intended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 627, line 2142, it is proposed to insert before the word "mineral" the word "natural," and in the same line, after the word "waters," to strike out the words "all not otherwise specially provided for in this act;" so as to read:

627. Natural mineral waters.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Missouri if he has the other paragraph before him.

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the number?

Mr. VEST. Three hundred and twelve.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 134?

Mr. VEST. On page 134 of the bill of the Finance Committee, beginning at line 1192.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1193, before the word "aerated," I move to insert the word "artificial." I had a memorandum of that amendment here. That was the intent and purpose of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 312, line 1193, after the word "other," it is proposed to insert the word "artificial;" so as to read:

312. Ginger-ale, ginger-beer, lemonade, soda-water, and other artificial aerated waters in plain green or colored molded or pressed glass bottles, containing each not more than three-fourths of a pint, 25 cents per dozen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to paragraph 627.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 627, line 2143, before the word "mineral," it is proposed to insert the word "natural," and to strike out all after the word "waters," as follows:

All not otherwise specially provided for in this act.

So as to read:

627. Natural mineral waters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. ALLISON. Before that vote is finally taken I ask the Senator from Missouri to use the exact phraseology of the existing law in this paragraph, which is:

Mineral waters, all not artificial.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

Mr. ALDRICH. The interpretation of that phraseology has been passed upon by the courts.

Mr. VEST. That is right. I did not have a copy of the law before me or I would have included that language.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 627 it is proposed to strike out the words "otherwise specially provided for in this act" and to insert "artificial;" so as to read:

627. Mineral waters, all not artificial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Missouri whether that phraseology will include mineral waters that have been re-enforced with carbonic-acid gas? There are certain natural mineral waters that for exportation and use are re-enforced with carbonic-acid gas.

Mr. SHERMAN. It would include Apollinaris water. It has been already settled by a decision of the Treasury Department that Apollinaris water only re-enforced with carbonic-acid gas is a natural mineral water.

Mr. VANCE. I understand that Apollinaris water is re-enforced, but it is re-enforced by the gas which is collected at the natural spring.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Department has always held that that is natural mineral water. It is only re-enforced with the same gas that escapes in the natural course of things.

Mr. VANCE. It is not artificially treated?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not artificial.

Mr. VEST. I think that is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill what is the meaning of the expression "marsh mallows," in line 2138, paragraph 622.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Rhode Island will furnish the information.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a medicinal plant of some kind. Does the Senator want the exact definition of it?

Mr. TURPIE. No, sir. Is it a plant at all?

Mr. ALDRICH. What is it, then?

Mr. TURPIE. It is the very finest kind of confectionery.

Mr. ALDRICH. The kind of confectionery so named is flavored with marsh-mallow.

Mr. TURPIE. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a flavoring.

Mr. TURPIE. Marsh-mallow is the most elegant kind of confectionery. Does that expression designate clearly that the plant is meant?

Mr. ALDRICH. All kinds of confectionery are included in the sugar schedule. This is a medicinal plant of some kind, but the flavoring is used in making the confection known as marsh-mallows, I understand.

Mr. TURPIE. I assure the Senator that the word "plant" had better be added, because marsh-mallow is a common designation of very fine confectionery.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is the definition:

A perennial plant having flowers of a pale rose color and a carrot-shaped, white, fleshy root, as thick as the thumb, often used as an emollient and demulcent.

That is what Worcester says about it.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a plant, then?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, I knew it was a plant.

Mr. TURPIE. I did not ask what the definition of the plant was. I asked what was meant to be designated by the term "marsh mallows" here used.

Mr. ALDRICH. We intended to use here the definition as applied to a plant.

Mr. TURPIE. Then I suggest that the word "plant" follow the words "marsh mallows," so that it may not be confused with the confection which is called "marsh-mallow," and which is a great deal better known than the plant.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is necessary at all, but I do not know that there is any special objection to it.

Mr. TURPIE. I do not wish to put "marsh-mallows" on the free-list if it can be construed to mean the finest kind of confectionery.

Mr. ALDRICH. This item has been on the free-list for a generation, and I never have heard of any trouble which arose by confectionery being admitted under that description.

Mr. MORRILL. They could not import anything but marsh-mallows under it.

Mr. ALDRICH. They could not import anything else under it. They could not import any kind of confectionery under it. We can not undertake to define the kinds of confectionery in a tariff bill. All confectionery of every kind is made dutiable.

Mr. TURPIE. I am not asking that the term be made more definite in respect to confectionery, but I ask that it be made more definite in respect to the botanical plant meant to be designated by the term "marsh mallows."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Indiana to offer an amendment?

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir; I move to add the word "plant."

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think it would be desirable in the free-list to furnish a definition of each of these articles? That is substantially what the Senator proposes.

Mr. TURPIE. Not at all; but where the same phrase refers to different articles it would be very desirable to designate which one in view is meant. I am not asking for a definition of either, and did not ask it. The labor of the Senator in reading from the vocabulary was entirely lost. I perhaps know as much about marsh-mallows since the definition was read as before. All that I asked was whether it was intended to apply to the plant or the confections so named, and all that I suggest is that if it applies to the plant let us say so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to paragraph 622 the word "plant;" so as to read:

Marsh mallows plant.

Mr. ALLISON. In the existing law there is a hyphen between "marsh" and "mallows," which I find is omitted here. I think if a hyphen is inserted it will cover the point the Senator from Indiana wishes to accomplish. Surely no confectionery comes in now under this provision.

Mr. MORRILL. We should then have to put the word "plant" after rosemary, valerian, and various other plants on the free-list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, to add to paragraph 622 the word "plant;" so as to read:

Marsh mallows plant.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will not be done. If it is done it will be necessary to put the word "plant" in at every stage. Confectionery is clearly and distinctly provided for in another part of the bill.

Mr. VANCE. What would be the objection to inserting the word "crude," just as it is in the preceding paragraph, and say "marsh-mallows, crude?" That is a phraseology peculiar to tariff laws.

Mr. ALLISON. If there is any doubt about it, I prefer to make a little further inquiry and then insert later on whatever is necessary. The experts of the Treasury Department will certainly understand what this ought to be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think a hyphen had better be inserted.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that a hyphen be inserted, so as to correspond with the existing law, though I think there will be no trouble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announced that the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. But now I propose another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To hyphenate the word?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to go back to paragraphs 627 and 312, being the two paragraphs relating to mineral waters. There is some misunderstanding as to what phraseology the committee will propose there, and I ask that they may be passed over by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Paragraphs 312 and 367 will be passed over informally by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendments already agreed to may be understood as not having been agreed to, so that the paragraphs will be open.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the amendments were agreed to, and passing over both paragraphs informally, the amendments to be considered pending? The Chair hears no objection. The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

628. Minerals, crude, or not advanced in value or condition by refining or grinding, or by other process of manufacture, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

629. Models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts, including patterns for machinery, but no article shall be deemed a model or pattern which can be fitted for use otherwise.

630. Molasses testing not above 56 degrees by the polariscope: Provided, That if an export duty shall hereafter be laid upon molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported it shall be subject to duty as provided by law at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask unanimous consent that paragraph 630 may be passed over and that it be considered with the sugar schedule.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to that. I think that course is proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Paragraph 630 will be passed over informally, if there be no objection.

Mr. EUSTIS. Let it be considered with the sugar schedule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

631. Moss, sea-weeds, and vegetable substances, crude or unmanufactured, not otherwise specially provided for in this act.

632. Musk, crude, in natural pods.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out paragraph 632, in the following words:

Musk, crude, in natural pods.

And to insert:

Shingles.

I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he should move to insert that article in its place alphabetically.

Mr. VEST. We can arrange that afterwards. I ask for a vote on inserting "shingles." Shingles are put on the free-list in the Mills bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. We have already passed over the lumber schedule without action on it, I suggest to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I want to test the question right now. Here is musk, a perfume, put on the free-list, and I want to put in place of it shingles.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 632, in the following words:

Musk, crude, in natural pods.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Shingles.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, on which he asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] being paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 18, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Pugh,	Vest,
Berry,	Eustis,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Blackburn,	George,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Gray,	Turpie,
Coke,	Hampton,	Vance,

NAYS—28.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Manderson,	Plumb,
Allison,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Brown,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Spooner,
Chace,	Hale,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Payne,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—30.

Beck,	Farwell,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Butler,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Call,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Teller,
Cameron,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees.
Daniel,	Hearst,	Pasco,
Evarts,	Hiscock,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

633. Myrobolan.

634. Newspapers and periodicals; but the term "periodicals" as herein used shall be understood to embrace only unbound or paper-covered publications, containing current literature of the day and issued regularly at stated periods, as weekly monthly, or quarterly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Should there not be a comma between the words "weekly" and "monthly" in line 2167?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A comma will be inserted, if there be no objection. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

635. Nutmegs.
636. Nuts.—Cocoa.
637. Brazil.
638. Cream.
639. Palm.

Mr. ALDRICH. After the words "cocoa" in paragraph 636, "Brazil" in paragraph 637, "cream" in paragraph 638, and "palm" in paragraph 639, I move to insert the word "nuts;" so as to have no misapprehension.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection. The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

640. Palm-nut kernels.
641. Nux vomica.
642. Oakum.
643. Oil-cake.
644. Oils.—Almond.
645. Amber, crude and rectified.
646. Ambergris.
647. Anise, or anise-seed.
648. Aniline.
649. Aspic, or spike-lavender.
650. Bergamot.
651. Cajeput.
652. Caraway.
653. Cassia and cinnamon.
654. Cedrat.
655. Chamomile.
656. Citronella, or lemon-grass.
657. Civet.
658. Fennel.
659. Jasmine, or jasimine.
660. Juglandium.
661. Juniper.
662. Lavender.
663. Lemon.
664. Limes.
665. Mace.
666. Neroli, or orange flower.
667. Nut oil, or oil of nuts not otherwise specially provided for in this act.
668. Orange.
669. Olive oil, for manufacturing or mechanical purposes, unfit for eating, and not otherwise provided for in this act.
670. Ottar of roses.
671. Palm and cocoanut.
672. Rosemary or anthoss.
673. Sesame or sesamum-seed, or bean.
674. Thyme origanum, red or white.
675. Valerian.
676. Spermaceti, whale, and other fish oils of American fisheries, and all other articles the produce of such fisheries.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to insert the word "oil" after the word "almond" in paragraph 644, and so on down to and including paragraph 676. Wherever the word "oil" has not been repeated it is the intention of the committee that it shall be repeated, so that there will be no misapprehension as to the meaning. The paragraphs will then read "almond oil" instead of "almond," "amber oil, crude and rectified," "ambergris oil," "anise oil," or "anise-seed," making a repetition of the word "oil" in each case.

Mr. SHERMAN. It strikes me that as a matter of form, not a matter of substance, it would be better to put all these oils under one paragraph, because certain of these words have a different meaning without using the word "oil," for instance "civet," and also "mace." Mace is an article of commerce, and it is not called an oil in common language. It is always better to use the ordinary language of commerce rather than to insert the word "oil." If the Senator has no objection, I will move that all these oils be inserted in one paragraph under the head of "oils."

Mr. ALDRICH. If the paragraphs down to paragraph 676 can be passed over for the purpose, the committee will put them in form and offer a new form of amendment to-morrow morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paragraphs from paragraph 644 to 676, inclusive, will be passed over informally, and the reading of the substitute will be resumed at paragraph 677.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

677. Olives, green or prepared.
678. Opium, crude or unmanufactured, and not adulterated, containing 9 per cent. and over of morphia.
679. Orange and lemon peel, not preserved, candied, or otherwise prepared.
680. Orchil, or orchil liquid.
681. Ores, of gold and silver.
682. Osmium.
683. Palladium.
684. Paper stock, crude, of every description, including all grasses and pulp of grasses, fibers, rags (other than wool), waste, shavings, clippings, old paper, rope ends, waste rope, waste bagging, old or refuse gunny bags or gunny cloth, and poplar or other woods, fit only to be converted into paper.
685. Paraffine.
686. Parchment and vellum.
687. Pearl, mother of, not sawed, cut, polished, or otherwise manufactured.
688. Peltries and other proper goods and effects of Indians passing or repassing the boundary lines of the territories of the United States: Provided, That this exemption shall not apply to goods in bales or other large packages unusual among Indians.
689. Peppers of all kinds, unground.
690. Personal and household effects, not merchandise, of citizens of the United States dying in foreign countries.
691. Pewter and britannia metal, old, and fit only to be remanufactured.
692. Philosophical and scientific apparatus, instruments, and preparations; statuary, casts of marble, bronze, alabaster, or plaster of Paris; paintings, drawings, and etchings, specially imported in good faith for the use of any society or institution incorporated or established for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, or for encouragement of the fine arts, and not intended for sale.
693. Phosphates, crude or native.
694. Pimento, unground.
695. Plants, trees, shrubs, and vines, of all kinds, not otherwise specially provided for in this act; and plants, trees, shrubs, roots, seed-cane, and seeds, imported by the Department of Agriculture or the United States Botanic Garden.
696. Plaster of Paris and sulphate of lime, unground.
697. Platina, in ingots, bars, sheets, and wire.
698. Platinum, unmanufactured, and vases, retorts, and other apparatus, vessels, and parts thereof composed of platinum, for chemical uses.
699. Plumbago.
700. Polishing-stones.
701. Potash: Crude, carbonate of, or "black salts," or fused.
702. Caustic, or hydrate of, not including refined in sticks or rolls.

Mr. ALDRICH. In paragraph 702, after the word "Caustic," I move to insert the word "potash;" so as to read:

Caustic potash, or hydrate of, not including refined in sticks or rolls.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection. Does the Senator want a comma after the word "refined?"

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A comma will be inserted. The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

703. Nitrate of, or saltpeter, crude.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to insert the word "potash" after the words "Nitrate of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

704. Sulphate of, crude or unrefined.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to insert the word "potash" after "Sulphate of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

705. Chlorate of.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to insert the word "potash" after the words "Chlorate of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

706. Muriate of.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to insert the word "potash" after the words "Muriate of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

707. Professional books, implements, instruments, and tools of trade, occupation, or employment, of persons arriving in the United States; but this exemption shall not be construed to include machinery or other articles imported for use in any manufacturing establishment, or for any other person or persons, or for sale.
708. Pulu.
709. Pumice.
710. Quills, prepared or unprepared, but not made up into complete articles.
711. Quinia, sulphate of, and all alkaloids or salts of cinchona-bark.
712. Rags, all not otherwise specially enumerated or provided for in this act.
713. Regalia and gems, statues, statuary, and specimens of sculpture, where specially imported in good faith for the use of any society incorporated or established for philosophical, literary, or religious purposes, or for the encouragement of the fine arts, or for the use or by order of any college, academy, school, seminary of learning, or public library of the United States; but the term "regalia" as herein used shall be held to embrace only such insignia of rank or office, or emblems, as may be worn upon the person or borne in the hand during public exercises of the society or institution, and shall not include articles of furniture or fixtures, or of regular wearing-apparel, nor personal property of individuals.
714. Rennets, raw or prepared.
715. Saffron and safflower, and extract of, and saffron cake.
716. Sago, crude, and sago flower, not in condition suitable for use as starch

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 716, "f-l-o-w-e-r" should be "f-l-o-u-r;" so as to read "sago flour."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made, if there be no objection. The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

717. Salacine.
718. Sauer-kraut.
719. Sausage-skins.
720. Seeds.—Anise.
721. Canary.
722. Caraway.
723. Cardamom.
724. Coriander.
725. Cotton.
726. Cummin.
727. Fennel.
728. Fenugreek.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In paragraph 728, the word should be "f-e-n-u-g-r-e-e-k." That correction will be made.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to go back to line 2292. That provision was drawn by the late President Garfield when in the House of Representatives, and it was intended by the House and by him to cover the case of the introduction of books for use by instructors, but it has been construed at the Treasury Department otherwise. I should like very much to have that made clear.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator is referring to paragraph 484. Paragraph 713 relates to regalia, etc.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, I should like to have that provision in lines 1932 and 1933 made clear so as to allow what was originally intended, the importation of books for use or for instruction. It comes within the spirit and the purpose. This was designed to cover it, and it does literally cover it, but the Department has construed it otherwise. The question was sent by the Boston custom-house to the Treasury Department some time ago.

Perhaps it is not worth while to detain the Senate by undertaking to do it upon the floor, but I should like to reserve the liberty to go back to that paragraph, and I will confer with the members of the committee some time before the consideration of the bill is concluded. I thought we were at that point now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

729. Hemp.
730. Hoarhound.
731. Mangel-wurzel.
732. Melon.
733. Mustard.
734. Poppy.
735. Pumpkin.
736. Rape.
737. St. John's bread or bean.
738. Sugar-beat.
739. Squash.
740. Turnip.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the word "seed" be added to each one of those articles, from paragraph 729 to paragraph 740, inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

741. And all flower and grass seeds not otherwise specially provided for in this act.
742. Selep, or saloup.
743. Shells of all kinds, not cut, ground, or otherwise manufactured.
744. Shrimps and other shell-fish.
745. Silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not doubled, twisted, or advanced in manufacture in any way.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] desired that paragraph 745 should be passed over for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paragraph will be passed over informally. The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

746. Silk cocoons and silk-waste.
747. Silk-worms' eggs.
748. Skeletons and other preparations of anatomy.

749. Snails.
750. Soda, nitrate of, or cubic nitrate, and chlorate of.
751. Sodium.
752. Sparterre, suitable for making or ornamenting hats.
753. Specimens of natural history, botany, and mineralogy, when imported for cabinets or as objects of science, and not for sale.
754. Sponges.
755. Spunk.
756. Spurs and stilts used in the manufacture of earthern, porcelain, and stone ware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In paragraph 756, line 2352, the letter "r" in the word "earthern" should be stricken out.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; I move to strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter "r" will be stricken out, so as to read "earthen." The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

757. Stone and sand: Burr-stone in blocks, rough or unmanufactured, and not bound into millstones; cliff-stone, unmanufactured; pumice-stone, rotten-stone, and sand, crude or unmanufactured.
758. Storax, or styrax.
759. Straw, unmanufactured.
760. Strontia, oxide of, and protoxide of strontian, and strontianite, or mineral carbonate of strontia.
761. Sugar of milk.
762. Sulphur, lac or precipitated, and sulphur of brimstone, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.
763. Sweepings of silver and gold.
764. Tamarinds.
765. Tapioca, cassava or cassada, provided the same is not fit for use as starch.
766. Tar and pitch of wood.
767. Tea and tea-plants.
768. Teasels.
769. Teeth, natural or unmanufactured.
770. Terra alba.
771. Terra japonica.
772. Tin ore, and tin in bars, blocks, pigs, or grain or granulated.
773. Tonquin, tonqua, or tonka beans.
774. Tripoli.
775. Turmeric.
776. Turpentine, Venice.
777. Turpentine, spirits of.
778. Turtles.
779. Types, old, and fit only to be remanufactured.
780. Uranium, oxide and salts of.
781. Vaccine virus.
782. Valonia.
783. Verdigris, or subacetate of copper.
784. Wafers, unmedicated.
785. Wax, vegetable or mineral.
786. Wearing apparel and other personal effects (not merchandise) of persons arriving in the United States; but this exemption shall not be held to include articles not actually in use and necessary and appropriate for the use of such persons for the purposes of their journey and present comfort and convenience, or which are intended for any other person or persons, or for sale: Provided, however, That all such wearing apparel and other effects as may have been once imported into the United States and subjected to the payment of duty, and which may have been actually used and taken or exported to foreign countries by the persons returning therewith to the United States, shall, if not advanced in value or improved in condition by any means since ther exportation from the United States, be entitled to exemption from duty, upon their identity being established, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.
787. Whalebone, unmanufactured.
788. Wood.—Logs,
789. Fire-wood, handle-bolts, heading-bolts, or stave-bolts, and shingle-bolts, hop-poles, railroad ties, ship-timber, and ship-planking.
790. Cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet-woods, unmanufactured, not otherwise specially provided for in this act; bamboo, rattan reeds, and osier or willow, unmanufactured; bamboo, reeds, and sticks of partridge, hairwood, pimento, orange, myrtle, and other woods, not otherwise specially provided for in this act, in the rough, or not further manufactured than cut into lengths suitable for nmbrella, parasol, sunshade, or whip sticks, or walking-canes; and Indian malacca joints, not further manufactured than cut into suitable lengths for the manufactures into which they are intended to be converted.
791. Works of art, paintings, statuary, and other works of art the production of American artists residing temporarily abroad, and paintings, statuary, fountains, and other works of art, imported expressly for presentation to national institutions, or to any State or municipal corporation, or incorporated religious society, college, or other public institution; but such exemption shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.
792. Works of art, drawings, engravings, photographic pictures, and philosophical and scientific apparatus brought by professional artists, lecturers, or scientists arriving from abroad for use by them temporarily for exhibition and in illustration, promotion, and encouragement of art, science, or industry in the United States, and not for sale, and paintings, statuary, and photographic pictures imported for exhibition by any association duly authorized under the laws of the United States, or of any State, for the promotion and encouragement of science, art, or industry, and not intended for sale, shall be admitted free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but bonds shall be given for the payment to the United States of such duties as may be imposed by law upon any and all of such articles as shall not be exported within six months after such importation: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, extend such period for a further term of six months in cases where applications therefor shall be made.
793. Works of art, collections in illustration of the progress of the arts, science, or manufactures, photographs, works in terra-cotta, parian, pottery, or porcelain, and artistic copies of antiquities in metal or other material, hereafter imported in good faith for permanent exhibition at a fixed place by any society or institution established for the encouragement of the arts or science, and all like articles imported in good faith by any society or association for the purpose of erecting a public monument, and not intended for sale, nor for any other purpose than herein expressed; but the parties importing such articles shall give bonds, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, for the payment of lawful duties which may accrue should any of the articles aforesaid be so sold, transferred, or used contrary to this provision; and such articles shall be subject, at any time, to examination and inspection by the proper officers of the customs.
794. Yams.
795. Zaffer.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 2416, paragraph 790, the committee move to strike out the words "osier or willow" and transpose the word "and" before "reeds."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In line 2416, it is proposed to insert "and" after the word "rattan," and in the same line it is proposed to strike out the words "and osier or willow;" so as to read:

Cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet-woods, unmanufactured, not otherwise specially provided for in this act; bamboo, rattan, and reeds, unmanufactured.

Mr. VEST. There was so much confusion that I could not hear the amendment. I understand the Senator moves to strike out "osier or willow."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be again read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator explain the reason for that motion?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is for the purpose of placing these articles on the dutiable-list at 10 per cent. ad valorem; that is, the unmanufactured osier or willow.

Mr. VEST. I am opposed to it, although there are some interests in my State in that direction. The cultivation of willows for baskets is now being gone into in Southeast Missouri.

Mr. HISCOCK. Have you any objection to a duty being placed on willow?

Mr. VEST. I think it ought to stay on the free-list.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to the Senator that it is not on the free-list now.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is on the free-list in this bill.

Mr. VEST. I understand that.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not on the free-list at the present time in the existing law.

Mr. VEST. In this bill it is on the free-list.

Mr. HISCOCK. In this bill it is.

Mr. VEST. In the Mills bill osier and willow are on the free-list. I do not want to take them out of this list if I can help it. I think everything that goes into an article of necessity, such as baskets and willow ware generally, should be on the free-list.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senators on the other side seem to object to anything being taken off the free-list and put on the dutiable-list if it is produced in this country, and to insist that everything shall be taken off the free-list and put on the dutiable-list which is not produced in this country.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. I have never advanced any such doctrine here, and he can not point to a single instance where I have supported a proposition of that kind.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator yesterday voted with the Senators on that side to take straw braids and plaits from the free-list and put them on the dutiable-list at 20 per cent., they not being produced in this country. He now objects, as I understand, to taking osier and willow from the free-list and putting them on the dutiable-list, osier and willow being produced in this country, being an American agricultural product.

Mr. VEST. A reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show, without putting a matter of memory at issue, that I opposed putting on the free-list braids, plaits, etc., for ornamentation, and made the motion to strike out "for ornament;" and I begged Senators on the other side to let the paragraph remain or be altered so as to leave it that "braids, plaits, etc., for making hats and bonnets" should be free, directly the line which I hold to-day. Those were articles of pure luxury; here is an article of pure necessity. If the Senator can not see the difference between them he is unfortunate, that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. We have now, I believe, completed the schedules of this bill and the free-list, and if no Senator wishes to go on further to-night, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? We passed over a portion of this free-list. When does he propose to resume the consideration of that portion? We passed over a large number of articles on page 175 of the bill, according to the print which I have before me.

Mr. BUTLER. While that is being inquired into, may I make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa, and that is when this body adjourns this evening when do we meet again?

Mr. ALLISON. To-morrow at 12 o'clock, as I understand.

Mr. BUTLER. We had such a prompt attendance at 11 o'clock this morning that I thought perhaps the Senator would wish to meet again at 11 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad that the Senator from South Carolina was able to be here at 11 o'clock to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope my friend from Iowa will be equally prompt.

Mr. ALLISON. I was also here at the same hour.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator now answer my question, when we are to go back to the balance of the free-list?

Mr. ALLISON. My preference would be to go on and finish the reading of the bill in the morning.

Mr. VEST. Beginning at the point where we stopped?

Mr. ALLISON. Where we stop to-night, and then spend the remainder of the day in taking up the omitted portions of the free-list and other matters.

Mr. VEST. I will make a suggestion. I think it would be convenient after we finish the balance of the bill and the portion of the free-list not disposed of, to know what the Senator in charge of the bill intends to call up for consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. My own preference would be then to take up the question of guns and cutlery, and a few miscellaneous items of that character that have not been disposed of, but early next week I want to proceed with the woolen schedule, "Wool and manufacturers of wool," which schedule has not yet been touched.

Mr. VEST. It is entirely immaterial to me what course is pursued.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Iowa yield and withdraw his motion to adjourn for a motion to let us proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield in a moment. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri and other Senators that so many things have been omitted in the reading of the bill that it will be impossible to designate now what particular thing will be taken up next. Of course, after the bill is read through, the whole bill will be open to any amendment that may be suggested by any Senator, but as we have practically but one week more after this week for the consideration of this bill, I think it would be prudent for Senators interested in it to be present at all times.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa in charge of this bill, instead at this late hour of having an executive session to-night, that we have an understanding that to-morrow afternoon, being the last day in the week, at an earlier hour somewhat than usual in order to attend to whatever executive business is necessary to be done, we have an executive session then. At this present time, if we go into executive session, in ten minutes there will be no quorum here; and therefore, with the permission of my friend from Iowa, I will move than the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. If that is satisfactory to my friend from Missouri I have no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to that.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the following bills:

A bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.; and

A bill (S. 182) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Omaha, Nebr.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHACE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1714) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9418) to incorporate the Washington and Western Maryland Railroad Company, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. BLAIR on the 9th of July last, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, providing for an appropriation of $1,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation made by Congress to defray the expenses growing out of the illness and death of the late President James A. Garfield, to be paid to Daniel S. Lamb, M. D., of Washington, D. C., for his services in making the autopsy of the late President Garfield at Elberon, in the State of New Jersey, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ERROR IN ENROLLMENT.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (S. 2305) to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments, the Committee on Enrolled Bills be instructed to insert in lieu of the word "Senator," where it occurs in the eighth line, the word "Senators."

Mr. COCKRELL. This was a clerical error in copying the bill named. The word "Senators" ought to have been inserted instead of "Senator," and now it is too late, the President of the Senate thinks, to make the correction, except by this kind of a resolution. I ask that it may be passed.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ASSIGNEES OF CHOSES IN ACTION.

Mr. WALTHALL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the propriety of amending the existing laws regulating the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, in order to correct the practice reported to exist in some of said courts of allowing suits to be maintained therein by assignees of choses in action, not made by a corporation, which could not have been maintained therein if no assignment had been made, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 12, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 11, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 32.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP were appointed tellers.

Mr. REED. Is the object of this motion on the Democratic side to enable the party to have a caucus?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information on that subject.

Mr. CRISP. This motion is not made by the Democratic side. It is the proceeding of one gentleman.

Mr. REED. We will be willing to grant it, if there is any such object in it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. You would have to come to the caucus. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I ought to be invited, as I have called more Democratic caucuses than anybody else so far. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. What is the motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken; and there were—yea 1, nays 228, not voting 94; as follows:

YEA—1.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WILKINS said: I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Ohio, with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. LAGAN with Mr. LYMAN.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. MCSHANE with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. FORD with Mr. T. H. B. BROWNE.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. HITT.

Mr. LATHAM with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. NEAL with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. WHITE, of New York.

The following members were announced as paired on the election contest of Smalls vs. Elliott:

Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. BACON with Mr. CROUSE.

Mr. CRAIN and Mr. WICKHAM were announced as paired for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House take a recess until half past 1 o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that that is in the nature of business, and therefore is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, as the Journal has not yet been read.

The Chair decided a few days ago that it was competent for any gentleman upon the floor, before the reading of the Journal, to make a simple motion that the House adjourn, because the House might not desire to continue in session; but the House can transact no business until the Journal has been read, and the Chair thinks the only proceedings in order are the simple motion to adjourn and then the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. The Chair ruled on the day before yesterday that a motion to adjourn, and, pending that, a subsequent motion that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on a day subsequent, was in order.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair did not make that ruling. The Chair ruled on a different point from that, and if the point of order had been made then as it has been made to-day the Chair would have had to rule then as he has ruled now.

Mr. WEAVER. The point was made, because the motion to fix the day to which the House should adjourn was made pending the motion to adjourn, and the Chair stated that the House might desire to adjourn before the reading of the Journal, and, of course, it might wish to adjourn to a day certain.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read what occurred on the occasion referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. STEELE. The point made then was "no quorum."

Mr. WEAVER. No.

The SPEAKER. Before having the proceedings read, however, the Chair will state that on the occasion referred to the gentleman from Iowa rose before the Journal was read and made the point that a quorum must appear before the Journal could be read, and that point the Chair sustained. Thereupon the gentleman from Iowa moved that the House do now adjourn, and pending that, he moved that when it adjourn it adjourn to meet on Friday next. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] made the point of order that the motion was not in order, and the mind of the Chair was directed alone to the motion to adjourn and not to the motion to fix the day to which the House should adjourn, as will appear very clearly when the proceedings are read. The language of the Chair shows exactly what was meant. As soon as that has been read the Chair will hear the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WEAVER. I move the House adjourn; and pending that motion, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be until Friday next.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the roll-call, as directed by the Speaker, was for the purpose of knowing whether there was a quorum present, and when the Speaker found a quorum present the next requirement is that the Journal be read.

The SPEAKER. The requirement is the Speaker shall direct that the Journal be read. The Chair thinks the House may adjourn to prevent the reading of the Journal at any time it thinks proper. Such motions have been made before, and the House has adjourned without the reading of the Journal.

The question was taken on adjournment until Friday, etc.

The SPEAKER. It appears very clearly that the mind of the Chair was directed alone to the motion to adjourn, and for the moment the fact was overlooked that the gentleman from Iowa, pending the motion to adjourn, had made another motion—that when the House adjourn it be to meet on a day named.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the extent to which the Chair went in that decision.

Mr. WEAVER. The Chair went further, and put the motion that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on a certain day.

Mr. RANDALL. Because no point of order was made.

Mr. WEAVER. It is the duty of the Chair to make a point of order if a motion is made which is out of order. When a motion is clearly out of order, it is the duty of the Chair to so hold. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to clause 5 of Rule XVI, which I ask the Clerk to read:

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, a motion to adjourn, and to take a recess shall always be in order; and the hour at which the House adjourns shall be entered on the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is well aware of that rule.

Mr. WEAVER. "Always in order" is the language of the rule.

The SPEAKER. But the House, in the judgment of the Chair, can transact no business until its Journal has been read. It has been held again and again that an order of the House fixing the day to which the House shall adjourn or to take a recess is the transaction of business and requires the presence of a quorum. Moreover, the Chair desires to say that even if he had decided on the 9th of January that this motion was in order, he is now satisfied it is not in order, and would have no hesitation whatever in reversing his own ruling on the subject. [Applause.]

Mr. WEAVER. Let the Journal be read. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal.

Mr. WEAVER (interrupting the reading). I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. I submit that the Journal should be read in extenso, including the names of those voting on the call of yeas and nays. How can we know whether our names are properly recorded unless the names are read?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The names may be improperly recorded, and the House has the right to pass upon that as well as any other part of the Journal.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. WEAVER (again interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, it is the Journal I want read, and not the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. WEAVER (again interrupting the reading). I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. I understand the Clerk is reading from the tally-sheet, and not from the Journal.

The SPEAKER. That is a part of the Journal, and is printed with it.

Mr. RANDALL. It is the original paper.

The SPEAKER. It is the original paper.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Journal will be approved as read. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is in order, but the gentleman from South Carolina rises, as the Chair understands, to a matter more highly privileged.

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to present a conference report.

Mr. WEAVER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is the regular order.

Mr. WEAVER. Can a conference report take precedence of a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly a conference report may be submitted at any time, even pending a motion to adjourn; it is always in order, except when the Journal is being read, or when the yeas and nays are being taken, or the House is actually dividing on some question.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MILWAUKEE, WIS.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following conference report submitted by Mr. DIBBLE:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments to the said bill and agree to the same with the following amendments:

1. In second line, first page, before the word "purchase," insert the words "acquire by;" and after the word "purchase," in the same line, insert the words "condemnation or otherwise."

Mr. WEAVER (interrupting). I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. Is this in order before the approval of the Journal? The Journal has not been approved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rose and expressly stated the Journal as read would be approved if there was no objection. There was no objection, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. WEAVER. I will state to the Chair that I did not hear that statement. [Laughter and cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the conference report.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

2. In the eleventh line, first page, before the word "the," insert the words "and the cost of said site shall not exceed the sum of $400,000."

3. In the fifteenth line, second page, after the word "city," insert the words "at a cost, however, not exceeding $300,000."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

SAM'L DIBBLE,
C. NEWTON,
P. S. POST,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
WM. B. ALLISON,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the following statement, required by the rules to accompany the report:

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House amendment to the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis., respectfully submit with the conference report the following statement:

The Senate bill provided for an expenditure of $1,200,000 for site and building complete, or $1,100,000 if the present site was enlarged by purchase of adjoining ground. The House amended by substituting simply a provision for purchasing a site at a cost not exceeding $300,000. The effect of the adoption of the conference report is to provide for site and building at a cost not exceeding $1,200,000, of which sum not more than $400,000 may be expended for the site; and in case the present site is enlarged by purchase of adjoining ground, then the entire cost shall not exceed $1,100,000, and the cost of the additional ground shall not exceed $300,000. All of which is respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
C. NEWTON,
P. S. POST,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for a vote on my motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided under the rules of the House the conference report has precedence over a motion to adjourn, and it has been even held a conference report can be made when a member is occupying the floor; that he can be taken off the floor for that purpose. Of course the rule that a conference report can be presented and displace a motion to adjourn would amount to nothing practically if a vote upon the motion to adjourn can be immediately insisted upon.

Mr. DIBBLE. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. WEAVER. It is strange indeed after a conference report has been read to the House the House must consider it and can not adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not held the House must proceed to consider it, and can not adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER. But the Chair recognized me to make the motion to adjourn before the conference report was submitted, and that motion is still pending.

The SPEAKER. It is pending, but the conference report has to be disposed of before it can be put. The House makes its own rules, and the House has made a rule which has been in force many years, by which a conference report is in order even pending a motion to adjourn.

Now, the House always has the whole subject under its own control. In the first place, before any proceeding was taken on the report the question of consideration could have been raised against it. In the second place, if the House desires to adjourn before it proceeds further with the consideration of the report it may postpone the report to another time and adjourn. But while the report is before the House and is under consideration the Chair can not put the question on the motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next. That is the very question which was displaced. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WEAVER. I understand the Chair to decide—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] This is the regular order. I understand the Chair to decide when we are considering a conference report—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] This is the regular order. I understand the Chair to decide when we are considering a conference report, no matter how long, you can never make a motion to adjourn, no matter whether that is a month off.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not decide that, but decides the motion to adjourn over can not be put to a vote until the other subject which takes precedence is disposed of in some way by the House. The motion has been made and is pending. Now the gentleman asks the Chair to put first the question on his motion to adjourn, which is one inferior in privilege to that presented by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE], and which is actually under consideration.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. REED. Does the Chair hold that a motion to postpone the consideration of the report would be in order?

The SPEAKER. Of course, when the gentleman gets the floor for that purpose; but the gentleman from South Carolina has the floor and has demanded the previous question.

Mr. REED. But if a motion to adjourn after the conference report has been read is not in order, as I understand the Chair to hold, then the House can not adjourn until it has acted upon the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so decide, but held that under the rules and the uniform practice of the House, a conference report may be presented even when there is a motion to adjourn pending. Of course the question of consideration may be raised against the report; but it has not been raised in this case. Now, if the Chair should hold that the motion to adjourn must be put before action is taken upon the conference report, either to consider it or to postpone its consideration, the rule of the House, as the gentleman will see, would amount to nothing practically. There are certain motions which have priority in a certain order, and that order must be observed in submitting these motions to the House.

Mr. REED. Of course, I understand; but the Chair must practically decide that the House can not adjourn until it has acted upon the report in some way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. REED. At what point, will the Chair state, could a motion to adjourn be made?

The SPEAKER. The House, of course, may postpone the consideration of the conference report, or it may determine not to consider it.

Mr. REED. But there must be some point at which the motion to adjourn could be submitted I am asking, of course, for information, because this is such an important matter outside of the present condition of affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. REED. Now, suppose a motion to postpone this conference report is made, and then a motion to adjourn is submitted, would it then be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers not to decide questions of order until they are presented, especially upon so important a matter. All the Chair now decides is that the presentation of the conference report, no question of consideration having been raised against it, takes precedence over other motions, even the motion to adjourn or to fix a day to which the House shall adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER. Permit me to state, Mr. Speaker, that my motion to adjourn was made before the gentleman from South Carolina got the floor to submit his conference report.

Mr. ROGERS. Regular order.

Mr. WEAVER. And if the motion to adjourn is not now in order when will it be?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that this is the very case provided for by the rule, and the motion to adjourn is of less dignity than the consideration of a conference report.

The conference report having been presented, and, as the Chair has stated, no question of consideration having been raised, it is necessarily before the House, and must be voted upon before the Chair can take the vote on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER. But I make the point of order that that clause of the rule has reference to the submission of the report to the House, and not to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration was not raised. The conference report was submitted, and the gentleman from South Carolina has demanded the previous question upon it.

The question is, Will the House now order the previous question?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 150.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet put the question upon the other side.

Those voting in the negative were 4.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. DIBBLE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER decided that a sufficient number of members had risen.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. I make the point of order that it requires a quorum to order the yeas and nays, and no quorum has voted upon that demand. I ask to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WEAVER. I call the attention of the Chair and of the House to the proceedings in the House of Representatives as recorded in the Journal, page 651, first session of the Thirty-second Congress, where the following appears:

The bill of the House, No. 137, for the relief of Osborn Cross, of the United States Army, was then taken up. The Speaker stated the question to be upon its engrossment. The yeas and nays having been demanded, no quorum voted; when Mr. George W. Jones made the point of order that inasmuch as one-fifth of the members voting had voted in favor of taking the vote on the engrossment of the bill by yeas and nays, it was not necessary that a quorum should have voted, the Constitution providing that the yeas and nays shall at the desire of one-fifth of those present be entered on the Journal, and that proportion of those voting having expressed such a desire in the present case, he insisted that they were entitled to have the yeas and nays taken. The Speaker overruled the point of order on the ground that it was not competent for less than a quorum to do business. Upon a question like that of adjournment or a call of the House, where less than a quorum might act, he would hold otherwise.

From this decision of the Chair Mr. George W. Jones appealed; when, on motion of Mr. Hart, it was ordered that the said appeal be laid on the table.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

One further point. In the second session of the same Congress——

Mr. CUMMINGS. What Congress?

Mr. WEAVER. The Thirty-second.

The question again recurred on the motion of Mr. McMullen, and being put no quorum again voted. The Speaker having announced that no quorum had voted on the said motion, Mr. Alexander H. Stephens demanded the yeas and nays. The Speaker decided in conformity with his decision at the last session, and which was sustained by the House, that less than a quorum could not act upon the demand for the yeas and nays any more than upon any other business, and consequently that the yeas and nays was not now in order. He thought that taking the clause of the Constitution authorizing one-fifth of the members present to cause the yeas and nays to be entered upon the Journal, in connection with that requiring a majority of the members to constitute a quorum to do business, it is clearly intended that the members present, one-fifth of whom may order the yeas and nays, should amount to a quorum. It would be different if the pending motion was to adjourn, or for a call of the House, as less than a quorum is competent to act upon either of these motions.

From this decision of the Chair Mr. Alexander H. Stephens appealed, pending which Mr. Clemens moved that the appeal be laid on the table, which was decided in the affirmative.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is incompetent for this House to do business with less than a quorum, and the ordering of the yeas and nays upon a given proposition is of the most serious character of business, and can not be done either by the House or under the rules of the House without a quorum. I make that point.

Mr. DIBBLE. On a demand for the yeas and nays, under the practice of this House, several modes of procedure are well settled. In the first place, when a sufficient number, representing one-fifth of the members of this House, evidently rises, it is the custom of the Speaker to order the yeas and nays, unless the other side is demanded or tellers are demanded on the yeas and nays; and the gentleman is too late, because he took no steps at all to develop the absence of a quorum prior to the decision of the question by the Speaker of the House that a sufficient number had risen and that the yeas and nays were ordered. In advance of any such point as that which the gentleman is now making, it was necessary that the other side should be demanded by him, or that tellers should be demanded. As he neglected to take the process requisite to make the want of a quorum appear, it is too late now, after the Speaker has said that a sufficient number had risen, to raise the point of order; and it is too late now for him to make these preliminary demands. Therefore I submit that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the Speaker as to the fact whether one-fifth of 163 arose and asked for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not count the gentlemen rising; but so many gentlemen arose that the Chair, in the usual formula of announcement in such cases, stated that evidently a sufficient number had arisen; thereupon the gentleman from Iowa made the point that on the last vote preceding that there was no quorum.

Mr. WEAVER. And I also made the point of no quorum on the calling for the yeas and nays, and the vote is before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, then, will take the vote on ordering the yeas and nays, because the Chair did not count gentlemen who arose before, but simply stated that a sufficient number had arisen, and the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. The point of no quorum had been made before.

Mr. DIBBLE. I insist upon the parliamentary point that it comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not make the point of order that there was no quorum at the last preceding vote, but that there was no quorum on the demand for the yeas and nays. The Chair did not count, and therefore will take the vote and see whether a quorum votes or not. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-one gentlemen have arisen [applause], and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. KELLEY. What is the question?

The SPEAKER. On the demand for the previous question on the conference report.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 218, nays 18, not voting 87; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. DIBBLE (during the roll-call). I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. JONES with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. ROMEIS, on all political questions for the remainder of the day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 218, the nays 18. The yeas have it. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate; fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. DIBBLE. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN (to Mr. DIBBLE). That will not do. Withdraw it.

Mr. DIBBLE. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes none, noes 139.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 168.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate—fifteen minutes in support and fifteen minutes in opposition to the measure.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. Would a motion to adjourn to a day certain be in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next is pending.

Mr. WEAVER. Is the other motion in order pending that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has some doubt. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] made a motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next, and pending that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] presented a conference report. The Chair held that, under the rules and practice of the House, the conference report had precedence over a motion to adjourn, or a motion to fix the day to which the House would adjourn, but that the question of consideration might be raised against the conference report. That, however, was not done, and the House entered upon its consideration, and therefore the Chair held that, under the circumstances, the question must first be put upon the adoption of the report. Now, the Chair has some doubt as to the correctness of that ruling, and some doubt as to the effect which it may have under certain circumstances hereafter. The Chair still adheres to it, however, for the present at least, but will give the question careful examination and consideration.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the Chair allow me to make a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; the Chair is ready to hear any suggestion.

Mr. WEAVER. I suggest to the Chair that it would be better to resolve the doubt in the interest of the rights of the minority. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he had better resolve the doubt in the interest of the transaction of public business in the House [applause], and has therefore done so upon this occasion.

Mr. REED. I trust that remark of the Speaker may receive the approval of the next Democratic caucus.

Mr. RANDALL. The next Democratic caucus will take care of itself.

Mr. REED. I did not hear the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I say that the next Democratic caucus will be able to take care of itself.

Mr. REED. If they did not do more than take care of themselves nobody would care. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to say to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] that I desire some time to debate this bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. There are fifteen minutes allowed in opposition to the adoption of the report, and I suppose that that time may as well be accorded to the gentleman.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well; let that be the understanding. I would like to have the bill read first, however.

Mr. DIBBLE. I now take the floor in favor of the adoption of the report.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read before the motion is put. It can not be read in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the Senate passed a bill for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, and appropriated $1,200,000 for that purpose. The bill came over to the House and was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who amended it by providing simply for the purchase of a site, the expense of which should not exceed $400,000, leaving the matter of the erection of the building for future legislation. To that amendment of the House the Senate refused to agree. The committee of conference have met, and the report of that committee is in substance this: That the construction of the building as well as the purchase of the site shall be provided for in the bill, at an expense not to exceed the limit named originally, $1,200,000; but that the purchase money of the site shall be limited to the amount provided for in the House bill, $400,000, leaving the balance for the erection of the building; and that if in the purchase of the site the Government shall deem it expedient to purchase a piece of ground adjoining the ground occupied by a small public building now existing at Milwaukee, then the cost of the site shall not exceed $300,000, thus making the total cost of site and building not to exceed $1,100,000. That is the report of the committee of conference. In connection with it I will state that the city of Milwaukee was a place of 175,000 inhabitants at the time of our report, and I am told that the population at this time is over 200,000. At the time of our report it was ascertained as 175,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The gentleman will permit me to say that the estimate to which he refers was based upon the figures of a former report, which accounts for the difference. One hundred and seventy-five thousand was the population in 1884.

Mr. DIBBLE. I am informed by the gentleman from Wisconsin that the figures named in the report were those of 1884, and that now the population is about 210,000.

The amount of appropriation proposed is not at all excessive when compared with the amount heretofore appropriated by Congress for buildings in cities of similar size and when the amount of public business at this place is taken into consideration. The proposed expenditure is very much below the average appropriation for cities of similar size. The difference between the Senate and the House was merely a difference as to whether we should provide for both site and building at present or for the site alone. There was very little controversy as to the amount. The House did not make any controversy as to the $400,000; in fact, fixed that amount as the limit for the site, and the Senate agreed to that in the conference report. It therefore leaves only $800,000 for the building. Every member knows that this is not an excessive amount for a building in a city of such size and with the amount of public business done at Milwaukee.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). Five minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I reserve the residue of my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I have taken some pains to inquire into the necessity for a public building at Milwaukee, and I am satisfied that at a proper time this bill ought to be considered and an appropriation made. But, sir, this measure bears no comparison whatever in point of importance to the bill in behalf of which I have been struggling for the past two or three days. Here is a condition of affairs in the very heart of this continent which, if the public mind were properly informed, would not only arouse universal interest, but send a thrill of horror throughout the whole country. I speak without the slightest exaggeration when I say that according to authentic accounts there have been more than three hundred murders within the Indian Territory during the year 1888, and that between fifteen and twenty of the persons killed were Federal officials.

Mr. DIBBLE. Does the gentleman propose to bury them in the public building at Milwaukee? [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. This statement does not take into account the multitude of other infamous crimes committed in the same Territory during the same period. If you will add the murders and other infamous crimes committed in that Territory during the life of the Fiftieth Congress they will amount to more than five hundred. Probably more than five hundred murders have been committed in that Territory during the life of the Fiftieth Congress.

A bill to organize a Territorial government for that section of the country, to suppress crime, to restore law and order, to settle the Territory with peaceful citizens, to drive out the law of the bowie-knife and the revolver, has been pending here for two Congresses. In the Forty-ninth Congress there was clearly a majority in favor of the passage of the bill; but its consideration was defeated by dilatory motions and tactics. In the present Congress it has been apparent from the very commencement that more than two-thirds of this House were in favor of the passing of the Oklahoma bill; yet by a resort to dilatory tactics the will of this House and the wishes of the American people have again been disregarded and trampled in the dust, and the cattle barons have thus far triumphed.

More than 600,000 citizens of the United States, speaking through the Knights of Labor, the Farmers' Alliance, the Agricultural Wheels, and the Grange, have petitioned this body to pass a bill for the organization of Oklahoma Territory; but they have been met with contempt and their petitions disregarded. Sir, it has come to this, that in the transaction of the business of this House, in the opinion of many of those who control its action, this Congress assembles solely for the purpose of passing appropriation bills providing for the payment of salaries of Government officials, and not for the purpose of protecting the rights of the home-seeker and the poor.

Now, sir, look at the anomalous condition of things in that Territory. There is an area of country larger by far than many of the States of this Union——

Mr. DIBBLE. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking in order.

Mr. WEAVER. I am showing, sir——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina raises the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa is not confining himself to the question under debate.

Mr. WEAVER. I am showing that the Oklahoma bill is more important than the bill under consideration, and I am urging this as a reason for postponing the consideration of the present bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause to be read clause 1 of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

When any member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The Chair is of the opinion that under the rules of the House the gentleman from Iowa must confine himself to the subject-matter under debate.

Mr. WEAVER. I will try to do that. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that, however important it may be to erect a public building at the city of Milwaukee, it is not so important as to give it precedence over the Oklahoma bill. The latter relates to the whole country, while the former is simply of local consequence. It has been officially determined that this portion of the Indian Territory can not be lawfully occupied either by the red men, the black men, or the white men.

Mr. MASON. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Iowa must confine his remarks to the subject before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WEAVER. Is it not in order to show that this bill ought not to pass at present because of other business which is more urgent in its character?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa must confine himself to the question before the House.

Mr. WEAVER. The question pending is upon the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is on the adoption of the conference report submitted by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

Mr. WEAVER. Very well; I do not think that conference report ought to be adopted until the Oklahoma bill is passed. [Laughter.] I am giving my reason, and I am doing it in good faith. I do not wish to disregard the decision of the Chair, and will not do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, sir, I say this bill is not of sufficient importance to take precedence over the Oklahoma bill. There is a condition of affairs in that Territory where one class of people——

Mr. MASON. I make the same point of order, that the gentleman must confine himself to the subject before the House.

Mr. WEAVER. I am giving a reason why, and I understood the Chair to say that could be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. WEAVER. I will try to do so. [Laughter.] Yet, sir, notwithstanding it has been held that neither white men, black men, nor red men may occupy that Territory lawfully, nevertheless it has been and is now unlawfully occupied by powerful and wealthy cattle barons, and an army is kept there to protect those cattle-men and to eject homesteaders. And this condition of affairs has been carried on for the last four years in the Territory in defiance of the will of the American people, in defiance of law, and in cruel disregard of the cries of those who are seeking homes for their little ones. Why will you not hear them? Why do you sit here from day to day, from session to session, and from year to year, without action and in stolid disregard of duty? I put the onus on this House of refusing to hear these petitions and of refusing to pass upon this important measure. I reserve the remainder of my time. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. DIBBLE. Unless some other gentleman desires to address the Chair [cries of "Vote!"], I will ask that the vote be taken on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand a division.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore reported 88 in the affirmative.

Mr. WEAVER. I raise the point that a quorum has to be present to order the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. More than one-fifth of a quorum has voted in the affirmative.

Mr. WEAVER. And a quorum must be present.

The SPEAKER. On the last vote taken in the House there was a quorum. It is true no quorum has risen in support of the demand for the yeas and nays, but only one side has been asked for. The Constitution provides one-fifth of those present may order the yeas and nays. If the gentleman desires to know whether a quorum has voted on a demand for the yeas and nays the other side will be counted. Does the gentleman demand it?

Mr. WEAVER. I do.

The SPEAKER. Then the other side will be counted.

The other side was counted.

The SPEAKER. There are 88 in the affirmative and 57 in the negative.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum, and I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to say anything on the question?

Mr. WEAVER. No, I do not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is somewhat familiar with the question which was raised by the gentleman from Iowa to-day, and is aware of the fact that there have been two or three decisions in the House to the effect that under the Constitution it requires the presence of a quorum to order the yeas and nays. That was upon the ground that the ordering of the yeas and nays was the transaction of business; and in one case at least the decision, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa, was appealed from and was sustained by the House. But for more than thirty-five years the decisions have been all the other way, and the uniform practice of the House has been constantly the reverse of that.

If the ordering of the yeas and nays is the transaction of business, of course the ordering of tellers is the transaction of business. In each case the proceeding relates merely to the manner of taking the vote of the House, the method by which the sense of the House shall be ascertained on a matter of business.

Mr. WEAVER. If the Chair will permit me——

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER. I want to suggest to the Chair, apropos of what is being said, that the ordering of tellers is for the purpose of ascertaining the presence of a quorum, or for the purpose of ascertaining the sense of the House on a demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Tellers are appointed for the purpose of taking a vote of the House. Under the rules of the House one-fifth of a quorum may order tellers, but it is easy to be seen that one-fifth of a quorum, which is thirty-three members, may be all the members present, and much less than a quorum; and if the point of the gentleman is well taken, that the yeas and nays can not be ordered without the presence of a quorum, manifestly neither of these methods of taking a vote of the House could be resorted to, nor could any other method of taking a vote upon any question, because they are all proceedings of the same character. The Chair is unable to see how the House could even divide on a question, because it is as much the transaction of business as taking a vote by tellers or the call of the roll on the vote by yeas and nays. The Chair thinks, therefore, that the later practice is the better practice, and that the three decisions alluded to, which seem to stand alone, are not now the law of the House.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

The yeas and nays are ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 179, nays 53, not voting 91; as follows:

So the conference report was adopted.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. COX with Mr. KELLEY, for the rest of the day.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. NUTTING, for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes none, noes 134.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. WEAVER as tellers.

Mr. WEAVER (one of the tellers) announced the vote in the affirmative as 1.

Mr. DIBBLE. I make the point that the teller himself should vote, and that there are two votes in the affirmative.

Mr. WEAVER. I decline to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLEMENTS in the chair). The point of order of the gentleman from South Carolina is overruled. The gentleman has the right to vote or not as he sees proper.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—aye 1, noes 162.

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

PUBLIC BUILDING—OMAHA.

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire now to present a further conference report.

Mr. WEAVER. And against that I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, after which the Chair will put the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 182) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Omaha, Nebr., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments to the said bill, and agree to the same with the following amendments:

In the third line, first page, strike out the words "proceedings in accordance with the laws of Nebraska" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or otherwise."

In the tenth line, first page, after the word "dollars," insert "and the cost of said site shall not exceed the sum of $400,000."

Strike out section 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 3. That the sum of $600,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of said site and the commencement of said building."

And the Senate agree to the same.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
JOHN A. McSHANE,
ROBERT P. KENNEDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
W. B. ALLISON,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House managers was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 182) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Omaha, Nebr., respectfully submit the following statement:

The Senate in the bill provided for $1,200,000 as the limit of cost for site and building. The House amended by substituting provisions for the purchase of a site only, not to exceed in cost $400,000.

The effect of the conference report is to provide for a limit in cost for site and building complete to $1,200,000, cost of site not to exceed $400,000, and provides for an appropriation of $600,000, four hundred thousand for the purchase of a site and two hundred thousand for the commencement of the construction of a building thereon.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
JOHN A. McSHANE,
ROBERT P. KENNEDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the report?

Mr. WEAVER. My object in raising the question of consideration is to proceed with the Oklahoma bill.

The SPEAKER. This question is not debatable.

Mr. McSHANE. I rise to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to withdraw his question of consideration and to give reasons for my request.

The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 9.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. WEAVER were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 153, noes 10.

So the House determined to proceed with the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House proceeded to divide, when

Mr. DIBBLE said: I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER (after the count). Sixty gentlemen have risen, more than one-fifth, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 196, nays 26, not voting 101; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DIBBLE said: I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TOWNSHEND). Unless there be objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WISE with Mr. JOHN R. BROWN, on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. MCCOMAS, for this day.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. WADE, for this day.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. KELLEY for the remainder of the day.

Mr. JOHN R. BROWN. I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with Mr. WISE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon the demand for the previous question the yeas are 196, nays 26. The yeas have it, the previous question is ordered, and there are thirty minutes for debate—fifteen minutes in the affirmative and fifteen in opposition to the conference report.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker this is a similar conference report to the last under consideration, except that the appropriation provided by the bill is $600,000. I do not think that it is necessary to debate the question, and will simply reserve my time. If any one desires to speak in opposition to the bill they can do so. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. WEAVER. I only say that as soon as the conference report shall have been acted upon I desire to have the Oklahoma bill taken up. [Laughter.]

The report of the conference committee was agreed to.

Mr. MCSHANE moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. WEAVER rose at the same time.

Mr. DIBBLE. I present another conference report.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House adjourn, and that when the House adjourn it be to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the ruling that has already been made, the Chair will hold the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to be out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. A motion to adjourn not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

Mr. REED. We seem to be struck by two necessities at once. The House can not go one way on account of the gentleman from Iowa, and it can not go the other way on account of the gentleman from South Carolina. We are illustrating the nature of our rules fully.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, the question is on the motion that the House now adjourn.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present another conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa had a motion pending that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next; and pending that the gentleman from South Carolina presented a report from a committee of conference, against which the question of consideration was raised, and the House by an almost unanimous vote determined that it would consider the conference report and not the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER. That report.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen now moves to adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER. But I first raise the question of consideration, and pending that move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Then that is in order.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I present another conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Iowa raises the question of consideration upon that, and pending that, before the House has determined upon considering the conference report, moves that when the House adjourn it be to meet on Monday next. The Chair thinks that motion is in order.

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to be heard briefly upon that question. The proposition which I wish to present to the Chair is that the motion to adjourn is not in order until the House shall have decided not to consider the conference report, because if the question of the consideration of the conference report gave the motion to adjourn a priority over a question of higher privilege, that priority would not be actual, but would be merely formal. It has been ruled by the Speaker, and it has been the uniform ruling and practice of the House, that a conference report is a proposition of such high privilege that it will even take a member off the floor during debate, or that it will intervene on a motion to adjourn, and, as the Chair has ruled, when that privilege attaches it takes precedence of a motion to adjourn until the House disposes of the question.

The House may dispose of the question of consideration in several ways. It may postpone the report until the next day, or it may decline to consider the report; but I submit that the question of consideration is merely a formal one, a question which substantially adheres to the consideration of every proposition. The rule provides that the question of consideration need not be formally acted upon unless some member raises it, but that question is in effect acted upon every time any proposition is brought before the House. Every time a proposition is presented to the House and a member does not raise the question of consideration, that question is in effect decided in favor of considering the proposition. Now, I submit that the motion to adjourn will not be in order unless the House decides not to consider, or decides to postpone the consideration of this report until some other time. One or the other of those motions must precede the motion to adjourn, for that motion can not come in and displace a proposition superior in rank.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the result of the argument of the gentleman from South Carolina would be that the House would have to remain in session as long as any gentleman could present a conference report.

Mr. DIBBLE. Not at all; because the House can decline to consider any one of these reports. If the House desires to adjourn it can decline to consider the conference report, and can then adjourn.

Mr. REED. Not at all; because a gentleman with a pocketful of conference reports can keep firing them off. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIBBLE. Well, conference reports are not inexhaustible, and 5 o'clock is the hour fixed for adjournment.

Mr. REED. Under these rules; but not under the rules of any other parliamentary body.

Mr. DIBBLE. Well, we are arguing upon these rules.

Mr. REED. We are not arguing on the 5 o'clock adjournment, because that is an anomaly.

The SPEAKER. The nineteenth rule of the House provides that the presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or while the House is dividing on any proposition. Under this rule it has been held that the presentation of such reports is in order pending a motion to adjourn (although that motion is not mentioned in the rule), and that it is in order while a member is occupying the floor; and the practice of the House is that when it is in order to present a matter at any time it is in order to consider the matter at that time, subject, of course, to the right of any member upon the floor to raise the question of consideration and to the right of the House to determine that it will or will not consider the matter. This morning, when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] insisted upon his motion to adjourn, the House had not only received the report of the committee of conference, but had actually entered upon its consideration; and the Chair then held that the matter had reached such a stage in its progress as a privileged matter that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa could not be put. Now, however, the House has not determined to consider this conference report. The literal terms of the rule have been complied with, the report has been presented to the House, and the gentleman from Iowa raises the question of consideration against it, and then moves that the House adjourn. Suppose the Chair holds that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is now out of order, or that it can not now be voted on, and the House determines that it will consider the report, when can the House adjourn?

Mr. DIBBLE. The House could adjourn on a motion to defer action on this report to a later day, or at 5 o'clock, the hour fixed by the rule, of which the Chair would of course take official cognizance.

The SPEAKER. That is a dilemma in which the House may find itself whenever it actually enters upon the consideration of a conference report before the motion to adjourn is put; and that is one of the features of the case which raised a doubt in the mind of the Chair this morning. The Chair thinks that to hold now that the gentleman's motion to adjourn should not be put before the House has entered upon the consideration of the conference report when the question of consideration has been raised would be to extend the privilege of the report beyond what was done this morning, and the Chair had doubts then whether he did not go too far. The Chair thinks the motion to adjourn can be put now, and thus the House will determine whether it will adjourn or will proceed to consider the report. The question is upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER. I know this motion is not debatable; but I want to say just one word—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is the question upon the motion to adjourn or to adjourn over?

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn over.

Mr. DIBBLE. I make the point of order that that is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not to adjourn over, but that when the House adjourns it will adjourn to meet on the day named.

Mr. DIBBLE. Well, I make a point of order against so much of the motion as relates to adjourning over to a day certain, because it interferes with the privilege of a conference report; and the reason about the House having the privilege of adjourning does not apply in this case.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, a motion to fix a day to which the House shall adjourn is of higher privilege than the simple motion to adjourn.

Mr. DIBBLE. But a conference report is of higher privilege than either; and if the Speaker will allow me, I now present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman has presented a conference report; and the gentleman from Iowa has raised the question of consideration against it. As the Chair stated, the present situation is different from that this morning, when a conference report was not only presented but the House determined to go on with its consideration and was going on with it. While the difference is not very great, still, in the opinion of the Chair, to hold that the House can not adjourn at all after a conference committee has presented its report and before its consideration would be going very far—too far, in fact, under the rules of the House; and the motion to fix a day to which the House will adjourn is one of still higher privilege than the other.

Mr. DIBBLE. But is not a conference report of superior privilege to a motion to adjourn or a motion to adjourn over?

The SPEAKER. A motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn is a motion of higher privilege under the rules of the House than the motion to adjourn.

Mr. DIBBLE. But not higher than a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Not higher than the presentation of a conference report; and that has been done.

The question having been taken on the motion of Mr. WEAVER that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on Monday next,

The SPEAKER said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 7, noes 97.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

The tellers took their places and proceeded with the count.

Mr. TAULBEE (during the count by tellers). Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The House is voting. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to correct the record.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will suspend the count for a moment.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to correct the record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the correction.

Mr. DIBBLE. Is this in order? If not, I raise the point that the House is dividing.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order while the vote is being taken except by consent.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am not asking unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair declines to entertain the proposition while the House is dividing.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to have my motion for the correction of the record regarded as pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain another question while the House is voting upon the question before it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I wish to announce that as soon as the vote is completed, I desire to take the floor for the purpose I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then hear the gentleman.

The tellers, having concluded their count, made their report.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are none, the noes 163. The noes have it, and the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is not agreed to. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] desires to present a question of privilege, and will state it.

Mr. DIBBLE. Pending that, I rise to a question of higher privilege—a conference report.

The SPEAKER. That is the question pending. The question is, Will the House proceed with the consideration of the report? As many as are in favor of proceeding with its consideration will say "ay."

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair called upon the gentleman from Kentucky, but he did not rise; thereupon the gentleman from South Carolina rose and called up the matter of privilege.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the Chair please, I was on my feet at the time for this purpose. I was in front of my desk and walked back to my desk. I want to know——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman states he was on his feet addressing the Chair the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not state that I was on my feet and addressing the Chair, but I state I was on my feet for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair expressly called upon the gentleman from Kentucky, but did not see him rise; thereupon the gentleman from South Carolina rose and called up a privileged report.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not rise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina then rose and called up a privileged report.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not rise, for I was then on my feet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. TAULBEE. The House was dividing on the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I submitted some remarks on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR], and on the announcement of the Chair that the resolution which was being read at the Clerk's desk did not go into the RECORD, I asked permission to withhold my remarks for revision. [Laughter.] My request went into the RECORD, but instead of my remarks being submitted to me for revision they were put into the RECORD. [Renewed laughter.] Now, I find in the rules for the publication of the RECORD adopted by the Joint Committee on Printing it is provided that corrections in speeches for bound editions of the RECORD should be sent to the Public Printer within four days after the delivery of the speech to be corrected, as it is then stereotyped. I think, sir, under the custom of the House I am entitled to revise my remarks. I do not know I could make much improvement on them, but still I think I am entitled to the same courtesy any other member of this House may claim or to which he is entitled. I now desire to correct the RECORD so as to leave out of the RECORD and to be submitted to me for revision my remarks on page 693.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD seems to be correct according to the gentleman's own statement. It shows what he said. Whether the gentleman's remarks were furnished to the gentleman or not for revision the Chair does not know. The Chair had no connection with it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am afraid the Chair misunderstood my remark. I did not say that the RECORD did not show the remarks as I made them, but I said I did not know that I could much improve on them. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks the remarks which he has indicated be omitted from the permanent RECORD, so that he may have leave to revise them. Is there objection to granting that request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. Is not the motion to adjourn pending?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not. The motion made by the gentleman from Iowa was, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next, and that motion has been voted down.

Mr. WEAVER. I made the motion that the House adjourn, and then I moved that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. One point of order is now pending.
Mr. TAULBEE. I think my point of order has priority.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to make this point of order: That the request I submitted for the omission of my remarks from the RECORD has not been announced by the Chair.
The SPEAKER. It has been, and the request was agreed to.
Mr. TAULBEE. Is it the order of the House?
The SPEAKER. That is the order of the House.
Mr. TAULBEE. Then I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Iowa. [Laughter.]
Mr. WEAVER. I understood the Chair to decide when a motion to adjourn is made and pending that a motion to adjourn to a day certain is in order and must be first voted on.
The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Iowa to make any motion except that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.
Mr. WEAVER. Oh, yes; I also made the motion that the House adjourn.
The SPEAKER. Then if that be so, the motion to adjourn is the question now before the House.
Mr. DIBBLE. I call up the conference report.
The SPEAKER. That is the pending subject before the House for consideration, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] interposes the motion to adjourn.
Mr. DIBBLE. Does the gentleman now make the motion to adjourn?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman said he made it some time ago.
Mr. BUCHANAN. If I had so understood it I would have raised the point of order.
The SPEAKER. The Chair's opinion was that only one motion was made, and that was the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. It may have been made when the chair was temporarily occupied by another gentleman.
Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. DIBBLE I wish to know whether at the time the gentleman from Kentucky intervened with the question of privilege it is not true that the House was at that time voting on the question of consideration?
The SPEAKER. It was not. It was dividing on the motion that when the House adjourn it be to meet on Monday.
Mr. DIBBLE. I think a reference to the record will show that the Speaker had announced in the usual form, "Those who are in favor of considering the conference report will say ay."
The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. The question before the House was the motion that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on Monday.
Mr. WEAVER. Is it in order to withdraw the motion to adjourn?
The SPEAKER. It is.
Mr. WEAVER. I withdraw the motion and substitute a motion that the House now take a recess until 7.30 this evening.
Mr. DIBBLE. Pending that I press the consideration of the conference report.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks when the conference report is presented under the rules of the House, and the question of consideration is raised, that until the House enters upon the consideration it is like any other privileged matter and may be interrupted by a motion to adjourn, to take a recess, or to fix a time to which the House will adjourn. This morning, the Chair will repeat, the House had actually entered upon its consideration in pursuance of the rule, and had done so pending a motion to adjourn.
Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the gentleman from Iowa prevails, will the order in regard to Friday evening sessions for pension bills be the order of business for to-night?
The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes so. That has been the custom heretofore.
The motion of Mr. WEAVER was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1889.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I have never taken up any of the time of the House, and I ask permission to have this bill read to remove the political disabilities of General Henry B. Davidson. I refer to House bill No. 11751.
Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the request will be granted.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to objection.
The bill was read at length.
Mr. KILGORE. I will have to object.
Mr. BIGGS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that objection.
Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.
Mr. CHIPMAN. I move that the House resolve into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.
Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I wish to ask if, when the Speaker adjourns the House to-night, it will stand adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock, or until Monday at 12 o'clock?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.
The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 2.
Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.
The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. KILGORE and Mr. CHIPMAN.
The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 25, noes none.
Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will continue the count.
Mr. COOPER. It is manifest that there is no quorum present, and the gentleman who made the point notified the House that he was going to insist upon it; so we may as well adjourn.
Mr. GEAR. I move a call of the House.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will make their final report, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman to make his motion.
The tellers reported—ayes 29, noes none.
Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.
Mr. BIGGS. I move a call of the House.
The motion was agreed to; and the Clerk proceeded to call the roll.
Before the conclusion of the call of the House,
Mr. BIGGS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with further proceedings under the call. It is evident that no quorum is present.
Mr. MACDONALD and Mr. HOPKINS, of New York, objected.
Mr. GALLINGER. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. I ask unanimous consent to submit the motion.
Mr. WASHINGTON and Mr. KILGORE objected.
After the roll had been called the first time,
Mr. GEAR. I move that further proceedings be dispensed with.
The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 29, noes 11.
So the motion was agreed to.
Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask the House to consider the bill granting a pension to Rebecca H. Lisle. The committee passed a resolution making this request because this is regarded as an unusually meritorious case.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that there is a pending motion, and the call of the House being dispensed with, that is now the pending question.
Mr. DOCKERY. There is a motion pending to go into Committee of the Whole.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the call of the House was concluded, but the names of the absentees had not been called. The question recurs now upon the original motion.
Mr. MASON. The call had not been completed.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the call had been completed by the Clerk.
Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no. The second roll-call had not been taken.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is no second roll-call on a call of the House. The excuses of absentees are received on the second call.
Mr. MASON rose.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Illinois will suspend one moment the Chair will examine the rule bearing on the question. [After a pause.] The Chair will cause to be read clause 2 of Rule XV, governing a call of the House.
The Clerk read as follows:

In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk and the absentees noted. The doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may by order of a majority of those present be sent for and arrested wherever they may be found by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

Mr. GEAR. I move that the gentlemen who did not answer when their names were called be excused.
Mr. MASON. We were proceeding with a call of the House. The Chair had not announced the result of the call, and therefore the call had not been completed; but pending that, and during the call of the House, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with, and the question would recur upon the pending motion, which was to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in response to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that the call had been completed; but the further proceeding of excusing members or sending for absentees was dispensed with by the House. The question with the Chair is, whether that changes the status of the House as to the presence or absence of a quorum. The record will show who were present and who absent, and whether there was a quorum present.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make a suggestion in the line that the Speaker had not made any announcement of the result of the call. If on a call of the roll no quorum appears to be present, then the House can have the absentees called and sent for or not, as it thinks best; but the House itself in this instance dispensed with all further proceedings under the call, and we stand without a quorum, the names having been called. Now, sir, some members have chosen to obstruct all public legislation, and one member proposes to obstruct all legislation and stop the wheels of government. Now, I propose that no private legislation shall be effected while that is being done.

Mr. MASON. I understand the gentleman wishes to imitate the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER]. [Laughter.]

Mr. MATSON. As I understand, it is held by the Chair that the call has proceeded so far that the record shows there is no quorum present; and if so, I apprehend there is no proceeding with business until it does show the presence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will permit the Chair to state that that was the view the Chair took, and such a decision had been made. If the decision would bear a different construction the present occupant of the chair is anxious that business shall proceed if it can be done under the rules.

Mr. MATSON. The point is whether the record shows that a quorum is present.

Mr. MASON. The call had not been completed, but the second call of the roll was proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that he recognized two motions to dispense with the roll-call, but objection was made both times. When the call had been completed, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] moved to dispense with all further proceedings under the call. The question in the mind of the Chair is whether or not the roll-call had been completed so far as to show the absence of a quorum. In the absence of a quorum no business can be transacted, except to get a quorum or to adjourn.

Mr. MASON rose.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MASON. Before that question is put I only desire to call the attention of the Chair respectfully to the custom of the House respecting a roll-call. It has been the rule or it has been the custom for years, but certainly it has been during the first session of this Congress, to call the roll a second time. I understand the rules do not require it, but it has been the uniform practice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rules do not require a second call of the roll.

Mr. MASON. However, it has been the custom to call the roll a second time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think it has been the custom. It may have sometimes been done.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am clearly of the opinion that the Chair is correct, and that no further business can be done, the call having proceeded to the length it has, unless by unanimous consent. Of course, by unanimous consent we can dispense with all proceedings under the call; but as that seems to be refused, I hope the House will adopt the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. GEAR. I renew my motion, that all those gentlemen who did not respond on the roll-call be excused from appearance. I do that, Mr. Speaker, so that by unanimous consent we can go on and transact the business for which this session was called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is not in order to move to excuse absent members, because of the adoption of the former motion, that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, and the excuse of absent members is a proceeding under the call.

Mr. MACDONALD. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] interrupted the call of the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the clerk who made the call that the last name on the roll had been called and responded to before the motion was made.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move that the roll be called a second time for excuses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that is in order under this call, because all further proceedings under the call have been dispensed with.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to reconsider the vote by which all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The motion to reconsider was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa is not agreed to, and the officers will close the doors.

Mr. MASON. I move that all members who have not answered to their names on the first roll-call be excused from attendance, except the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], and that he be sent for. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. WHEELER. I think we had better let him stay away. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. Nobody seems to want him here, and on reflection I withdraw my motion. [Renewed laughter.]

The call of the House was resumed and concluded, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

During the second call,

Mr. SPOONER said: Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. ARNOLD, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask that my colleague, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, be excused, as he has been compelled to go to the train to meet a friend.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move that all the absentees be excused?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the usual and proper course is to call the names of the absentees.

Mr. BIGGS. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. FELTON, be excused. He is not well enough to be here to-night.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. My colleague, Mr. FORNEY, has not been well for some days, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. FISHER, be excused on account of indisposition.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. COGSWELL. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. HAYDEN, be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman has been granted leave of absence.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON, be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. HITT, be excused on account of indisposition.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. LANDES, be excused.

Objection was made.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I move that my colleague, Mr. LANDES, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I move that my colleague, Mr. LAWLER, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BIGGS. I move that my colleague, Mr. MCKENNA, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BIGGS. I move that my colleague, Mr. MORROW, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MILLS, be excused on account of the condition of his health.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I ask that my colleague, Mr. NUTTING, be excused on account of indisposition.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GROUT. I move that my colleague, Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BIGGS. I move that my colleague, Mr. THOMPSON, of California, be excused, as I know he is not very well.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. TRACEY, be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. WEAVER, be excused. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. On what ground?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose it is on account of sickness. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. MASON. I object.

Mr. GEAR. I move that my colleague, Mr. WEAVER, be excused.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, can that motion be amended?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not under the practice of the House.

The motion was rejected—ayes 6, noes 35.

Mr. BIGGS. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. VANDEVER, be excused.

Mr. MACDONALD. I desire to ask the gentleman [Mr. BIGGS] whether there are any more members from California that want to be excused? [Laughter.]

Mr. BIGGS. No more.

There being no objection, Mr. VANDEVER was excused.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. WILBER, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RICE. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. WILSON of Minnesota, be excused on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WADE, be excused on account of an important engagement.

Mr. COOPER. I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WADE, be excused.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 25, noes 12.

Mr. MASON. I offer the customary resolution that the absentees be sent for.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. MASON. Oh, yes.

Mr. REED. Has my colleague, Mr. MILLIKEN, been excused?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that he be excused on account of the condition of his health.

There being no objection, Mr. MILLIKEN was excused.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Indiana, Mr. BROWNE, be excused on account of ill health.

There being no objection, Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, was excused.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask that my colleague, Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, was excused.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MCCORMICK, be excused on account of important business.

There being no objection, Mr. MCCORMICK was excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are absent without leave of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is manifest that nothing can be done here to-night, and I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DOCKERY, it was agreed to.

So all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

And then, on motion of Mr. DOCKERY (at 8 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

Also, a bill (H. R. 12055) granting a pension to Mary D. Gray—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. M. A. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 12056) granting a pension to John Farrell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SENEY: A bill (H. R. 12057) granting a pension to George F. Orwick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12058) granting a pension to John E. Mock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O. B. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 12059) to authorize the construction of a bridge or bridges across the Mississippi River at La Crosse, Wis.—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Joint resolution (H. Res. 249) authorizing John C. Sanders administrator of B. Sillord, deceased, to present his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, joint resolution (H. Res. 250) authorizing Victoria, Ella, and Frank Wasson, of Tennessee, to present their claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Change in the reference of bills, etc., improperly referred, were made in the following cases, namely:

A bill (H. R. 3948) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edward A. Smith—from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 11850) for the relief of Edward P. Alsbury—from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 11660) for the relief of Martha E. Flesschert—from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. A. R. ANDERSON: Petition of Francis J. McCloud, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. C. L. ANDERSON: Petition of B. J. Stewart and others, of Newton County, Mississippi, in favor of pure food and lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CROUSE: Petition of D. Smith and others, of Wayne County, Ohio, in favor of pure food, pure lard, and pure drugs—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Petition of Lucy A. Russell, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUDD: Memorial of the Milwaukee Turnverein against the Senate Sunday-observance bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Petition of Mrs. E. Goodwin and others, for laws to prevent Sunday work—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Sunday School Board Methodist Episcopal Church, and other citizens of Albion, Mich., against Sunday work—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of New York State, for a harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I.—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. REED: Petition of J. M. McClain and others, of Ogden, Utah, against the admission of that Territory—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. RYAN: Resolutions of Cedarvale Post, No. 99, Grand Army of the Republic, of Kansas, for monuments upon the battle-fields—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HENRY SMITH: Remonstrance of the Turnverein of Milwaukee, Wis., against the Blair bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VANDEVER: Memorial of the Board of Trade of San Luis Obispo, Cal., for an appropriation for harbor improvement—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The following petitions against the passage of the international copyright bill were received, and severally referred to the Committee on Patents:

By Mr. BRYCE (by request): Of printers and others, of New York.

By Mr. CASWELL: Of the Journal Printing Company and employés, of Racine, Wis.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Of O. E. Bowman, of Montrose, Dak.

By Mr. J. D. TAYLOR: Of W. B. Hearne, of Cadiz, and of C. L. Athearn and others, of Bloomingdale, Ohio.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 12, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CERTIFICATES OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting certified copies of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President appointed by the States of South Carolina and Tennessee; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying certificates, to lie on the table.

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR OF VESSELS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 19, 1888, a report from the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair in regard to the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for the construction and repair of vessels and other purposes under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, etc.; which, on motion of Mr. CHANDLER, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of a large number of highly respectable citizens of Grand Isle County, in the State of Vermont, which is composed, with one small exception, entirely of islands lying near the Canadian border, praying that Congress will contribute to the maintenance of a bridge to the mainland as a proper exertion of the military power and for military purposes. I move, it being for that purpose presented, that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I also present a petition of a considerable number of respectable farmers of the town of Williamstown, Orange County, Vermont, praying that the industries of the county be protected, both in its manufactures and in its farm products, and so on. As the matter has been already reported, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I present what I suppose is a copy of a petition that has been presented in the House of Representatives, but which has been sent to me with a request that I present it in the Senate. It is a petition of citizens of Washington Territory, praying that in the admission of Territories as States Congress will permit women to vote for delegates to the constitutional convention and on the adoption of the constitution when a Territorial Legislature shall have authorized women to vote. Accompanying this copy is a proposed amendment to the bill pending, I think, in the Senate. I move that the petition and proposed amendment be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of the Jobbers and Manufacturers' Association of Sioux City, Iowa, praying for the passage of the pending bill providing for the opening of the Sioux reservation in Dakota to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Headquarters Commandery of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, of Des Moines, Iowa, praying for the publication of the naval records of the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COLQUITT presented resolutions adopted by the Savannah (Ga.) Board of Trade, resolutions adopted by the Savannah (Ga.) Cotton Exchange, and the proceedings of a citizens' meeting held in Savannah, Ga., urging that there may be favorable consideration by Congress of measures for the improvement of the Savannah River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FAULKNER presented the petition of Mrs. Henrietta B. Lee, of Shepherdstown, W. Va., praying that she be paid for the destruction of her house and furniture in July, 1864, by order of General David Hunter; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. QUAY presented resolutions adopted by the Grain and Flour Exchange and the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., in favor of the adoption of the decimal system as applied to weights and measures; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., in favor of the establishment and maintenance of a national bureau of health; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Vessel Owners and Captains' Association of Philadelphia, Pa., in favor of an increased appropriation for the maintenance of branch hydrographic offices; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., in favor of a tariff duty of 2½ cents per pound on tin-plate; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Elizabeth T. Pyle, widow of Joshua Pyle, late a private in Company K, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying that she be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY. I have here resolutions of St. Patrick's Total Abstinence Beneficial Society and other associations, remonstrating against the ratification of the extradition treaty with Great Britain, which I ask leave to present now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the resolutions should be presented in executive session.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to treat them as though presented in executive session, and in the mean time they can lie on the table. If that proceeding is irregular I shall withdraw the memorials.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They would be entered in the public Journal all the same. So they ought to be presented in executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the memorials had better be withheld and presented in executive session.

Mr. QUAY. Very well.

Mr. HISCOCK presented a petition of farmers of Orleans County, New York, praying for certain legislation for the protection of agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BERRY. I present the petition of E. P. Watson, of Arkansas, praying for an amendment to the Constitution providing for uniform laws in regard to marriage and divorce, and also in regard to the descent of real estate.

Mr. Watson is a prominent attorney in my State, the petition is very short, less than a page, and if there be no objection, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the petition which he has just presented may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection to the printing of the petition in the RECORD?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a pity to print such things in the RECORD. I presented a petition just now that I should have been glad to have had printed in the RECORD. If the Senator thinks it important I do not object to its being printed as a document, but it is very expensive to print such matters in the RECORD, and it should not be done unless they are of very great importance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the petition be printed as a document?

Mr. BERRY. Very well; let it be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had directed him to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLARDY, Mr. RAYNER, and Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania managers at the conference on the part of the House.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3807) to provide for the organization of regimental bands for the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3808) to amend the incorporation laws in force in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NANCY POLOCK.

Mr. PADDOCK. If there is no further morning business, I should like to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3762) granting a pension to Nancy Polock.

I desire to state that this bill passed both Houses of Congress at the last session, passing the House of Representatives in the last days of the session. It went to the President with the recommendation of the Pension Office that it be approved, but it was not approved, as the report comes to me from the Pension Office, because of want of time for its consideration by the President.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the circumstances I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, although I shall feel obliged to call up the tariff bill immediately after it is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Polock, widow of W. A. Polock, late of Company C, First Nebraska Volunteers.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute reported from the Committee on Finance will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2491. All persons are prohibited from importing into the United States, from any foreign country, any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, drawing, or other representation, figure, or image on or of paper or other material, or any cast, instrument, or other article of an immoral nature, or any drug or medicine, or any article whatever, for the prevention of conception, or for causing unlawful abortion. No invoice or package whatever, or any part of one, in which any such articles are contained shall be admitted to entry; and all invoices and packages whereof any such articles shall compose a part are liable to be proceeded against, seized, and forfeited by due course of law. All such prohibited articles in the course of importation shall be detained by the officer of customs, and proceedings taken against the same as prescribed in the following section: Provided, That the drugs hereinbefore mentioned, when imported in bulk and not put up for any of the purposes hereinbefore specified, are excepted from the operation of this section.

SEC. 2492. Whoever, being an officer, agent, or employé of the Government of the United States, shall knowingly aid or abet any person engaged in any violation of any of the provisions of law prohibiting importing, advertising, dealing in, exhibiting, or sending or receiving by mail obscene or indecent publications or representations, or means for preventing conception or procuring abortion, or other articles of indecent or immoral use or tendency, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for every offense be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 2493. Any judge of any district or circuit court of the United States, within the proper district, before whom complaint in writing of any violation of the preceding sections is made, to the satisfaction of such judge, and founded on knowledge or belief, and if upon belief, setting forth the grounds of such belief, and supported by oath or affirmation of the complainant, may issue, conformably to the Constitution, a warrant directed to the marshal, or any deputy marshal, in the proper district, directing him to search for, seize, and take possession of any such article or thing hereinbefore mentioned, and to make due and immediate return thereof to the end that the same may be condemned and destroyed by proceedings, which shall be conducted in the same manner as other proceedings in the case of municipal seizure, and with the same right of appeal or writ of error.

SEC. 2494. The importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from any foreign country into the United States is prohibited: Provided, That the operation of this section shall be suspended as to any foreign country or countries, or any parts of such country or countries, whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall officially determine, and give public notice thereof, that such importation will not tend to the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases among the cattle of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered, and it shall be his duty, to make all necessary orders and regulations to carry this law into effect, or to suspend the same as therein provided, and to send copies thereof to the proper officers in the United States, and to such officers or agents of the United States in foreign countries as he shall judge necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. In section 2494, line 2528, I move to strike out "law" and insert "section;" so as to read:

To make all necessary orders and regulations to carry this section into effect.

This is copied from the existing statute. The word "law" is inserted there, but I think it is better to say here "this section" rather than "this law." So I move the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2495. Any person convicted of a willful violation of any of the provisions of the preceding section shall be fined not exceeding $500, or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2496. No watches, watch-cases, watch-movements, or parts of watch-movements, or any other articles of foreign manufacture, which shall copy or simulate the name or trade-mark of any domestic manufacture or manufacturer, shall be admitted to entry at the custom-house of the United States, unless such domestic manufacturer is the importer of the same. And in order to aid the officers of the customs in enforcing this prohibition any domestic manufacturer who has adopted trade-marks may require his name and residence and a description of his trade-marks to be recorded in books which shall be kept for that purpose in the Department of the Treasury, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and may furnish to the Department fac similes of such trade-marks; and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause one or more copies of the same to be transmitted to each collector or other proper officer of the customs.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to lines 2537 and 2538 in section 2496:

Or any other article of foreign manufacture which shall copy or simulate, etc.

Mr. PLATT. I think that has been changed from the present law; that it is an addition.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not in the present law. I submit to the Senator from Connecticut, with whom I have had some conversation respecting this provision, that that clause ought to be stricken out. I think it is provided for elsewhere.

Mr. PLATT. I should say also line 2541. Is that in the present law?

Mr. ALLISON. "Unless such domestic manufacturer is the importer of the same." Yes, sir; that is in the present law.

Mr. PLATT. I do not ask to make any change in the present law.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that the provision to guard our domestic manufactures as to the simulation or imitation of articles could as well be applied to all articles; it is so manifestly proper. It was originally framed to meet a specific case in regard to watches, watch-cases, and watch-movements, where foreigners undertook to simulate American manufactures, but I do not see why that same principle should not be extended to all articles.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I made a mistake. The words "or any other articles of foreign manufacture" are in the present law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought they ought to be in, at any rate.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask to make no change. I had the wrong section in my mind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa does not desire to move an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2497. No goods, wares, or merchandise, unless in cases provided for by treaty, shall be imported into the United States from any foreign port or place, except in vessels of the United States, or in such foreign vessels as truly and wholly belong to the citizens or subjects of that country of which the goods are the growth, production, or manufacture; or from which such goods, wares, or merchandise can only be, or most usually are, first shipped for transportation. All goods, wares, or merchandise imported contrary to this section, and the vessel wherein the same shall be imported, together with her cargo, tackle, apparel, and furniture, shall be forfeited to the United States; and such goods, wares, or merchandise, ship, or vessel, and cargo shall be liable to be seized, prosecuted, and condemned, in like manner, and under the same regulations, restrictions, and provisions as have been heretofore established for the recovery, collection, distribution, and remission of forfeitures to the United States by the several revenue laws.

SEC. 2498. The preceding section shall not apply to vessels, or goods, wares, or merchandise imported in vessels of a foreign nation which does not maintain a similar regulation against vessels of the United States.

SEC. 2499. Each and every imported article, not enumerated in this act, which is similar, either in material, quality, texture, or the use to which it may be applied, to any article enumerated in this act as chargeable with duty, shall pay the same rate of duty which is levied on the enumerated article which it most resembles in any of the particulars before mentioned; and if any non-enumerated article equally resembles two or more enumerated articles on which different rates of duty are chargeable, there shall be levied on such non-enumerated article the same rate of duty as is chargeable on the article which it resembles paying the highest rate of duty; and on articles not enumerated, manufactured of two or more materials, the duty shall be assessed at the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value; and the words "component material of chief value," wherever used in this act, shall be held to mean that component material which shall exceed in value any other single component material of the article; and the value of each component material shall be determined by the ascertained value of such material in its condition as found in the article. If two or more rates of duty shall be applicable to any imported article, it shall pay duty at the highest of such rates.

SEC. 2500. Upon the reimportation of articles once exported, of the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States, upon which no internal tax has been assessed or paid, or upon which such tax has been paid and refunded by allowance or drawback, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty equal to the tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws upon such articles.

Mr. VANCE. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to section 2500:

The reimportation of articles once exported, of the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States, upon which no internal tax has been assessed or paid.

Would that include any article which never had been subject to an internal tax?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it would. This is the existing law. It is an exact copy of the law as it now stands.

Mr. VANCE. Any article manufactured in this country, or the growth of this country, upon which no internal or other tax had ever been assessed, going abroad and being reimported, shall pay a duty. Is that the effect of this section?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; it shall pay a duty equal to the tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws upon such article.

Mr. VANCE. Then if there had never been any tax imposed the article could be reimported without duty, according to the meaning of the section?

Mr. ALLISON. If an internal-revenue duty is imposed on a similar article——

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from North Carolina asks a question which is very easily answered, as to whether, when there is no internal-revenue tax on an article and it is brought back, it shall be admitted free. All articles of domestic production sent abroad and reimported are admitted free of duty under this general provision.

Mr. VANCE. Take a case of shoes, for instance.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, a thousand things, carboys, bags, packages, and things of that kind.

Mr. VANCE. They are specially enumerated in another portion of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. This provision covers everything.

Mr. VANCE. Any manufacture here which is not subject to any duty, when it is exported can be reimported without any additional duty?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, any article from a ship down to a box.

Mr. VANCE. If that is the explanation, that is sufficient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will be resumed.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment at this time to be considered hereafter. I ask leave to present it with a view of having it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be received, lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

SEC. —. All laws and parts of laws which exempt from the payment of duties any articles of commerce upon which duties are imposed in this act when in transit through the United States to or from the Dominion of Canada, or any province thereof, are hereby declared to be inoperative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2501. A discriminating duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem in addition to the duties imposed by law shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, or merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States; but this discriminating duty shall not apply to goods, wares, and merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States, entitled, by treaty or any act of Congress, to be entered in the ports of the United States on payment of the same duties as shall then be paid on goods, wares, and merchandise imported in vessels of the United States.

SEC. 2504. Whenever any vessel laden with merchandise in whole or in part subject to duty has been sunk in any river, harbor, bay, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and within its limits, for the period of two years, and is abandoned by the owner thereof, any person who may raise such vessel shall be permitted to bring any merchandise recovered therefrom into the port nearest to the place where such vessel was so raised free from the payment of any duty thereupon, and without being obliged to enter the same at the custom-house; but under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 2505. The produce of the forests of the State of Maine upon the St. John River and its tributaries, owned by American citizens, and sawed or hewed in the province of New Brunswick by American citizens, the same being unmanufactured in whole or in part, which is now admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty, shall continue to be so admitted, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time prescribe.

Mr. VEST. The provision of section 2505 is in the existing law, I believe, but I never could see the justice of it in view of the contention made by our friends upon the other side that the duty should not be taken off lumber at all. In the report made by the majority of the Finance Committee the argument is advanced very strenuously that taking the duty off lumber would not reduce the cost to the American consumer, and it is further stated that past experience shows us that if the import duty is ever taken off here an export duty is immediately imposed by Canada, which increases the price just as much upon imported lumber into the United States as if we had not taken off the duty.

Whilst we have a general law imposing a tax upon imported lumber, if the citizens of Maine go across the line and buy timber lands in a foreign country, then a special exemption is put in this bill in their favor. Why can not Canada put an export duty on this timber cut upon these lands owned by American citizens? Why does not the argument of the majority of the Finance Committee apply? The interests of the consumer seem to be ignored entirely, and a special favor is granted to a particular locality. The law ought to be general and without exception.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out section 2505.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 2505, in the following words:

SEC. 2505. The produce of the forests of the State of Maine upon the St. John River and its tributaries, owned by American citizens, and sawed or hewed in the province of New Brunswick by American citizens, the same being unmanufactured in whole or in part, which is now admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty, shall continue to be so admitted under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time prescribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. REAGAN. It seems to me that the section ought to be stricken out. Such legislation should not have a place in this bill, as it proposes to confer special privileges on somebody. I hope the section will be stricken out.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is the law in regard to everything as I understand it. These are logs in the State of Maine carried across the river into New Brunswick, and there sawed and brought back.

Mr. HALE. It is a necessity of nature that the logs cut upon Maine lands must be floated down the St. John River, because that is the only way they can be got out. This, as the Senator from Ohio says, has been the law of the land for years and years, and it would be manifestly unjust to repeal it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the law of the land as to everything else besides. This lumber, because it is an American production, may be carried across the ocean and brought back again and readmitted without any duty. You can not levy a duty on an article which is taken from our country to foreign countries and brought back again. The section preceding has stood upon the statute-book time out of mind, and provides for that very thing. When an article of American production and growth is carried abroad and brought back, as a matter of course it is admitted free of duty. This is on the same principle.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator from Ohio, if the general provision of law, which he has stated correctly, applies to this article, why is this special provision put in here?

Mr. SHERMAN. I asked the Senator from Maine about that, and he stated the reason why. It is because they saw the lumber on the other side. They do contribute, therefore, some foreign labor to it, but that is a matter of absolute necessity. That is the only difference. Otherwise it would come under the general provision.

Mr. HALE. I do not think, if the Senator from Missouri will look a little into it, that he will insist on his amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that three things are necessary: First, that the lumber must be the produce of the forests of Maine; second, that it must be owned by American citizens; and third, that the labor upon it must have been done by American citizens. The ownership and all of the labor must have been by American citizens before this section would be operative.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to do any injustice. I want to make the law of the land equal and just in its operation as to all sections. I never understood this matter. I recollect in 1883 this question was brought up by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] now absent.

I never understood the explanation that was given of it then. The impression has always been made on my mind that this lumber was taken over into Canada by citizens of Maine in order to avail themselves of the cheaper labor there.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; that is not true. It goes that way by the natural course; there is no other way it could go. It is cut on the tributaries of the St. John, and, as the Senator knows, all its upper waters lie in the State of Maine.

Mr. VEST. I understand that.

Mr. HALE. If it did not go down the river it never would be got out. The only way that American citizens can get the benefit of this, which is our lumber, is by this act, that was passed a great many years ago on full examination, and I have not heard that it ever raised a question in Congress since that time.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to say that on account of any natural obstacle this lumber can not be sawed or hewed in the State of Maine?

Mr. HALE. Yes; it is taken down the St. John. As the Senator knows, that river runs quite a long distance from the border, and the logs can not be brought over and manufactured here.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Rhode Island says this labor must be done by American citizens.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 2632 it is provided that it shall be "sawed or hewed in the province of New Brunswick by American citizens."

Mr. VEST. I understand. I have the section right before me. It says that the section shall apply to lumber "sawed or hewed in the province of New Brunswick by American citizens," but whether that is to be actually done by American labor or the labor paid for by American citizens may be a question of construction. I may build a house, and whilst I do not do the work upon it I pay for the labor, and I am said to be the person who builds the house. So this provision struck me, when I examined it last night, to be simply to the effect that an American citizen may cut his lumber in the State of Maine, upon the St. John River, float it down into Canada, have the work done there by the Canadians—the cheap labor that we hear so much about—and then bring it over into this country and sell it free of duty to American citizens.

Mr. HALE. They can not get the lumber in unless it is duly certified—that is a matter of administration—that the terms of the law have been complied with; that it is an American product, and that it was manufactured by American citizens. The distance is such that it can only be transported after it is sawed. Perhaps the Senator had the impression that this river is a border river, and that the lumber is manufactured on the other side when this side of the river is American. That is not the case.

Mr. VEST. No; I understand that the river runs in Canada.

Mr. HALE. The St. John River runs miles and miles inside of the boundary on the British side.

Mr. VEST. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine one question, because I have not been to the Treasury Department and I do not know the construction put upon this provision by the officials there. Does he understand when it is provided that this timber shall be sawed or hewed by American citizens that the labor is actually to be performed by Americans?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. VEST. Would not the American owning this land who went there and hired Canadian labor and had this lumber cut come under this provision?

Mr. HALE. He never could get the lumber in free under those circumstances, because he could not certify to the law having been complied with.

Mr. VEST. It is a question about which, it seems to me under the terms of the law, there would be a great deal of doubt, with a large preponderance in favor of the construction that by paying for the labor done by Canadians the American owning the land would comply with the law.

Mr. HALE. I suppose perhaps the Senator does not understand that the lumbermen there upon our side own the mills and run them on the St. John River just as if they were upon one of our own streams, because the law obliges them to do that. They do not even hire the mills, but own the mills and the whole plant.

Mr. VEST. We have heard so much about protecting American labor that when we go into a foreign country in order to have labor done I should like to ascertain what are the particulars about it.

Mr. HALE. The object of the law is precisely to maintain American labor.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the law was passed just after the termination of the reciprocity treaty in 1866.

Mr. MORGAN. It was intended to carry out Article XXXI of that treaty.

Mr. ALLISON. It is to enable people who own lumber in the upper region of Maine and have no other means of transportation except the St. John to bring it down.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the article of the treaty before me to which the Senator refers.

Mr. VEST. I wish the Senator from Alabama would read it, because I should like to understand this subject.

Mr. MORGAN. Article XXXI of the treaty of Washington provided that—

The Government of Her Britannic Majesty further engages to urge upon the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada and the Legislature of New Brunswick that no export duty, or other duty, shall be levied on lumber or timber of any kind cut on that portion of the American territory in the State of Maine watered by the river St. John and its tributaries, and floated down that river to the sea, when the same is shipped to the United States from the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. VEST. That prohibits an export duty.

Mr. MORGAN. It prohibits a duty of any kind. It was for the purpose, I understand, of carrying that provision of the treaty of Washington into effect that this statute was originally enacted.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there any question pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Iowa to retain the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Missouri insist upon his amendment?

Mr. VEST. I do not know whether that clause of the treaty is in force or not. We have very strong authorities on both sides as to that clause of the treaty of Washington. I confess I do not understand the question. I shall not insist on my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn, and the reading of the substitute will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2506. The produce of the forests of the State of Maine upon the St. Croix River and its tributaries, owned by American citizens, and sawed in the province of New Brunswick by American citizens, the same being unmanufactured in whole or in part, and having paid the same taxes as other American lumber on that river, shall be admitted into ports of the United States free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time prescribe.

SEC. 2507. Machinery for repair may be imported into the United States without payment of duty, under bond, to be given in double the appraised value thereof, to be withdrawn and exported after said machinery shall have been repaired; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to protect the revenue against fraud, and secure the identity and character of all such importations when again withdrawn and exported, restricting and limiting the export and withdrawal to the same port of entry where imported, and also limiting all bonds to a period of time of not more than six months from the date of the importation.

SEC. 2508. That the importation of all articles of foreign manufacture, or of boxes or packages containing the same, when stamped, marked, branded, or labeled to represent that such articles were manufactured in the United States, is hereby prohibited, and all such articles shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the committee desire to present some modification to section 2508 later on, and I ask that it may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2509. That the importation of opium, containing less than 9 per cent. of morphia, and of opium prepared for smoking be, and the same is hereby, prohibited; and all such opium shall, upon importation, be seized and proceeded against for forfeiture and condemnation. All opium containing less than 9 per cent. of morphia, and all opium prepared for smoking, wherever found in the United States, shall be subject to seizure, and shall be condemned and destroyed unless the claimant thereto shall show to the satisfaction of the court that the same was lawfully imported or was prepared from opium lawfully imported: Provided, That officers of the United States, by whom opium may be seized under the provisions of this section, and persons giving information leading to such seizure, shall receive such compensation, upon the condemnation of the opium so seized, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, to be paid from the appropriation for the prevention and detection of frauds upon the customs revenue. The whole amount of such compensation shall not, however, exceed, in any case, one-half of the appraised value of the opium seized and condemned: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe suitable regulations for the enforcement of this section.

SEC. 2510. All lumber, timber, hemp, manilla, wire rope, and iron and steel rods, bars, spikes, nails, plates, angles, bars, and bolts, and copper and composition metal which may be necessary for the construction and equipment of vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, after the passage of this act, may be imported in bond, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purpose, no duties shall be paid thereon. But vessels receiving the benefit of this section shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States more than two months in any one year, except upon the payment to the United States of the duties on which a rebate is herein allowed: Provided, That vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. The word "bars" in line 2691 should be "beams;" the word "bars" also appears in line 2690 correctly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2691 it is proposed to strike out the word "bars" and insert "beams."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read follows:

SEC. 2511. All articles of foreign production needed for the repair of American vessels engaged exclusively in foreign trade may be withdrawn from bonded warehouses free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 2512. That no duty shall be levied or collected on the importation of peltries brought into the territories of the United States by Indians, nor on the proper goods and effects, of whatever nature, of Indians passing or repassing the boundary line aforesaid, unless the same be goods in bales or other large packages unusual among Indians, which shall not be considered as goods belonging to Indians, nor be entitled to the exemption from duty aforesaid.

SEC. 2513. There shall be levied, collected, and paid on the importation of all raw or unmanufactured articles, not enumerated or provided for in this title, a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem; and all articles manufactured, in whole or in part, not enumerated or provided for in this title, a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem.

COLLECTION OF DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

SEC. 13. All merchandise imported into the United States shall, for the purpose of this act, be deemed and held to be the property of the person to whom the merchandise may be consigned; but the holder of any bill of lading consigned to order and properly indorsed shall be deemed the consignee thereof; and in case of the abandonment of any merchandise to the underwriters the latter may be recognized as the consignee.

SEC. 14. That all invoices of imported merchandise shall be made out in the currency of the place or country from whence the importations shall be made, or if purchased, in the currency actually paid therefor, shall contain a correct description of such merchandise, and shall be made in triplicate and signed by the person owning or shipping the same, if the merchandise has been actually purchased, or by the manufacturer or owner thereof, if the same has been procured otherwise than by purchase, or by the duly authorized agent of such purchaser, manufacturer, or owner.

SEC. 15. That all such invoices shall, at or before the shipment of the merchandise, be produced to the consul, vice-consul, or commercial agent of the United States of the consular district from which the merchandise is exported to the United States, and shall have indorsed thereon, when so produced, a declaration signed by the purchaser, manufacturer, owner, or agent, setting forth that the invoice is in all respects correct and true, and was made at the place from which the merchandise is to be exported to the United States; that it contains, if the merchandise was obtained by purchase, a true and full statement of the time when, the place where, the person from whom same was purchased, and the actual cost thereof and of all charges thereon; and that no discounts, bounties, or drawbacks are contained in the invoice but such as have been actually allowed thereon; and when obtained in any other manner than by purchase, the actual market value or wholesale price thereof at the time of exportation to the United States in the principal markets of the country from whence exported; that such actual market value is the price at which the merchandise described in the invoice is freely offered for sale to all purchasers in said markets, and that it is the price which the manufacturer or owner making the declaration would have received, and was willing to receive, for such merchandise sold in the ordinary course of trade, and if subject to specific duty the actual quantity thereof; and that no different invoice of the merchandise mentioned in the invoice so produced, has been or will be furnished to any one. If the merchandise was actually purchased, the declaration shall also contain a statement that the currency in which said invoice is made out is that which was actually paid for the merchandise by the purchaser.

SEC. 16. That, except in case of personal effects accompanying the passenger, no importation of any merchandise exceeding $100 in dutiable value shall be admitted to entry without the production of a duly-certified invoice thereof as required by law, or of an affidavit made by the owner, importer, or consignee, before the collector or his deputy, showing why it is impracticable to produce such invoice; and no entry shall be made in the absence of a certified invoice, upon affidavit as aforesaid, unless such affidavit be accompanied by a statement in the form of an invoice or otherwise, showing the actual cost of such merchandise, if purchased, or if obtained otherwise than by purchase the actual market value or wholesale price thereof at the time of exportation to the United States in the principal markets of the country from which the same has been imported; which statement shall be verified by the oath of the owner, importer, consignee, or agent desiring to make entry of the merchandise, to be administered by the collector or his deputy, and it shall be lawful for the collector or his deputy to examine the deponent under oath touching the sources of his knowledge, information, or belief in the premises, and to require him to produce any letter, paper, or statement of account in his possession or under his control, which may assist the officers of customs in ascertaining the actual value of the importation or any part thereof; and in default of such production when so requested such owner, importer, consignee, or agent shall be thereafter debarred from producing any such letter, paper, or statement for the purpose of avoiding any additional duty, penalty, or forfeiture incurred under this act, unless he shall show to the satisfaction of the court or the officers of the customs, as the case may be, that it was not in his power to produce the same when so demanded; and no merchandise shall be admitted to entry under the provisions of this section unless the collector shall be satisfied that the failure to produce a duly-certified invoice is due to causes beyond the control of the owner, consignee, or agent thereof.

SEC. 17. That whenever merchandise imported into the United States is entered by invoice, one of the following declarations, according to the nature of the case, shall be filed with the collector of the port, at the time of entry, by the owner, importer, consignee, or agent; which declaration so filed shall be duly signed by the owner, importer, consignee, or agent, before the collector, or before a notary public or other officer duly authorized by law to administer oaths and take acknowledgments, who may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to receive such declarations and to certify to the identity of the persons making them; and every officer so designated shall file with the collector of the port a copy of his official signature and seal: Provided, That if any of the invoices or bills of lading of any merchandise imported in any one vessel, which should otherwise be embraced in said entry, have not been received at the date of the entry, the declaration may state the fact, and thereupon such merchandise of which the invoices or bills of lading are not produced shall not be included in such entry, but may be entered subsequently.

DECLARATION OF CONSIGNEE, IMPORTER, OR AGENT.

I, ——————, do solemnly and truly declare that the invoice and bill of lading now presented by me to the collector of ——— are the true and only invoice and bill of lading by me received of all the goods, wares, and merchandise imported in the ———, whereof ——————— is master, from ———, for account of any person whomsoever for whom I am authorized to enter the same; that the said invoice and bill of lading are in the state in which they were actually received by me, and that I do not know or believe in the extstence of any other invoice or bill of lading of the said goods, wares, and merchandise; that the entry now delivered to the collector contains a just and true account of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, according to the said invoice and bill of lading; that nothing has been, on my part, nor to my knowledge on the part of any other person, concealed or suppressed, whereby the United States may be defrauded of any part of the duty lawfully due on the said goods, wares, and merchandise; that the said invoice and the declaration therein are in all respects true, and were made by the person by whom the same purports to have been made; and that if at any time hereafter I discover any error in the said invoice, or in the account now rendered of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, or receive any other invoice of the same, I will immediately make the same known to the collector of this district. And I do further solemnly and truly declare that to the best of my knowledge and belief [insert the name and residence of the owner or owners] is [or are] the owner [or owners] of the goods, wares, and merchandise mentioned in the annexed entry; that the invoice now produced by me exhibits the actual cost [if purchased] or the actual market value or wholesale price [if otherwise obtained] at the time of exportation to the United States in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing said goods, wares, and merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, and no other or different discount, bounty, or drawback but such as has been actually allowed on the same.

DECLARATION OF OWNER IN CASES WHERE MERCHANDISE HAS BEEN ACTUALLY PURCHASED.

I, ——— ———, do solemnly and truly declare that the entry now delivered by me to the collector of ——— contains a just and true account of all the goods, wares, and merchandise imported by or consigned to me in the ———, whereof ——— ——— is master, from ———; that the invoice and entry which I now produce contain a just and faithful account of the actual cost of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing said goods, wares, and merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, and no other discount, drawback, or bounty but such as has been actually allowed on the same; that I do not know nor believe in the existence of any invoice or bill of lading other than those now produced by me, and that they are in the state in which I actually received them. And I further solemnly and truly declare that I have not in the said entry or invoice concealed or suppressed anything whereby the United States may be defrauded of any part of the duty lawfully due on the said goods, wares, and merchandise; that the said invoice and the declaration thereon are in all respects true, and were made by the person by whom the same purports to have been made; and that if at any time hereafter I discover any error in the said invoice or in the account now produced of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, or receive any other invoice of the same, I will immediately make the same known to the collector of this district.

DECLARATION OF MANUFACTURER OR OWNER IN CASES WHERE MERCHANDISE HAS NOT BEEN ACTUALLY PURCHASED.

I, ——— ———, do solemnly and truly declare that the entry now delivered by me to the collector of ——— contains a just and true account of all the goods, wares, and merchandise imported by or consigned to me in the ———, whereof ——— ——— is master, from ———; that the said goods, wares, and merchandise were not actually bought by me, or by my agent, in the ordinary mode of bargain and sale, but that nevertheless the invoice which I now produce contains a just and faithful valuation of the same, at their actual market value or wholesale price, at the time of exportation to the United States in the principal markets of the country from whence imported for my account [or for account of myself or partners]; that the said invoice contains also a just and faithful account of all the cost of finishing said goods, wares, and merchandise to their present condition, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and all other costs and charges incident to placing said goods, wares, and merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, and no other discount, drawback, or bounty but such as has been actually allowed on the said goods, wares, and merchandise; that the said invoice and the declaration thereon are in all respects true, and were made by the person by whom the same purports to have been made; that I do not know nor believe in the existence of any invoice or bill of lading other than those now produced by me, and that they are in the state in which I actually received them. And I do further solemnly and truly declare that I have not in the said entry or invoice concealed or suppressed anything whereby the United States may be defrauded of any part of the duty lawfully due on the said goods, wares, and merchandise; and that if at any time hereafter I discover any error in the said invoice, or in the account now produced of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, or receive any other invoice of the same, I will immediately make the same known to the collector of this district.

SEC. 18. That any person who shall knowingly make any false or untrue statement in the declarations provided for in the preceding section, or shall aid or procure the making of any such false statement as to any matter material thereto, shall on conviction thereof be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to relieve imported merchandise from forfeiture for any cause elsewhere provided by law.

SEC. 19. That the owner, consignee, or agent of any imported merchandise which has been actually purchased may, at the time when he shall make and verify his written entry of such merchandise, but not afterwards, make such addition in the entry to the cost or value given in the invoice, or pro forma invoice, or statement in form of an invoice, which he shall produce with his entry, as in his opinion may raise the same to the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise at the time of exportation to the United States, in the principal markets of the country from which the same has been imported; but no such addition shall be made upon entry to the invoice value of any imported merchandise obtained otherwise than by actual purchase; and the collector within whose district any merchandise may be imported or entered, whether the same has been actually purchased or procured otherwise than by purchase, shall cause the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise to be appraised; and if the appraised value of any article of imported merchandise shall exceed by more than 5 per cent., and not more than 20 per cent., the value declared in the entry, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed by law on such merchandise, a further sum equal to 2 per cent. of the total appraised value for each 1 per cent. of the increased valuation as ascertained by the appraiser in excess of 5 per cent. above the entered value; and the additional duties shall only apply to the particular article or articles in each invoice which are undervalued; and if such appraised value shall exceed the value declared in the entry more than 20 per cent., such entry shall be held to be presumptively fraudulent, and the collector of customs shall seize such merchandise and proceed as in cases of forfeiture for violations of the customs laws; and in any legal proceedings which may result from such seizure the fact of such undervaluation shall be presumptive evidence of fraud, and the burden of proof shall be on the claimant to rebut the same, and forfeiture shall be adjudged unless he shall rebut said presumption of fraudulent intent by sufficient evidence: Provided, That the forfeitures provided for in this section shall apply to the whole of the merchandise or the value thereof in the case or package containing the particular article or articles in each invoice which are undervalued: And provided further, That all additional duties, penalties, or forfeitures applicable to merchandise entered by a duly certified invoice shall be alike applicable to goods entered by a pro forma invoice or statement in form of an invoice. The duty shall not, however, be assessed upon an amount less than the invoice or entered value.

Mr. VANCE. In line 20 of section 19, page 277, I move to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "ten;" so as to read:

And if the appraised value of any article of imported merchandise shall exceed by more than 10 per cent., etc.

And for this reason: The section provides for a forfeiture and a penalty in the case of an undervaluation of goods. It also provides that if the appraiser shall be of opinion that the invoice is not correct, he shall proceed to appraise the goods, and if his appraisal places a value on the goods 5 per cent. higher than the invoice or the sworn declaration of the importer, then there is to be an additional duty of 2 per cent. for every 1 per cent. of the duty imposed upon the goods, provided that the difference between the appraiser's estimate and the invoice does not reach 20 per cent. If that difference amounts to so much as 20 per cent., then there is to be a forfeiture of the goods absolutely as for a fraud upon the revenue. The margin between the importer's sworn declaration as to his importation and the opinion of the appraisers is only 5 per cent., which I think is too narrow a margin upon which to base so great a forfeiture as the doubling of the duty.

I think it is erring upon the side of the protection of fraud upon the revenue, and that when an importer of good character produces his invoice of purchase and swears to it, and risks his own reputation upon the correctness of it, the mere opinion of the appraiser that the goods are worth 5 per cent. more is too slight a pretext or excuse upon which to base the penalties that are imposed in this section upon the importer.

For that reason I move to raise that margin of difference between the importer's invoice and the appraiser's opinion to 10 per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 207, section 19, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

And if the appraised value of any article of imported merchandise shall exceed by more than 5 per cent., and not more than 20 per cent., the value declared in the entry, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed by law on such merchandise, a further sum equal to 2 per cent. of the total appraised value for each 1 per cent. of the increased valuation as ascertained by the appraiser in excess of 10 per cent. above the entered value.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there will be any difficulty in carrying out this provision. Honest importers will have no trouble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That when merchandise entered for customs duty has been consigned for sale by or on account of the manufacturer thereof, to a person, agent, partner, or consignee in the United States, such person, agent, partner, or consignee shall, at the time of the entry of such merchandise, present to the collector of customs at the port where such entry is made, as a part of such entry, and in addition to the certified invoice or statement in the form of an invoice required by law, a statement signed by such manufacturer, declaring the cost of production of such merchandise, such cost to include all the elements of cost as stated in section 10 of this act. When merchandise entered for customs duty has been consigned for sale by or on account of a person other than the manufacturer of such merchandise, to a person, agent, partner, or consignee in the United States, such person, agent, partner, or consignee shall at the time of the entry of such merchandise present to the collector of customs at the port where such entry is made, as a part of such entry, a statement signed by the consignor thereof, declaring that the merchandise was actually purchased by him or for his account, and showing the time when, the place where, and from whom he purchased the merchandise, and in detail the price he paid for the same: Provided, That the statements required by this section shall be made in triplicate, and shall bear the attestation of the consular officer of the United States resident within the consular district wherein the merchandise was manufactured, if consigned by the manufacturer or for his account, or from whence it was imported when consigned by a person other than the manufacturer, one copy thereof to be delivered to the person making the statement, one copy to be transmitted with the triplicate invoice of the merchandise to the collector of the port in the United States to which the merchandise is consigned, and the remaining copy to be filed in the consulate.

SEC. 21. That if any owner, importer, consignee, agent, or other person shall make or attempt to make any entry of imported merchandise by means of any fraudulent or false invoice, affidavit, letter, paper, or by means of any false statement, written or verbal, or by means of any false or fraudulent practice or appliance whatsoever, or shall be guilty of any willful act or omission by means whereof the United States shall be deprived of the lawful duties, or any portion thereof, accruing upon the merchandise, or any portion thereof, embraced or referred to in such invoice, affidavit, letter, paper, or statement, or affected by such act or omission, such merchandise, or the value thereof, to be recovered from the person making the entry, shall be forfeited, which forfeiture shall only apply to the whole of the merchandise or the value thereof in the case or package containing the particular article or articles of merchandise to which such fraud or false paper or statement relates; and such person shall, upon conviction, be fined for each offense a sum not exceeding $5,000, or be imprisoned for a time not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 22. That it shall be the duty of the appraisers of the United States, and every of them, and every person who shall act as such appraiser, or of the collector and naval officer, as the case may be, by all reasonable ways and means in his or their power, to ascertain, estimate, and appraise (any invoice or affidavit thereto or statement of cost, or of cost of production to the contrary notwithstanding) the actual market value and wholesale price of the merchandise at the time of exportation to the United States, in the principal markets of the country whence the same has been imported, and the number of yards, parcels, or quantities and actual market value or wholesale price of every of them, as the case may require.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 210, section 22, line 2, before the word "every" where it occurs the second time, I move to insert "of;" so as to read: "and of every person who shall act," etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2, of section 22, on page 210, before the word "every" where it occurs the second time, between the words "and" and "every," it is proposed to insert "of;" so as to read:

And of every person who shall act as such appraiser, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 23. That when the actual market value, as herein defined, of any article of imported merchandise wholly or partially manufactured and subject to ad valorem duty, or to duty based in whole or in part on value, can not be ascertained to the satisfaction of the appraising officer, and to assist in the ascertainment of such value, the appraiser or appraisers shall use all available means to ascertain the cost of production of such merchandise at the time of exportation to the United States, and at the place of manufacture; such cost of production to include cost of materials and of fabrication, all general expenses covering each and every outlay of whatsoever nature incident to such production, together with the expense of preparing and putting up such merchandise ready for shipment, and a profit of not less than 5 per cent. upon the total cost as thus ascertained; and in no such case shall the said actual market value of such merchandise be appraised upon original appraisal or reappraisement at less than the total cost of production as thus ascertained.

SEC. 24. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, nine general appraisers of merchandise, each of whom shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. Not more than five of such general appraisers shall be appointed from the same political party. They shall not be engaged in any other business, vocation, or employment, and may be removed from office at any time by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. They shall be employed at such ports and within such territorial limits as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe, and are hereby authorized to exercise the powers and duties devolved upon them by this act, and to exercise, under the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, such other supervision over appraisements, classifications, and rates of duty of imported merchandise as may be needful to secure lawful and uniform appraisements, classifications, and rates of duty at the several ports. Three of the general appraisers shall be on duty as a board of general appraisers daily during each day of the year (except Sunday and legal holidays) at least from 10 o'clock in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, at the port of New York, at which port a place for samples shall be provided, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe, which shall include rules as to the classes of articles to be deposited, the time of their retention, and as to their disposition, which place of samples shall be under the immediate control and direction of the general appraisers.

SEC. 25. That the appraiser shall revise and correct the reports of the assistant appraisers as he may judge proper, and the appraiser, or, at ports where there is no appraiser, the person acting as such, shall report to the collector his decision as to the value of the merchandise appraised. If the collector shall deem the appraisement of the merchandise by such appraiser too low he may order a reappraisement, which shall be made by one of the general appraisers, or, if the importer, owner, agent, or consignee of such merchandise shall be dissatisfied with the appraisement thereof, and shall have complied with the requirements of law with respect to the entry and appraisement of merchandise, he may forthwith give notice to the collector, in writing, of such dissatisfaction, on the receipt of which the collector shall at once direct a reappraisement of such merchandise by one of the general appraisers. The decision of the appraiser, or the person acting as such (in cases where no objection is made thereto, as above authorized, either by the collector or by the importer, owner, consignee, or agent), or of the general appraiser in cases of reappraisement, shall be final and conclusive as to the dutiable value of such merchandise against all parties interested therein, unless the importer, owner, consignee, or agent of the merchandise shall be dissatisfied with such decision, and shall forthwith give notice to the collector, in writing, of such dissatisfaction, or unless the collector shall deem the appraisement of the merchandise too low, in either case the collector shall transmit the invoice and all the papers appertaining thereto to the board of general appraisers which shall be on duty at the port of New York, or of three general appraisers who may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for such duty at that port or at any other port, which board shall examine and decide the case thus submitted, and their decision, or that of a majority of them, shall be final and conclusive as to the dutiable value of such merchandise against all parties interested therein, and the collector shall ascertain, fix, and liquidate the rate and amount of duties to be paid on such merchandise, and the dutiable costs and charges thereon, according to law.

SEC. 26. The decision of the collector as to the classification of imported merchandise, and as to the rate and amount of duties chargeable thereon, including all dutiable costs and charges, and as to all fees, charges, and exactions of whatever character (excepting duties on the tonnage of vessels), shall be final and conclusive against all persons interested therein, unless the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of such merchandise, or the person paying such fees, charges, and exactions other than duties, shall, not before, but within ten days after such ascertainment and liquidation of duties, as well in cases of merchandise entered in bond as for consumption, or within ten days after the payment of such fees, charges, and exactions, if dissatisfied with such decision, give notice in writing to the collector, setting forth therein distinctly and specifically, and in respect to each entry or payment, the reasons for his objections thereto, and if the merchandise is entered for consumption shall pay the full amount of the duties and charges ascertained to be due thereon. Upon such notice and payment the collector shall transmit the entry and all the papers and exhibits connected therewith to the board of general appraisers which shall be on duty at the port of New York, or of three general appraisers who may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for such duty at that port or at any other port, which board shall examine and decide the case submitted, and their decision, or that of a majority of them, shall be final and conclusive upon all persons interested therein (except in cases where an application shall be filed in the circuit court within the time and in the manner provided for in section 14 of this act), and the entry thereof shall be reliquidated accordingly, including all dutiable costs and charges thereon, and all fees, charges, or exactions shall be paid in accordance with their decision.

SEC. 27. If the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of any imported merchandise, or the collector, or the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the board of general appraisers, as provided for in section 13 of this act, as to the construction of the law respecting the classification of such merchandise and the rate of duty imposed thereon under such classification, they, or either of them, may, within thirty days next after such decision and not afterwards, apply to the circuit court of the United States within the district in which the matter arises for a review of the questions of law involved in such decision. Such application shall be made by filing in the office of the clerk of said circuit court a concise statement of the errors of law complained of, and a copy of such statement shall be served on the collector, or on the importer, owner, consignee, or agent, as the case may be. Thereupon the court shall order the board of appraisers to transmit to said circuit court a certified statement of their findings of the facts involved in the case and their decision thereon; and the facts so found and certified shall be final and conclusive upon the court; which statement and certificate of the board of appraisers shall constitute the record in the circuit court, and said circuit court shall proceed to hear and determine the question of law involved in such decision, and the decision of such court shall be final, unless such court shall be of opinion that the question involved is of such importance as to require a review of such decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, in which case said circuit court, or the judge making the decision, may, within thirty days thereafter, allow an appeal to the said Supreme Court; but an appeal shall be allowed on the part of the United States whenever the Attorney-General shall apply for it within thirty days after the rendition of such decision. On such original application, and on any such appeal, security for damages and costs shall be given as in the case of other appeals in cases in which the United States is a party. Said Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction and power to review such decision, and may affirm, modify, or reverse such decision of such circuit court and remand the case with such orders as may seem to it proper in the premises, which shall be executed accordingly. For the purposes of this section the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed always open, and said circuit courts, respectively, may establish, and from time to time alter, rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith for the procedure in such cases as they shall deem proper.

SEC. 28. The general appraisers, or any of them, are hereby authorized to administer oaths, and said general appraisers, and boards of general appraisers, and collectors, as the case may be, may call before them, and examine under oath, any owner, importer, agent, consignee, or other person, touching any matter or thing which they, or either of them, may deem material respecting any entry of imported merchandise, in ascertaining the value or classification thereof; and they, or either of them, may require the production of any letters, accounts, or invoices relating to said merchandise, and may require such testimony to be reduced to writing, and when so taken it shall be filed in the office of the collector, and preserved for use or reference until the final decision of the collector or said board of appraisers shall be made respecting the valuation or classification of said merchandise, as the case may be.

SEC. 29. That all decisions of the general appraisers and of the boards of general appraisers, respecting values and rates of duty, shall be preserved and filed, and shall be open to inspection under proper regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. All decisions of the general appraisers shall be reported forthwith to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the board of general appraisers in New York, and the report to the board shall be accompanied, whenever practicable, by samples of the merchandise in question, and it shall be the duty of the said board, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to cause an abstract to be made and published of such decisions of the appraisers as they may deem important, and the decisions of each of the general appraisers and boards of general appraisers, which abstract shall contain a general description of the merchandise in question and of the value and rate of duty fixed in each case, with reference, whenever practicable, by number or other designation, to samples deposited in the place of samples at New York, and such abstract shall be issued from time to time, at least once in each week, for the information of customs officers and the public.

SEC. 30. That whenever imported merchandise is subject to an ad valorem rate of duty, or to a duty based upon or regulated in any manner by the value thereof, the duty shall be assessed upon the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise, at the time of exportation to the United States, in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought and sold for exportation to the United States, or consigned to the United States for sale, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and of all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition packed ready for shipment to the United States, to which shall be added the cost of transportation, shipment, and transshipment, with all the expenses thereof from the place of manufacture or production to the vessel in which shipment is made to the United States; and if there be used for covering or holding imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free, any unusual material, article, or form, designated for use otherwise than in the bona fide transportation of such merchandise to the United States, additional duty shall be levied and collected upon such material or article at the rate to which the same would have been subject if separately imported. That the words "value" or "actual market value" whenever used in this act or in any law relating to the appraisement of imported merchandise shall be construed to mean the actual market value or wholesale price as defined in this section.

SEC. 31. That in all suits or informations brought, where any seizure has been made pursuant to any act providing for or regulating the collection of duties on imports or tonnage, if the property is claimed by any person, the burden of proof shall lie upon such claimant: Provided, That probable cause is shown for such prosecution, to be judged of by the court.

SEC. 32. That all fees exacted and oaths administered by officers of the customs, except as provided in this act, under or by virtue of existing laws of the United States, upon the entry of imported goods and the passing thereof through the customs, and also upon all entries of domestic goods, wares, and merchandise for exportation, be, and the same are hereby, abolished; and in case of entry of merchandise for exportation, a declaration, in lieu of an oath, shall be filed, in such form and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the penalties provided in the fifth section of this act for false statements in such declaration shall be applicable to declarations made under this section: Provided, That where such fees, under existing laws, constitute, in whole or in part, the compensation of any officer, such officer shall receive, from and after the passage of this act, a fixed sum for each year equal to the amount which he would have been entitled to receive as fees for such services during said year.

SEC. 33. That no allowance for damage to goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States shall hereafter be made in the estimation and liquidation of duties thereon; but the importer thereof may, within ten days after entry, abandon to the Government all or any portion of goods, wares, and merchandise included in any invoice, and be relieved from the payment of the duties on the portion so abandoned: Provided, That the portion so abandoned shall amount to 10 per cent. or over of the total value or quantity of the invoice.

SEC. 34. That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that, in any case of unascertained or estimated duties, more money has been paid to or deposited with a collector of customs than as has been ascertained by final liquidation thereof the law required to be paid or deposited, the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct the Treasurer to refund and pay the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The necessary moneys therefor are hereby appropriated, and this appropriation shall be deemed a permanent indefinite appropriation; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to correct manifest clerical errors in any entry or liquidation, whether for or against the Government, at any time within one year of the date of such entry, but not afterwards.

SEC. 35. That from and after the taking effect of this act, no collector or other officer of the customs shall be in any way liable to any owner, importer, consignee, or agent of any merchandise, or any other person, for or on account of any rulings or decisions as to the classification of said merchandise or the duties charged thereon, or the collection of any dues, charges, or duties on or on account of said merchandise, or any other matter or thing as to which said owner, importer, consignee, or agent of such merchandise, might under this act, be entitled to appeal from the decision of said collector or other officer, or from any board of appraisers provided for in this act.

SEC. 36. That any person who shall give, or offer to give, or promise to give any money or thing of value, directly or indirectly, to any customs officer, in consideration of or for any act or omission contrary to law in connection with or pertaining to the importation, appraisement, entry, examination, or inspection of goods, wares, or merchandise, including herein any baggage, or of the liquidation of the entry thereof, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding $2,000, or be imprisoned at hard labor not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court; and evidence of such giving, or offering, or promising to give, satisfactory to the court in which such trial is had, shall be regarded as prima facie evidence that such giving, or offering, or promising was contrary to law, and shall put upon the accused the burden of proving that such act was innocent, and not done with an unlawful intention.

SEC. 37. That any officer or servant of the customs or of the United States who shall, excepting for lawful duties or fees, demand, exact, or receive from any person, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value, in connection with or pertaining to the importation, appraisement, entry, examination, or inspection of goods, wares, or merchandise, including herein any baggage, or liquidation of the entry thereof, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding $5,000, or be imprisoned at hard labor not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court. And evidence of such demanding, exacting, or receiving, satisfactory to the court in which such trial is had, shall be regarded as prima facie evidence that such demanding, exacting, or receiving was contrary to law, and shall put upon the accused the burden of proving that such act was innocent and not with an unlawful intention.

SEC. 38. That any baggage or personal effects arriving in the United States in transit to any foreign country may be delivered by the parties having it in charge to the collector of the proper district, to be by him retained, without the payment or exaction of any import duty, or to be forwarded by such collector to the collector of the port of departure, and to be delivered to such parties on their departure for their foreign destination, under such rules, regulations, and fees as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

DRAWBACKS ON EXPORTED MERCHANDISE.

SEC. 39. That on all articles exported manufactured of materials upon which duty has been paid, and entitled to drawback under any provision of law, there shall be allowed a drawback equal to the duty paid on such materials without retention of any part thereof, but such drawback shall be paid only to the manufacturer or actual owner of such merchandise, and in cases only where the identity of the articles exported with the imported materials upon which drawback is claimed shall be established under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That where the amount of drawback is less than $100, the fees of the United States consuls for certifying the foreign-landing certificate shall not exceed 50 cents: And provided further, That the duties refunded by way of drawback on imported sugar and molasses, or manufactures thereof, shall be ascertained by the same tests as are provided by law to be applied to sugar and molasses when imported.

SEC. 40. That all imported goods, wares, and merchandise which may be in the public stores or bonded warehouses on the day and year when this act shall go into effect, except as otherwise provided in this act, shall be subjected to no other duty upon the entry thereof for consumption than if the same were imported respectively after that day; and all goods, wares, and merchandise remaining in bonded warehouses on the day and year this act shall take effect, and upon which the duties shall have been paid, shall be entitled to a refund of the difference between the amount of duties paid and the amount of duties said goods, wares, and merchandise would be subject to if the same were imported respectively after that date.

SEC. 41. That sections 2970 and 2983 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby amended so that the same shall be, respectively, as follows:

"SEC. 2970. Any merchandise deposited in bond in any public or private bonded warehouse may be withdrawn for consumption within three years from the date of original importation, on payment of the duties and charges to which it may be subject by law at the time of such withdrawal: Provided, That nothing herein shall affect or impair existing provisions of law in regard to the disposal of perishable or explosive articles."

"SEC. 2983. In no case shall there be any abatement of the duties or allowance made for any injury, damage, or deterioration sustained by any merchandise while deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse: Provided, That the duty assessed on merchandise withdrawn from any such warehouse shall be assessed on the quantity withdrawn therefrom at the time of such withdrawal; but no allowance for leakage or evaporation of wines, liquors, and distilled spirits shall be made: And provided further, That nothing in this section as amended shall restrict or in any way affect the liability of the proprietors of bonded warehouses on their bonds: And provided further, That nothing herein shall restrain or limit the exercise of the authority conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury by section 2984 of the Revised Statutes."

SEC. 42. That nothing in this act shall in any way change or impair the force or effect of any treaty between the United States and any other government, or any laws passed in pursuance of or for the execution of any such treaty, so long as such treaty shall remain in force in respect of the subjects embraced in this act; but whenever any such treaty, so far as the same respects said subjects, shall expire or be otherwise terminated, the provisions of this act shall be in force in all respects in the same manner and to the same extent as if no such treaty had existed at the time of the passage hereof.

SEC. 43. That sections 2808, 2838, 2839, 2841, 2843, 2845, 2853, 2854, 2856, 2858, 2860, 2900, 2902, 2905, 2907, 2908, 2909, 2929, 2930, 2931, 2932, 2943, 2945, 2952, 3011, 3012, 3012½, 3013, 3090 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and sections 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, and 16 of an act entitled "An act to amend the customs-revenue laws and to repeal moieties," approved June 22, 1874, all of the act entitled "An act restricting the refunding of customs duties and prescribing certain regulations of the Treasury Department," approved March 3, 1875, and sections 7, 8 and 9 of the act entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883, and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, but the repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof embraced in this act shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil cause, before the said repeal or modifications; but all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made, nor shall said repeal or modifications in any manner affect the right to any office, or change the term or tenure thereof. Any offenses committed, and all penalties or forfeitures, or liabilities incurred under any statute embraced in or changed, modified, or repealed by this act may be prosecuted and punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed. All acts of limitation, whether applicable to civil causes and proceedings or to the prosecution of offenses or for the recovery of penalties or forfeitures embraced in or modified, changed, or repealed by this act, shall not be affected thereby; and all suits, proceedings or prosecutions, whether civil or criminal, for causes arising or acts done or committed prior to the passage of this act, may be commenced and prosecuted within the same time and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 78, section 9, line 8, before the words "wood naphtha," I move an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, section 9, line 8, it is proposed before the words "wood naphtha" to strike out the word "or," and after "naphtha" to insert "or other substance approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 9. That under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, any proprietor of a bonded alcohol warehouse who has filed with the collector a bond with at least two sureties, and in the form and sum specified in this act, may admix with the distilled spirits entered in his warehouse, in the presence of the store-keeper, methylic alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, or other substance, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "methylated," in line 10 of section 9, I move to insert "or admixed;" so as to read:

Such distilled spirits, after being so methylated or admixed, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 26 of section 9, after the word "methylated," I move to insert the words "or admixed;" so as to read:

Methylated or admixed spirits may be used in the arts and manufactures, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "methylation," in line 32 of section 9, I move to insert "or admixture;" so as to read:

And the methylation or admixture of such spirits, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 33 of section 9, I move to strike out the word "or," before "wood," and after "naphtha" to insert:

Or other substances approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "methylated," in line 37 of section 9, I move to insert "or admixed;" so as to read:

And no such methylated or admixed spirits shall be permitted on any premises, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 42 of section 9, after the word "methylated," I move to insert "or admixed;" so as to read:

Every person intending to withdraw methylated or admixed spirits, etc.

These are all the formal amendments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 69, section 9, page 80, after the word "methylated," I move to insert "or admixed;" so as to read:

No methylated or admixed spirits shall be withdrawn, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 82, section 9, after the word "methylated," I move to insert "or admixed;" so as to read:

And the sale, removal, and use of such methylated or admixed spirits shall be under such regulations and restrictions, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 88, after the word "methylated," I move to insert "or admixed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 90, after the word "methylated," I move to insert "or admixed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 98, after the word "methylic," I move to insert "or admixed;" so as to read:

And any person who shall demethylate or separate methylic or admixed alcohol, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "naphtha," in line 97, I move to insert "or other substance;" so as to read:

Any person who shall demethylate or separate methelic or admixed alcohol, wood alcohol, or wood naphtha, or other substance from any such distilled spirits, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In section 11, page 86, in lines 49 and 54, after the word "naphtha," I move to insert "or other substance" in both places, and strike out the word "or" before the word "wood."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 49 of section 11, after the word "alcohol," it is proposed to strike out the word "or," and after the word "naphtha," in the same line, to insert "or other substance," and in line 54, after the word "alcohol," it is proposed to strike out the word "or," and after "naphtha," in the same line, to insert "or other substance;" so as to read:

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to determine the quality and strength of the methylic alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, or other substance that may be used in methylating spirits. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may also, at his discretion, require the maker of methylated spirit to provide a separate store-room and vats, with suitable locks and fastenings, for keeping and storing methylic alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, or other substance used in methylating and mixing, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 50 of section 11, page 86, after the word "methylating," I move to insert "or admixing;" so as to read:

That may be used in methylating or admixing spirits.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 51 of section 11, after the word "methylated," I move to insert "or admixed;" so as to read:

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may also, at his discretion, require the maker of methylated or admixed spirits to provide a separate store-room and vats, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In section 11, lines 54 and 55, on page 86, after the word "methylating," I move to strike out the words "and mixing," and to insert in lieu thereof "or admixing;" so as to read:

Used in methylating or admixing, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. All the amendments I have thus far presented are mere pro forma amendments. Are there any amendments agreed to in paragraph 7, on page 87?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No amendments have been made to paragraph 7, on page 87.

Mr. ALLISON. In Schedule A, chemical products, line 23, I move to strike out the words "and all" and insert "$2 per gallon and 50 per cent. ad valorem." That is to make alcoholic perfumery pay the same duty as under the existing law, $2 per gallon and 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In Schedule A, chemical products, in line 23, it is proposed to strike out the words "and all" and insert "$2 per gallon and 50 per cent. ad valorem," and insert a semicolon; so as to read:

7. Alcoholic perfumery, including cologne-water and other toilet waters, $2 per gallon and 50 per cent. ad valorem; alcoholic compounds not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, $2 per gallon and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 8, page 87, line 27, after the words "Turkey-red oil," I move to insert "containing not more than 50 per cent. of castor oil."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In line 27, paragraph 8, page 87, after the word "oil," it is proposed to insert the words "containing not more than 50 per cent. of castor oil;" so as to read:

8. Alizarine assistant, or soluble oil, or oleate of soda, or Turkey-red oil, containing not more than 50 per cent. of castor oil, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. PLATT. Why is that?

Mr. ALLISON. If it contains more than 50 per cent. of castor oil, it will come in as castor oil.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the Senator will give us a little information on that. What is the necessity for the amendment and what purpose does it subserve?

Mr. ALLISON. It is claimed by the manufacturers of alizarine assistant that it is possible to import this article containing from 75 to 80 per cent. of castor oil and it still comes in at 3 cents a pound, whereas the duty on castor oil is 50 cents a gallon. So the duty on alizarine assistant would be much less than the duty on its chief material, namely, castor oil. I think the amendment is all right, as the Senator will see if he looks into it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 35, line 102, page 90——

Mr. VANCE. I would like to know the order of procedure on the part of the Senator from Iowa. This has all been read once and passed upon by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill is proposing certain amendments as from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. None of these amendments, I will say to the Senator, are of any great moment.

Mr. VANCE. I just wanted to know how we were proceeding. I supposed we should finish the bill and then would go into the Senate, and it would be open to amendment there.

Mr. ALLISON. A number of paragraphs, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina, have been passed over. Of course all those paragraphs are still open to amendment.

Mr. VANCE. Of course all that were passed over are open to amendment. I understand that. If the paragraphs which the Senator is now amending were passed over informally, that is all right.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I think the best way to dispose of this bill is to put in every suggested amendment in Committee of the Whole, and then, as early as we can afterwards, have the bill printed again with the amendments as they have been inserted in Committee of the Whole, so that when we come to vote upon them in the Senate we can see exactly what amendments have been made.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There was, in addition to what the Senator from Iowa has just said, a distinct agreement, as I understood it, when we began the consideration of this bill, that any Senator should have the right to recur to any section and move an amendment at any time he pleased. That was the understanding from the beginning.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the understanding; that is right. In paragraph 35, page 90——

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me to interrupt him a moment, I should like to ask a question. I was not here this morning when the reading of the bill was concluded, and I supposed it would not be concluded this morning; but there is a section towards the close of the bill to which I desire to offer an amendment and lay before the Senate the views I submitted to the subcommittee when it was considering the question. I wish to know if I may have the opportunity to do so after the bill comes into the Senate, without giving further notice?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. What is the amendment the Senator refers to?

Mr. GRAY. To sections 2510 and 2511, on page 195.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will wait for a few moments, as far as I am concerned I shall be glad to have him return to that to-day; but as I am on this paragraph 35 I move to insert what I send to the Secretary's desk as one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 35, line 102, after the word "valued," it is proposed to insert the word "at;" and after the word "pound" where it occurs the second time, it is proposed to insert "not above 30 cents per pound;" and in line 103, it is proposed to add "valued at above 30 cents per pound, 30 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. VANCE. I should like to have the paragraph reported as it would read if amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph as proposed to be amended will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the paragraph as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Gelatine, glue, and isinglass or fish-glue, valued at not above 7 cents per pound, 1½ cents per pound; valued at above 7 cents per pound and not above 30 cents per pound, 25 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above 30 cents per pound, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. This, I will say to the Senator, is a very high-priced fancy gelatine put up in small boxes and brought in here, and it ought to have a higher rate of duty than the articles named in the remainder of the paragraph. This is the present rate, I will say to the Senator.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 60, line 147, after the word "Seal," I move to insert the word "herring." I think it is included already, but the amendment is in order, there can be no doubt about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 60, line 147, after the word "Seal," it is proposed to insert "herring;" so that the paragraph will read:

Seal, herring, whale, and other fish oil, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 8 cents per gallon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 80, page 94, line 199, after the word "ethers," I move to strike out "solid or fluid extracts"—there is a mistake there—and insert a comma after "ethers."

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 199, paragraph 80, it is proposed to strike out the words in parenthesis, "(solid or fluid extracts)," and after the word "ethers" to insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 81, line 206, page 94, after the word "essences," I move to insert the words "solid or fluid."

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 206, paragraph 81, after the word "essences," it is proposed to insert the words "solid or fluid" in parenthesis.

Mr. ALLISON. No; but so that the clause will read "solid or fluid extracts," and then strike out "(solid or fluid)" in parenthesis in line 207; so as to read "solid or fluid extracts."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 81, after the word "essences," in line 206, it is proposed to insert "solid or fluid;" so as to read "solid or fluid extracts;" and after the word "extracts" to strike out in the beginning of line 207 the words "(solid or fluid)" in parenthesis.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call attention now to paragraph 101, on page 97, line 269. Was there any amendment made there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No amendment has been made at that point.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to insert "including lava gas-burner tips."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 101, line 269, after the word "substances," it is proposed to insert "including lava gas-burner tips;" so as to read:

101. All other earthen, stone, and crockery ware, white, glazed, or edged, and other manufactures composed of earthy or mineral substances, including lava gas burner tips, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the next paragraph, line 272, I move to insert the word "vitrified" after the word "enameled."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 102, line 272, after the word "enameled," it is proposed to insert "vitrified."

Mr. ALLISON. And in the same line, after the word "twenty," to insert "five;" so as to read:

Twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that that is an increase over the original report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 102, line 272, after the word "enameled," it is proposed to insert "vitrified," and in the same line, after the word "twenty," to insert "five;" so as to read:

102. Tiles and brick, other than fire-brick, not glazed, ornamented, painted, enameled, vitrified, or decorated, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the same paragraph, line 273, after the word "enameled," I move to insert "vitrified."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 273, after the word "enameled," it is proposed to insert the word "vitrified;" so as to read:

Ornamented, glazed, painted, enameled, vitrified, or decorated and encaustic, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 109, after the word "hand," I move to insert a comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. And in line 315, after the word "cases," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 109, line 315, after the word "cases," it is proposed to insert:

And lenses of glass or pebbles, wholly or partly manufactured.

So as to read:

109. Glass and glassware of all kinds (not including plate-glass, silvered or looking-glass plates, or cylinder crown or common window-glass, hereinafter specially provided for), when cut, engraved, painted, colored, printed, stained, gilded, or otherwise ornamented or decorated, and hand, pocket, or table mirrors not exceeding in size 144 square inches, with frames or cases of whatever material composed, or without frames or cases, and lenses of glass or pebbles, wholly or partly manufactured, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 114, line 346, I move to strike out the words beginning "not exceeding," and ending with the word "and" in line 348.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 114, line 346, after the word "unsilvered," it is proposed to strike out "not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 3 cents per square foot; above that, and."

Mr. VANCE. Let us know how it will then read.

The CHIEF CLERK. So as to make the clause read:

114. Cast polished plate glass, unsilvered, not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 5 cents per square foot.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. That is an increase over the present law.

Mr. ALLISON. There is none imported. It practically amounts to nothing except that it simplifies the classification.

Mr. VANCE. Except to give a little more to the manufacturers; that is all.

Mr. ALLISON. None of these articles are imported, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. VANCE. Then why raise the duty on them?

Mr. ALLISON. In line 354, page 100, I move to strike out the word "or" and insert "and."

Mr. VANCE. What line?

Mr. ALLISON. Paragraph 115, line 354. It is part of the same thing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the same paragraph, lines 355 and 356, I move to strike out "not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 4 cents per square foot; above that, and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 115, line 355, after the word "plates," it is proposed to strike out "not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 4 cents per square foot; above that, and;" so as to read:

115. Cast polished plate-glass, silvered, and looking-glass plates, not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 6 cents per square foot.

Mr. VANCE. I do not know why that is stricken out.

Mr. PLATT. The amendment was read as if looking-glass plates were stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read again

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clause as proposed to be amended will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

115. Cast polished plate-glass, silvered, and looking-glass plates not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 6 cents per square foot.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. What is to be substituted when that is stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. Nothing. It merely simplifies the classification.

Mr. VANCE. The amendment striking out was reported, but the words to be inserted were not reported by the Secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. There is nothing to be inserted.

In paragraph 176, on page 116, I move to amend by what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 176, line 745, after the word "that," it is proposed to strike out "lead ore containing silver or," and at the end of the paragraph to add:

On the lead contained therein according to sample and assay at the port of entry.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read as proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. As proposed to be amended it would read:

Lead ore and lead dross, 1½ cents per pound: Provided, That silver ore containing lead shall pay a duty of 1½ cents per pound on the lead contained therein according to sample and assay at the port of entry.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the amendment be reported again—the words that are proposed to be inserted.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the paragraph it is proposed to add:

On the lead contained therein according to sample and assay at the port of entry.

Mr. DOLPH. Now, I should like to have the provision read as it is in the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. So as to make the entire paragraph read:

176. Lead.—Lead ore and lead dross, 1½ cents per pound: Provided, That lead ore containing silver, or silver ore containing lead, shall pay a duty of 1½ cents per pound on the lead contained therein according to sample and assay at the port of entry.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Secretary stop at the reading of the provision contained in the bill now without the proposed amendment?

The CHIEF CLERK. "Provided, That the silver ore containing lead shall pay a duty of 1½ cents per pound."

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that this amendment was submitted by me to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and is satisfactory to them.

Mr. DOLPH. I see no objection to it. I have sent for the Senator from Nevada. It seems to me the provision is proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I send to the desk an amendment to come in at the end of paragraph 179, on the same page, and I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of paragraph 179, after line 756, on page 116, it is proposed to add:

Mica, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 112, paragraph 155, line 643, I move to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" in line 644, to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" in line 645, to strike out "thirteen" and insert "fifteen;" so that the paragraph will read with these changes as the existing law reads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator please repeat the amendment, so that the clerks can get it?

Mr. ALLISON. In line 643, I move to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" in line 644, to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" and in line 645, to strike out "thirteen" and insert "fifteen."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read as proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the paragraph so as to read:

155. Saws.—Cross-cut saws, 8 cents per linear foot; mill, pit, and drag saws, not over 9 inches wide, 10 cents per linear foot; over 9 inches wide, 15 cents per linear foot; circular saws, 30 per cent. ad valorem; hand, back, and all other saws, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator state how much of an increase that will be over the present law?

Mr. ALLISON. It is no increase over the present law. It is the law as it now exists.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say——

Mr. ALLISON. And I will say to the Senator that this is the rate of the Mills bill. It will probably give him some aid in discussing it to know that it is according to the Mills bill.

Mr. VEST. That does not assist me in the discussion. We are not now discussing the Mills bill, but an original proposition from the Committee on Finance with which the Mills bill has nothing to do. They are separate and distinct measures of legislation.

These are the articles with regard to which I read some very interesting evidence from a manufacturer, who said that he exported these very cross-cut saws and the larger articles of saws to Canada, sold them at a decreased price from what he sold them in the American market, and made money, and paid a duty of 30 per cent. to get into that market. And yet in the face of that testimony before the committee it is now proposed to increase this duty over the report that was made of this bill. I should just like to know one single argument for that sort of thing.

Mr. ALLISON. There is only one argument I can give and that is that the manufacturers of these articles state that under the existing rate of duty they have very close and sharp competition with manufacturers in the Dominion of Canada and in Germany and elsewhere for these articles.

Mr. VEST. I read that testimony to the Senate, and ean read it again, which was given before the gentlemen themselves.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would remind the Senator from Missouri that the testimony was in relation to circular saws.

Mr. VEST. He said also the other articles of saws; not only circular saws, but cross-cut saws.

Mr. ALLISON. The duty on circular saws remains the same.

Mr. ALDRICH. We do not propose to change the rate on circular saws.

Mr. VEST. The testimony I read applied to these identical saws.

Mr. ALLISON. It applied to circular saws.

Mr. VEST. I will turn to it. It applied to all the other articles of saws, and this very same manufacturer said the small saws manufactured in Philadelphia were exported from this country to England and sold in competition with those made by English manufacturers on their own soil, at a profit. I did not suppose that question would come up this morning, and I did not bring the testimony with me, but I can turn to it whenever I have it here.

Mr. ALLISON. We do not increase the duty, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. You increase the duty over that contained in the reported bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I know; but this will simply restore the existing law.

Mr. VEST. I see by the census tables that we produced in 1880 $3,943,000 worth, and the exports have been increasing every year since.

Mr. ALLISON. No harm will be done by this provision, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. But there is no necessity for this increase.

Mr. ALLISON. Was the amendment agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to yet. I wish to call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, then, will be regarded as yet before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will pass that over for awhile. I want to refer to that testimony of which I have spoken.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he refrain from calling for the yeas and nays on this amendment, and call them later on in the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Then let the Senator pass over the item.

Mr. ALLISON. I will do that if it be necessary.

Now, Mr. President, I move, in paragraph 402—I call the attention of the Senator to this paragraph——

Mr. VANCE. What paragraph?

Mr. ALLISON. On page 154, paragraph 402, which is a paragraph that was passed over. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 402, line 1697, page 154, and insert in lieu thereof:

Gloves of all descriptions, composed wholly or in part of kid or leather, and whether wholly or partly manufactured, valued at not more than $5 per dozen pairs, $1.50 per dozen pairs and 20 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than $5 and not more than $8 per dozen pairs, $2 per dozen pairs and 25 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than $8 per dozen pairs, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to know why the tax on the highest-priced gloves should not bear some reasonable proportion to the taxation which is imposed upon the lowest class.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think that is true as to this classification. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I am perfectly willing that this amendment shall be printed and passed over if he desires to examine it further, although I think this is a more equitable and just arrangement than the existing law or the paragraph as reported.

Mr. VANCE. Very well.

Mr. VEST. It is an increase of duty.

Mr. ALLISON. It will undoubtedly increase in some cases, but it will diminish in others.

Mr. VEST. Does it not increase upon the lower class?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a specific duty which all the experts of the Treasury Department say is essential, owing to the great undervaluation in kid gloves imported. I should like to have it passed upon now, unless Senators desire that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of paragraph 402, and insert in lieu thereof:

Gloves of all descriptions, composed wholly or in part of kid or leather, and whether wholly or partly manufactured, valued at not more than $3 per dozen pairs, $1.50 per dozen pairs and 20 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than $3 and not more than $8 per dozen pairs, $2 per dozen pairs and 25 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than $8 per dozen pairs, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. I prefer that that should be passed over for the present, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. VEST. Let it be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be printed in the RECORD. It is not necessary to have it printed separately.

Mr. VEST. That will do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 388, page 153, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 388 on page 153, as follows:

388. Pulp, dried, for paper-makers' use, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Mechanically ground wood-pulp, $2.50 per ton, dry weight; chemical wood-pulp, unbleached, $6 per ton, dry weight; bleached, $7 per ton, dry weight.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that this is a slight reduction in duty, but it makes it specific.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. VANCE. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VEST. I just want to make one single observation, and that is that in all these changes—and I am not able to say whether they are increases or decreases—they are invariably made where there are the largest importations in each schedule. That is the case here. There seems to have been imported, in value, $497,273.45 worth of this article in 1887, which was the largest imported in Schedule M, Books, papers, etc., so far as I can see. So upon the other changes proposed by the Senator just preceding this. They are also a large importation. I am not sufficiently an expert to say what is the increase or decrease, or whether it is one or the other.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that from an examination made by the subcommittee, taking the foreign prices, the proposed rate of duty will be a reduction upon existing rates of 10 per cent. ad valorem; and we have the prices in the committee-room. It was thought better to put upon this article a specific duty.

Mr. VANCE. Why change to a specific duty if it is a reduction? Is there any danger of undervaluation or fraud on the Treasury in wood-pulp?

Mr. ALLISON. There are great opportunities for undervaluations especially in chemical wood-pulp.

Mr. VANCE. I suppose, of course, this is done at the request of the paper manufacturers or the wood-pulp manufacturers of the country, and whenever they ask a change, Mr. President, we may look out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] being transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], I vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. My general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I vote "yea."

Mr. STEWART. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. I do not see him in his seat and I will not vote. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. EVARTS (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is not recorded.

Mr. EVARTS. I withdraw my vote. I thought the Senator from Alabama was in the Chamber.

Mr. FARWELL. I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the negative). Is the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with him.

Mr. ALLISON. With the consent of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], I will transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. That will enable both of us to vote, and I will vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. Then I vote "nay," the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from New Jersey being paired.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Hawley,	Palmer,
Allison,	Dawes,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Cameron,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Plumb,
Chace,	Edmunds,	Manderson,	Quay,
Chandler,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Hale,	Morrill,	Sherman.

NAYS—18.

Bate,	Coke,	Gray,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Payne,	Vest.
Butler,	Faulkner,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	George,	Reagan,

ABSENT—34.

Beck,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Teller,
Blodgett,	Hampton,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Bowen,	Harris,	Ransom,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,	Walthall,
Call,	Hoar,	Sabin,	Wilson of Iowa.
Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,	Wilson of Md.
Evarts,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Farwell,	McPherson,	Stewart,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. All the amendments I have offered this morning I have offered by direction of the majority of the Committee on Finance; they are not mine. I will now yield to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who has an amendment that he desires to offer to section 2510 of the Revised Statutes as incorporated in this bill.

Mr. VEST. I wish to state to the Senator from Iowa that I have some amendments to that portion of the free-list which was passed over yesterday with the understanding, as the RECORD shows, that it was to be taken up this morning. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to say that the committee wanted to amend a portion of the free-list upon page 174 of the bill reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. That is in reference to paragraphs——

Mr. VEST. In reference to oils.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Beginning at paragraph 644 and ending with paragraph 676.

Mr. VEST. Those were passed over. I have some amendments to offer to the free-list, but I prefer, as I stated yesterday, not to offer them until the committee have perfected their own bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only amendment to be made there was to put the whole in one paragraph under the head of "oils," was it not?

Mr. VEST. I think not. If the Senator from Iowa will look at the RECORD he will find that the Senator from Rhode Island asked that it might go over in order that the committee might make some changes.

Mr. ALLISON. That was only with a view of simplifying the classification and making fewer paragraphs. I think the Senator from Rhode Island has perhaps not had time to make those changes. If the Senator from Missouri has any amendments to offer to the free-list, of course I shall yield to him to move them after the Senator from Delaware shall have moved his amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment the Senator from Rhode Island was to make was, at my suggestion, to group all the oils from paragraph 644 down to paragraph 675 in one paragraph under the head of "oils," so as to avoid the repetition of the word "oil;" and also, on the next page, to group the various forms of potash into one paragraph so as to include all those articles from paragraph 701 to paragraph 706 under the head of "potash." I suppose it can be done now without waiting.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Rhode Island has charge of the amendments respecting oils and nuts. He is now here.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have them not yet prepared.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the Senator from Missouri may go on.

Mr. VEST. As soon as the Senator from Delaware concludes, I shall offer my amendments.

Mr. GRAY. Section 2510 of the Senate amendment, on page 195, reads in this way:

SEC. 2510. All lumber, timber, hemp, manilla, wire rope, and iron and steel rods, bars, spikes, nails, plates, angles, bars, and bolts, and copper and composition metal which may be necessary for the construction and equipment of vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership, or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, after the passage of this act, may be imported in bond, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purpose, no duties shall be paid thereon. But vessels receiving the benefit of this section shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States more than two months in any one year, except upon the payment to the United States of the duties on which a rebate is herein allowed: Provided, That vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

It is very well known to the Senate, at least to those members of it who are familiar with the agitation of the question of encouraging ship-building in the United States, that in 1883, in pursuance of that policy which then seemed to receive the assent of all parties, it was agreed that there should be some concession made in the tariff laws which would enable the builders of vessels for foreign trade to receive their material at a rate that would allow them to compete upon more just and equal terms with foreign builders of the same class of vessels. So the statute of 1883 became a part of the law of this country, and, I believe, found a place upon our statute-book without serious opposition from any quarter.

Section 2510, the statute of 1883, in the twenty-second volume of Statutes at Large, is, except in one or two particulars, where words have been inserted by the Senate committee, identical with section 2510 of the Senate bill. All lumber, timber, hemp, manilla, etc., used in the construction of vessels for foreign trade is to be admitted free, the Senate amendment adding plates, angles, and bars.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a mistake. The Senator will correct his copy of the bill. It is "beams" instead of "bars."

Mr. GRAY. I had not seen a corrected bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It was corrected this morning.

Mr. GRAY. Very well. What I have to say applies as well to either word. However, I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it. With that exception it is identical with the statute of 1883. The statute of 1883 has proved of no avail to the American iron-ship builders. It seems to have been framed with the idea that the wooden-ship building interests of the United States needed this provision, and that those interests were largely in the minds of those who draughted this section of the statute of 1883. The statute of 1883 is a reproduction of the statute of 1872 in the provision I have just read.

As I said, section 2510 of the existing law was drawn in the interest of the wooden-ship builders only and did not apply in any substantial way to the materials used by the builders of iron vessels. Section 2510 of the proposed substitute evidently intends to extend to the builders of any kind of vessels for foreign account the benefits that heretofore were enjoyed by the builders of wooden vessels, but it is not complete and full in its enumeration of the articles which are included in all iron and steel ships.

What I propose is to insert, after the word "plates," in line 2690, the word "sheets," and after "angles, beams, and bolts," to insert "deck and bulb beams, together with all structural shapes of iron or steel and copper and composition metal, forgings of iron or steel, castings of iron, steel, or composition, flues and tubes of iron, steel, or composition, machinery and parts of machines, and all other articles of foreign production necessary for the construction and equipment of steamers or other vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership, or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade," etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Delaware send his amendment in writing to the desk?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. What does the Senator mean by "foreign account?"

Mr. GRAY. I am using the language of the substitute. I have overlapped. I read the amendment as it would read with the words "for the construction and equipment of vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership, or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States."

To carry out in full the purpose of the proposed law in the way of putting as nearly as possible the work of building iron ships on a footing with the building of wooden ships as to the purchase of supplies, the section should include all these descriptions of materials which have been enumerated in the amendment I propose to offer.

The old law has had little effect, if any, in inducing the building of vessels in this country for foreign ownership or foreign account or to be used in foreign trade, and but few sailing vessels are built anywhere. The steam-ship builder must get the materials for his engines as well as for the other parts of his vessels as cheap as his foreign rivals if he hopes to succeed in competing with them.

That being the obvious intent of the old law, and I assume it to be the intent of the Senate substitute for the House bill, to really encourage iron-ship building in this country as well as wooden-ship building by putting the American ship-builder upon a footing where he can compete with some hopes of success with his foreign rival, I see no reason why we should not all join in carrying out what seems to be the real intent of this section by perfecting its language so that the American ship-builder may receive that benefit from the exemption that was intended to be given to him by section 2510 of the statute of 1883 as well as by section 2510 in the Senate substitute. If we are to offer him this encouragement, if we promise him that he shall be enabled to buy his materials as cheaply as his foreign rival, then we should give him the opportunity to procure all the materials that go into the construction of a modern iron ship, not only lumber, timber, manilla rope, wire, and rods, but plates, deck-beams, forgings, composition metal, and all structural shapes that modern ships require and that modern science has made necessary for the perfect vessel of to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware not only includes the articles now named by him, but it includes machinery, which means engines, boilers, and so on.

Mr. GRAY. It does.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the material part.

Mr. GRAY. That is an important part.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will see at the end of this section that vessels constructed in this way can participate in the coasting trade. If raw materials are allowed, beams, bars, etc., that would be perhaps right enough; but when you extend it to machinery, the result will be that in order to get an opening into our coastwise trade, all the machinery, including the engines and all the most expensive parts, will be brought in free and not merely raw materials used in their production. I do not see any objection to naming the other materials or parts of a ship, but when you name machinery you include too much and deprive American citizens of the opportunity of manufacturing these articles, and it seems to me it is not wise.

Mr. GRAY. The position of the Senator from Ohio seems to me not quite logical. The object is to encourage American ship-builders, and we attempt to do so by making an exemption for them from the tax upon a certain enumerated list of articles necessary to the construction of a ship. When we wanted to encourage wooden-ship building, the building of sailing vessels, we exempted those things that not only went into the hull but went into the propelling power, without which a vessel would be absolutely useless. An iron steam-ship is absolutely useless without its machinery. I do not know what would be the percentage in the cost of a modern iron vessel, but machinery would constitute a very large part, I have no doubt; and it seems to me quite illogical to say "We will let you build the hull, but when you come to put the machinery in you are to be effectually stopped by the increased cost of the machinery, so that while you can make the hull you will have to sail abroad, or sail on foreign account, to receive the machinery." So important a part of the structure of a modern iron vessel as the machinery, it seems to me, should be put on the list of those things exempt from taxation if we want really to encourage iron-ship building in this country. And I should say here that neither this section nor the amendment has any relation to the coastwise trade. I will call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that in the proposed exemption of the Senate bill we are making very important exceptions to our tariff laws. We are allowing an immense amount of material that is manufactured in this country to come in free in order to encourage American ship-building, and in order to see whether there can not be established successfully upon our shores the building of vessels that shall engage in foreign trade, to the end that we may not only have ship-builders here, but that we may have vessels engaged in the foreign trade owned here, so that capital may seek an investment in that very important branch of commerce. So I submit to him that it would be quite illogical and quite inconsistent with the purpose that is manifest in this section 2510 to refuse to exempt machinery.

If the Senator will turn over to the next page, he will find that section 2511 of the Senate substitute, following section 2511 in the act of 1883, allows all articles of foreign production needed for the repair of American vessels engaged exclusively in foreign trade to be withdrawn from bonded warehouses free of duty, etc. If the enumeration in my amendment includes all the material and structural shapes necessary in ship-building, I do not see why the language of section 2511 applied to construction would not really be better than what I have proposed. I can not for the life of me see any reason for the distinction, and why we should not say that all kinds of foreign production needed for the construction as well as the repair of American vessels, to be engaged exclusively in foreign trade, shall be withdrawn from the custom-house free of duty. I have attempted to accomplish just that thing by the enumeration which I have proposed; that is, to cover all the important articles and structural shapes that go into the building of a ship intended for the foreign trade. I do not see why we may not use the same language that has been used in section 2511, where all articles necessary for the repair of American vessels engaged in foreign trade are exempted; and unless some Senator can point out wherein the difference lies, I should prefer the latter form of the amendment rather than the one that I have already proposed.

As a matter of fact, in this matter of building ships for foreign trade, we are absolutely shut off from engaging in it, and inasmuch as we are not allowed to own vessels of foreign manufacture and must depend upon our home ship-builders if we are to have American ships in foreign trade, to show how entirely we are cut off by the great expense that domestic ship-builders are put to in their construction, the disadvantage under which they labor in competing with their foreign rivals, I will state as a fact given to me by a ship-builder of my own town that recently $1,200 was paid as duty on a propeller-wheel of a vessel of about 1,150 tons. It was not a very large vessel, but $1,200 was paid in duty for a propeller-wheel to be used in a vessel that was being constructed in an American yard.

Mr. CHACE. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. GRAY. In one moment. That wheel was made of a composition of manganese and brass that is unknown in this country; that is to say, no wheels of that particular composition are made here, and these ship-builders were compelled in order to procure a wheel of that description to seek it in a foreign market.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator is aware, I suppose, that that is a very expensive composition?

Mr. GRAY. Yes.

Mr. CHACE. A wheel for a vessel of eleven or twelve hundred tons is a matter of immense weight, so that $1,200 after all is not a very large sum to pay in duties on such a blade as that.

Mr. GRAY. It may not seem large to the Senator from Rhode Island, but it seems an immense thing to me that the single item of a propeller-wheel should be taxed $1,200 in addition to its cost and the cost of transportation. I can readily understand why not a blow can ever be struck by an American mechanic in an American ship-yard upon a vessel to be used in the foreign trade, and why the capital of the United States can never be turned into the ownership of vessels to be used in the foreign trade, and that our flag has disappeared from the ocean and will continue as unknown as the flag of the Republic of Hayti.

The object of this section 2510 is manifest on its face; the object of the legislation of 1883 is manifest, and it is only in the line of attaining that object that I offer this amendment. If we really want to encourage this great industry, which touches indirectly so many others, which touches American pride and patriotism at so many points, I can not see why we should not endeavor to do so effectually, and see whether there may not be a revival of American ship-building such as will gratify our national pride and bring employment and labor to many American citizens.

Mr. CHACE. Of course, in putting the question to the Senator I make not the slightest doubt that the Senator is absolutely candid in the expression of these views. I have no question of it. I know he feels that he is defending the great industry of Harlan & Hollingsworth and the Pusey and Jones Company in his own town. I have as much sympathy as he possibly can have with those industries, but I wish to put to the Senator now two or three questions, and I believe he will answer them candidly.

Mr. GRAY. Put one at a time, please.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator has alluded to the matter of duty upon wheels. The principle that he advocates, if carried out, would be applied to every single article that is used in the construction of an iron steamer, the most important being the iron or steel plates, which are now made in or near the city of Wilmington. Would the Senator take the duty off those steel plates or iron plates?

Mr. GRAY. You have taken it off in the Senate substitute. It is proposed to take it off. I am not taking it off. That is, it is not necessary for me to propose any amendment to take it off; the Senate substitute as it is does that.

Mr. CHACE. I am applying this principle to the general business of this country. Can the Senator give me any reason why the ship-building industry of this country should be selected for special benefit?

Mr. GRAY. Let me answer that one question by referring the Senator to the Finance Committee of the Senate, in the first place, as to why the ship-building industry of this country deserves any special protection or should be selected out of the great industries of this country for any special favor. In 1872, in 1883, and by the proposed Senate substitute, this policy is distinctly indorsed, and I am not here to antagonize the Finance Committee on that general policy. I am seeking to align myself now with my protectionist brethren and see if we as American citizens can not find some common ground upon which we can exempt one industry from the burden that these tariff laws have placed upon it and which crush it out of existence.

Mr. CHACE. Is the Senator willing to commit himself to saying that he would stop with that one industry?

Mr. GRAY. I do not think that I have either the influence or the power that need affright the Senator from Rhode Island in reference to his favorite protection notions. I wish I had more than I have. I do not want to stipulate with him. I have some general notions that are very different from his, but I do not see why he should differ from me in this particular matter that we are now discussing. I believe that the general policy of excepting American ship-building from the operation of the tariff law, so far as regards the building of ships to be used in foreign commerce is concerned, is one that is not antagonized on either side of this Chamber.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me that the Senator from Delaware must distinguish between a proposition which allows a crank-pin, for instance, to be brought here to be used in the repair of a vessel engaged exclusively in foreign trade, and bringing completed engines and boilers in free of duty to be used in vessels which may be engaged in the domestic carrying trade of the United States. The proposition is as essentially different as that properly embodied, as I think, by the committee in this bill and a proposition for free ships. There is only a slight distinction between bringing completed engines and boilers and all the other parts of a ship over here to be assembled perhaps in the ship-yards of Wilmington, and bringing in the free ships themselves.

The purpose of the committee is, if possible, to secure the employment of American labor and American enterprise and American industry in the building of ships from the raw materials, which we propose to allow to be admitted free of duty. So far as it applies to ships built for foreign account, the same principle runs through the bill absolutely, because we allow a rebate or a drawback upon the total amount of duties paid upon all imported materials where they are afterwards exported. So far as ships built for foreign account are concerned there is no distinction in the bill between ship-building and anything else, but so far as ships built for the Atlantic and Pacific trade which may be used——

Mr. GRAY. If I may interrupt the Senator, it is not under section 2510 that that provision is made.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is under another provision in the bill.

Mr. GRAY. It is under the export provision.

Mr. ALDRICH. It accomplishes the same purpose.

Mr. GRAY. I understand that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to call the attention of the Senator, so far as I can, to the distinction which it seems to me must be made between bringing in free completed articles like engines and boilers, and the bars and bolts and plates which may be brought here for the purpose of encouraging American industry. One would result in the destruction of American industry, and the other, so far as it had any effect, would result in its encouragement.

Mr. GRAY. Let us see how plain a tale, with deference to the expert knowledge of the Senator from Rhode Island, would throw out these claims of his on behalf of American industries. First, let me say that while I feel myself bound where I can properly, consistent with my notions of duty, defend the ship-building interests of my own State, I am by no means speaking of an interest that is confined to my own State. Happily the iron-ship-building industry, if it can only be properly encouraged by removing the burdens, is likely to grow and increase in a great many parts of this country. The iron-ship building of the Cramps, of Philadelphia, and the Roach works at Chester, Pa, are very important works indeed, and are doing a great deal in preserving the art of ship-building in this country, which was at one time in great danger of absolute extinction. But does not the Senator from Rhode Island see the result to be accomplished? I should be very glad if he would agree with me in this matter; and even with his extreme notions about the tariff I do not for the life of me see why he should not agree in the propositions which underlie the action which I propose that the Senate shall take.

Why is it that an American ship-builder may build for foreign account an iron ship and receive a rebate of all the duty upon the materials entering into its construction, and put into the hands of an Englishman or Frenchman this product of American skill to fly the English flag or the French flag in all ports of the world, and yet that he should be forbidden by the discrimination made in this section to put that same vessel, so constructed by him, in the hands of an American owner over which the American flag is to fly, in order that an American captain and an American crew may carry that flag to all ports of the world and compete for the world's commerce?

When an American vessel engages in foreign commerce, she competes with all the ships of the world, and she can not be protected, she has no protected market for freights as our coastwise vessels have——

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Delaware will admit that that discrimination holds all through our revenue legislation, and necessarily so as long as we have protective legislation.

Mr. GRAY. If we can we should relieve at any point an industry that suffers from this protective legislation. Here is one that manifestly does. It is conceded on all hands that your protection has so shut in and closed the avenues of profitable enterprise that this great enterprise, to wit, the iron-ship-building industry for foreign account and to engage in foreign commerce, is absolutely extinct in this country. Why should we not all join hands, whether we be high protectionists or those who do not believe in the protective theory as advocated on that side, in order that we may uplift this American enterprise and again put upon its feet American ship-building in a condition to compete with rival industries in foreign countries? It does not seem to me that it is wise statesmanship to omit an opportunity to do this. We need not antagonize each other upon the theories of protection and tariff reform in order to do this. We see that the protective tariff, which is advocated on the ground that it is useful to all the industries of this country, that it promotes the prosperity of all the people of this country, in this one instance is crowding down and pressing out of existence an industry as important as any in this country. Why should not we, if we can, lift the bars at one point without assailing the protective tariff at any other, and give a chance for this industry to get upon its feet; not only that it may encourage that much of American labor engaged in the construction of the hulls and machinery of ships, but to send our flag all over the world and encourage the ownership of American vessels engaged in foreign trade, and make a new avenue for American capital and American enterprise not now possessed by us?

There are no ships to be used in the foreign trade built now in American ship-yards. How then can it hurt any industry if we allow those articles to come in free of duty which would not be made here under present conditions, and which would not cause a blow to be struck by an American workman if this provision was not made, for I take it to be conceded that vessels can not now be built in American ship-yards to engage in the foreign commerce of the world?

There are no industries such as those that provide plates and angle-bars, machinery, propeller wheels, and iron or steel castings, which are now rendered possible as an adjunct to that branch of ship-building. There is no iron or steel forging now made anywhere in the United States for a vessel to be engaged in the foreign trade, because no such vessel can be built in this country. Therefore, if we allow American ship-builders by this concession in our tariff laws to build a vessel for the foreign trade we have not hurt any American industry, but we have greatly helped a most important one. That seems to me to be plain. We are making no assault upon any industry. We are seeking to take the profit from no capitalist, to diminish the labor of no workman, but only to add to the sum of American industries this industry of constructing ships to engage in foreign commerce.

Mr. CHACE. Would or would not the Senator from Delaware go a step further and admit foreign-built ships free?

Mr. GRAY. It seems that my friend from Rhode Island is somewhat embarrassed by the poor arguments that I have been attempting to make, when he seeks to lead me off by so irrelevant a question as that.

Mr. CHACE. Not at all.

Mr. GRAY. We are not debating any such matter as the admission of foreign ships. We are simply considering the construction of American ships in American ship-yards by American capital and by American workingmen, to engage in the foreign commerce of the world, as they can not be built here now, and all that labor and all that capital has absolutely no employment so far as that is concerned. So the question of admitting foreign-built ships is entirely apart from the line of my thought or the line of anything which I believe that I have said. We will not want to admit foreign-built ships if we can succeed in establishing on a profitable basis the building of American ships for foreign account or to engage in foreign commerce. Does not that seem to be plain to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CHACE. As I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, he proposes to admit engines and boilers free.

Mr. GRAY. Why not?

Mr. CHACE. If you admit the engines and boilers free, why should you not admit the whole ship free? I should like to know why the same reason that applies to admitting the engines and boilers free does not apply to admitting the hull.

Mr. GRAY. I have great respect for the intelligence of the Senator from Rhode Island, but much protection learning hath certainly made him mad when he attempts to meet the argument such as I have been attempting to make by asking me why the whole ship could not come in free when I merely asked that the component parts of the ship shall be admitted free.

Mr. CHACE. The whole ship may just as well be admitted free as the engines and boilers.

Mr. GRAY. I ask that the component parts shall be put together by American workmen in American yards in such fashion and such guise that they may compete with English builders in the same enterprise. That is all there is about it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. In one moment I will yield to the Senator from Maine. I want the Senator from Rhode Island to understand that I am contending for nothing that would interfere to the extent of one dime with any existing industry in this country, not even with the builder of a marine engine, because this amendment looks to the admission of machinery and parts of machinery to go into the construction of a vessel that is to be used in foreign commerce exclusively, and no such vessel is built in American ship-yards for that purpose at the present time, and therefore no builder of machinery in this country can possibly be injured by seeing this ship-building industry thus aided or encouraged.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GRAY. I have yielded to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. All right. Let the Senator from Nevada proceed.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire if, in the opinion of the Senator from Delaware, it would be possible for American-built ships under existing laws to engage in foreign commerce in competition with foreign ships, subsidized as they are, if all the material to build them were admitted free?

Mr. GRAY. That question is somewhat irrelevant, too, because if the experiment should not result in floating the flag of the United States over a single American-built ship in foreign waters, we should be none the worse off by making the attempt. But it is believed by those who are familiar with this subject that it is an experiment worth making, because there is a high probability of success in that experiment, and if it should succeed then we have helped an American industry in that most important direction, and have enabled American enterprise, American capital, and American workmen to find out for themselves new avenues of employment.

So far as the subsidy of foreign steam-ships is concerned I do not know and can not say now whether an American-built ship can compete in foreign waters with a foreign subsidized line. That is another question. But we know that this whole matter of the subsidizing of competing lines has been very much misunderstood and very much misrepresented by those who have debated that question. There is a subsidy in England, so called, not in the sense in which we use the word, by any means, but a substantial subsidy in the shape of mail contracts with the lines of English steamers, and in no other shape whatever is there any such thing, as I am informed, given to any foreign line that can possibly compete with an American-built line.

Mr. CHACE. I wish the Senator would allow me to interrupt him right there, because there is a direct issue. The Senator says there is no such thing as a subsidy by the British Government. The facts are that the ship-owners of Liverpool were asked by the British Government to establish a line to South America, and they were offered a subsidy. The company declined it as insufficient. The government then advanced that subsidy. The company again declined it, and then the government offered to guaranty them 6 per cent. on their investment over and above the expenses of running the line. If the Senator can name anything that is more absolutely a subsidy than that, I should like to know what it is.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator also to the fact that that very line was the one which ran off the line of steamers established by John Roach in this country, whose industry was destroyed by the action of the present Administration, who was running his line under a small subvention from the Brazilian Government, which was withdrawn from it and resulted in the destruction of the line.

Mr. GRAY. I very much rejoice that the Government of the United States has never imposed a burden on the toiling masses of this country in order to guaranty the bonds of any set of capitalists or insure to them 6 per cent. interest on their investment over and above their expenses. I am very happy that no such heresy has ever obtained a foothold in the economic legislation of this country. I venture to say that the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island, if it is examined, will be found to be very much exaggerated, but whether it be or not, it is an exceptional instance. I will call his attention to the fact that the policy of subsidizing steam-ship lines, commenced in France some years ago, has been abandoned by the French people because it brought disaster and not prosperity.

Mr. FRYE. When?

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator inform us when?

Mr. GRAY. Within the last year or two.

Mr. CHACE. It is in force to-day.

Mr. GRAY. I will undertake to establish the truth of what I say. I did not expect to come here to debate the subsidy question to-day; it is entirely irrelevant to what I have been talking about. I hoped that the gentlemen who advocate high protection would be willing in their bounty and grace to unite with one so heretical as I am, even, in trying to upbuild an industry as important as any that exists in this country.

I do not see what the question of subsidizing foreign lines has to do with this question. If we can not build lines that will compete with English or French or German lines, no harm comes to a single citizen of the United States; we should be just where we are now; but if perchance we should succeed, then great benefit, prosperity, and happiness would come to thousands of American citizens.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine appeals to the Senator from Delaware. Does the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask a question of the Senator. I am not going to discuss subsidies to-day, because my judgment is that in the next Congress we shall have a very magnificent opportunity to discuss a bill which will grant subsidies to ships engaged in foreign trade.

Mr. GRAY. I have no doubt of it; the more the pity.

Mr. FRYE. I am not going to bother with that now; but I am desirous of reaching the same end the Senator from Delaware is, because my interests are precisely the same. Will the Senator kindly inform me whether his amendment came from the Wilmington ship-builders?

Mr. GRAY. It did.

Mr. FRYE. Will he be kind enough to inform me whether they understood when they gave him this amendment that there was a provision in this bill which enabled them to build ships on foreign account and recover back the whole amount of the duties paid?

Mr. GRAY. They did.

Mr. FRYE. They understood that?

Mr. GRAY. They understood that. When I say the amendment came from them I mean that I offered it after consultation with those who are familiar with the subject.

Mr. FRYE. The Bath Board of Trade (Bath being our greatest ship-building center in New England at least) sent me a resolution which they passed after a very careful consideration of this whole subject, and it named, I think, only four additions which should be made to the bill as reported from the Committee on Finance as desirable to them and their business. I gave it to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and have not been able to find it to-day.

Mr. GRAY. I should be glad to hear it if the Senator will read it.

Mr. FRYE. I have not been able to find it to-day.

Mr. GRAY. I thought the Senator had it in his hand.

Mr. FRYE. No; I have the Senator's own amendment in my hand. That proposition did not include machinery and parts of machines; I am certain of that. My impression is that its technical language would include everything else which the Senator has in his amendment, but not machinery and parts of machines. I shall join the Senator in asking for an amendment which in my judgment would cover everything except those two items. I should hardly join in asking that they should be included, from the fact that I think when it comes to the manufacture of machinery the interests of this country are so deeply involved in that particular industry that it would be better in every respect to have the engines and the boilers made here. I doubt if, under the Senator's amendment, they would often buy any engines and boilers from a foreign country and expose themselves to the enormous charge for freight and to the great difficulties about sending plans and specifications and having the whole thing completed at one time.

Mr. DAWES. And repairs.

Mr. FRYE. Repairs and everything. The Senator from Delaware will notice this. The question was asked whether it would be better to admit everything; whether it would not be as well to admit a ship free to American registry. I do not believe that the American ship-builders would derive so great a benefit from the admission of everything that goes into the building of an iron ship free of duty as some people imagine. Suppose the Senator was building to-day an iron ship, say, of 4,000 tons. He goes on and makes his plans and specifications for the 4,000-ton iron ship. If he were to purchase the articles to go into that ship from abroad, he would be compelled to make all the plans and all the specifications now for every part of the ship. Every plate would have to be described, every bar, every angle. Everything connected with that ship he would have to determine now for a 4,000-ton ship, and then send all those figures and plans and specifications abroad. The builder abroad would take them and send over here a ship ready to be put together. On a 4,000-ton iron or steel ship landed at Wilmington, certainly landed down in the State of Maine at one of our shipyards, the freight alone would be $25,000. The Secretary of the Navy found that there was only 10 per cent. difference, in his judgment, between the cost of building an iron naval ship in the United States and building one on the Clyde.

Again, our ship-builders have learned that the iron used for plating ships in the United States is a great deal better than the iron used for plating ships on the Clyde.

Mr. GRAY. That is true.

Mr. FRYE. I was talking with a Scotch engineer a short time ago, who has been spending some months on the Clyde. He is connected with one of the yards, I think, in Delaware. He told me that he was standing in the yard on the Clyde one day, and he saw a plate which they were hoisting to its place fall only 9 feet, and that plate broke all in pieces. It is entirely clear if they put plates of that kind into iron ships they are simply building iron coffins. It would be wrong entirely to put them in.

I do not believe, if the Senator could have a provision put into the bill that everything which enters into the building of an iron ship should be admitted free of duty to the United States, the American iron-ship builders would in any instance order a large ship or everything needed for a large ship from abroad.

Mr. GRAY. I quite agree with the Senator from Maine, that if the amendment were adopted as I have proposed it, or if the general language used in section 2511 in regard to the repairs of a ship were used, in regard to the construction of a ship, admitting everything that entered into the construction of a ship, no American ship-builder would find it to his advantage to, nor could he profitably, import all the parts of an iron ship. But in order to make any provision of this kind available you can not stop short of language as universal as this, because at one time a ship-builder may want deck-beams; another ship-builder, or the same ship-builder at another time, may want a steel forging or an iron forging, or at another time for another ship he may want only to import a propeller-wheel without paying a tax of $1,200 or $1,500 on it.

So it would be impossible to make this a useful law, unless we either enumerate almost every possible structural shape that will go into a vessel, or use some universal language, such as is used in section 2511, and say that all materials or machinery entering into the construction of a ship as well as for repairs shall come in free of duty. It is not that I suppose, any more than the Senator from Maine supposes, that it would be possible to send an order over to England, for instance, for all the plates and all the deck and bulb beams and all the stem and stern posts, forgings, and propeller-wheels, and steering apparatus, and machinery, and have them all shipped free merely to be put together in an American ship-yard. That would be utterly impossible; but at some point and at some time in the construction of a ship there is an element necessary to its successful building that should come in free if we are to put our people who may engage in this industry on an equal footing with their foreign rivals.

I can not estimate just what the effect of this law will be. It is possible, although I do not think it probable, that it may not be sufficient to raise up this fallen and extinct industry and put it upon its feet again; but I do think that the chances are very great that it may.

As to the building of ships on foreign account, to which the Senator from Maine has just alluded and asked me if these people were familiar with, I will say that I was familiar with it and they were familiar with it, but it is quite idle to suppose that an American ship-builder can successfully build ships on this side of the Atlantic to be owned by Englishmen, or Frenchmen, or Germans abroad. They will not come here to order a vessel, and they still have advantages which would make it quite impossible for us to compete with English ship-builders for the custom of the English people and English corporations and English capitalists. What we want here is to make possible the building of American ships for American owners to fly the American flag, not the British flag, and that is all that this amendment aims at.

Mr. FRYE. Has not the Senator's own State furnished a very large number of vessels for the South American and Central American trade?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, for the South American trade.

Mr. FRYE. More than England?

Mr. GRAY. We are building more than England.

Mr. FRYE. That is true. We have surpassed them in that regard.

Mr. GRAY. I was using the illustration the Senator from Maine used of building a ship for English account, on European account.

I do not wish to prolong this debate. I have said more than I expected to say. I did not get up to antagonize anybody on these protection theories. They know how I differ from them in that regard. There are, however, matters of practical legislation, in which as American Senators we might unite without antagonizing theories on either side, and I therefore offer this amendment because it seems quite consistent with the objects of the bill as they appear on its face, antagonizes no American industry, and will, in all human probability, very materially aid a great enterprise in this country.

Mr. FRYE. Is the Senator willing that this should go over for the present? I want to find the amendment which was sent to me by the Ship-builders' Association.

Mr. STEWART. Before it goes over I should like to make a few remarks.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to have the vote on the amendment postponed.

Mr. GRAY. I have no objection to its postponement. I understand the Senator from Maine is friendly to the main object I have in view.

Mr. FRYE. I have exactly the same desire the Senator has.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, as I intend to vote against this amendment, I wish to briefly state the reasons why.

There are but two ways to revive our foreign carrying trade—only two ways: One is the original way, adopted in 1789, to give a differential duty on imports which are brought in American bottoms, and the other is by means of subsidies.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would the Senator prefer finishing his remarks on Monday?

Mr. STEWART. No; my remarks will be very short and to the point, I hope.

In the first session of the first Congress of the United States after the adoption of the Constitution an act was passed discriminating in the imposition of duties on imports in favor of goods imported in American vessels. The duty was 10 per cent. less on goods when so imported than when imported in foreign ships. This revived and immensely increased our carrying trade. We at that time were able to construct wooden ships cheaper than they could be built in England, and consequently it was but a few years before we became a formidable rival of England in the carrying trade.

In 1815 the United States made a treaty with Great Britain whereby it was agreed that each country should have free access to the ports of the other without any discriminating charges whatever either in tonnage charges or in duties. This act of the First Congress was repealed from time to time in favor of various countries by fifty different acts, the last repeal, relating to Spain, being made in 1846. Our carrying trade increased as compared with that of England until 1840, when ocean steam-ships were brought into use. At that time we had nearly one-half of the carrying trade of the world. In fact, we divided the carrying trade with Great Britain. Immediately upon the general use of steam-ships to traverse the ocean the Cunard Line, in 1840, received a subsidy of $291,960 per year from Great Britain for a monthly line of steamers between Liverpool, Halifax, and Boston, which was increased in 1849 to $437,940. The United States soon after subsidized the Collins line. England immediately granted a subsidy to the Cunard Line of $705,570 between Liverpool and New York. On June 14, 1858, an act was passed by Congress forbidding the Postmaster-General from making a contract for carrying ocean mails for more than two years, or to involve a higher rate of expense than the amount collected on the sea and land postage. This destroyed the Collins Line and the Havre and Bremen American lines.

Mr. Cobden, at the head of a parliamentary commission, examined this matter and took testimony, and some of the questions asked on that occasion are very significant. He asked a witness:

You are aware that it [the Collins Line] ceased because the American Government withdrew the subsidy?

Mr. Wilson, another member of the commission, asked:

Mr. Cunard's contract is £191,000, is it not?

A. Yes; £191,400.

Q. Three hundred and twenty thousand pounds is the amount which is now paid by this country and the colony for the trans-Atlantic postage, including the Galway Line?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the face of these increasing subsidies the American Government has altogether relinquished the practice of subsidizing their vessels, and their vessels, of course, have been driven off the passage?

Then about 1850 the American commerce was again embarrassed by the construction by England of iron ships. We were not prepared to compete with England in the construction of such ships. That further embarrassed us in the trade in addition to the subsidies which gave them the advantage. During the rebellion they drove our wooden ships entirely from the sea. England then reduced her subsidies somewhat, but we made an effort after that, in 1869, 1870, 1871, and along there, to subsidize several lines, and England then increased her subsidies materially.

I have a table showing that England increased her subsidies at all times when we subsidized a line and reduced them when our lines were broken down. She increased her subsidies to put on rival lines and drive our lines from the ocean. This table is an interesting one, and I will incorporate it in my remarks. Any one can see from it how Great Britain has increased and diminished her subsidies with a view of competing with and destroying our lines, and after driving off our lines the subsidies fell from over $6,000,000 down to about three and a half millions.

The Germans and French have also put on lines and are now subsidizing lines to this country, and England has again increased her subsidies until they have got up to nearly $4,000,000 per annum, and that has been her policy all along.

Mr. ALLISON. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. STEWART. I have here a speech made heretofore by me. I am not reading the speech, but referring to statistics contained in it. These memoranda and statistics are authentic, and I will publish the table, which shows the annual subsidies paid to steam-ships by Great Britain from 1848 to 1882, both inclusive. It is as follows:

Year.	Bounty or subsidy paid British ships by British Government.	Year.	Bounty or subsidy paid British ships by British Government.
1848	$3,250,000	1866	$4,227,018
1849	3,180,000	1867	4,079,996
1850	5,313,985	1868	4,047,586
1851	5,330,000	1869	5,481,690
1852	5,510,635	1870	6,107,761
1853	5,865,400	1871	6,070,741
1854	5,950,559	1872	5,693,500
1855	5,741,633	1873	5,665,296
1856	5,713,560	1874	5,697,346
1857	5,133,485	1875	4,860,000
1858	4,679,415	1876	4,420,271
1859	4,740,190	1877	3,976,580
1860	4,349,760	1878	3,914,990
1861	4,703,285	1879	3,768,230
1862	4,105,353	1880	3,873,130
1863	4,188,275	1881	3,601,350
1864	4,503,050	1882	3,538,835
1865	3,981,995

It will be seen, therefore, that England has watched us attentively, and every effort we have made to encourage the carrying trade she has met with a subsidy that has driven our vessels off the seas.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator a question, as he is familiar with the subject. What is the Senator's opinion as to the net income on the capital invested in the English carrying trade?

Mr. STEWART. I have an estimate here of that. By means of these subsidies England has increased her shipping to 5,500,000 tons, valued at one thousand millions of dollars, employing 240,000 men in the construction and repair of ships, and 220,000 more in sailing them, and added to her national earnings $350,000,000 a year, while the United States has been driven entirely out of this trade by the subsidized lines of Great Britain.

If the ships were given to us, if we could bring in free ships, we could not run them against these subsidized lines. It is impossible, and this table shows that any attempt on our part to do so will be met by an increased subsidy on the part of Great Britain that will destroy the enterprise.

As to bringing in parts of ships, engines or materials with which to build them, that is all futile. It is merely holding out a vain promise to the people. It will accomplish nothing.

My remedy for this condition of things is either to go back to the original policy of differential duties on goods imported in American bottoms or to adopt some system of subsidizing our own ships. I think that the subsidizing of ships is a violation of the original treaty of 1815 with Great Britain. The treaty did not contemplate an undue advantage to be taken in any way. We took off the 10 per cent. discrimination in favor of American bottoms for the consideration that we should have the same privileges in British ports that we granted in ours, and that we should have fair competition.

It makes very little difference, none indeed in the result, whether we collect the revenue and pay it into the Treasury and pay it out in the way of subsidies, or whether we make a discrimination as to duties on goods carried in American bottoms. It is all the same thing and produces the same result. I would either do one or the other. I would notify the world that we would discriminate in favor of our own ships, as was done by the First Congress, or I would adopt the subsidy system and meet England in that competition. If neither of these can be done, there is no use of talking about our foreign carrying trade, because it can not be maintained and it is idle and useless to attempt it.

As to the prices paid to sailors, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] suggests to me, they might be equalized. We can arrange so as to equalize them. That is not the real difficulty. It is not the prices paid to sailors, but it is the advantage of a subsidy that gives the English lines a profit against which private enterprise can not compete.

This table shows how accurately and how carefully England has observed the movements of other nations in increasing her subsidies and in reducing them when she has driven off competition. I suppose if a subsidy were granted to our ships she would attempt to run them off. We have got to compete with Great Britain in subsidies or we have got to legislate discriminating in favor of our own ships, and if we do that our people will build ships, our mechanics will find the materials. They will build ships if they can be profitably run, but there is no use in breaking down our tariff.

Mr. HOAR. The question I asked the Senator was, what is the profit on the capital invested?

Mr. STEWART. I have given the aggregate amount of the business. I have not the data as to the net profit of the English carrying trade. The percentage of profit is not large on the capital invested in the business, but it is large in its results to England in promoting her power.

Mr. HOAR. I have seen it stated repeatedly by persons apparently conversant with the subject—I do not know how the facts are—that the profits for the last five years upon the capital invested in England in the carrying trade would not average more than 2 per cent.; in other words, that it would not attract our capital in so perilous an investment.

Mr. STEWART. I think that may be true. Heretofore our capital has been attracted to that industry and remained in it so long as competition was possible. In the rivalry between Great Britain and the United States for the carrying trade previous to the introduction of steam-ships the competition was very severe, and at that time probably the profits were not large, but still it employed a large number of American seamen, it employed a large number of American citizens and laborers in the construction of ships, and it very much benefited American commerce, and on the whole it was a great industry. But we can not ask men to engage in this industry against four or five or six million dollars of bounties which England affords with all her advantages.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will yield to me a moment, I should like to put in a statement as to the value of the carrying trade of the world, which I find in an English work on "England's Supremacy," which states that the entire carrying trade of the world—this was written in 1885—was £133,000,000 sterling, of which Great Britain took £73,000,000.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. TELLER. It means the income of the whole carrying trade of the world, of which England takes £73,000,000.

I find in the same statement that every time that the English shipowner pays to the English seamen £39 the American ship-owner pays £95.

Mr. STEWART. That will not differ materially from the estimate I have, which was taken from an English report, of $350,000,000 a year as the gross earnings of their carrying trade.

Mr. TELLER. I would say that this £133,000,000 is intended to cover all the carrying trade, showing that Great Britain has more than half of it. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that since 1860, of the increase of the carrying material, that is, the ships of the world, Great Britain has constructed and owns 60 per cent.; she has 60 per cent. of the tonnage of all of the ships that have been built in the world during the last twenty-eight years.

Mr. STEWART. All I desire to say is that I shall vote and continue to vote against any little schemes that are not going to accomplish the purpose. Whenever the American people make up their minds that they want this carrying trade, it is very easy for Congress to give it to them. It can be obtained if Congress will give American ships sufficient discrimination by differential duties. We can recover it by making differential duties on goods imported in American bottoms or by granting subsidies. Then we can engage in the foreign carrying trade, but on no other conditions. If ships are brought in free or even if they are given to us, we can not do it under existing conditions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator makes that motion, I wish to say that I promised his colleague [Mr. VEST], whom I do not see in his seat just at this moment, that he might have an opportunity to put in some amendments which he desired to offer this afternoon.

Mr. COCKRELL. He will be here in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is now here, and I understand he desires to offer some amendments.

Mr. VEST. At the request of some Senators who wish to leave, if it is as convenient I will not offer them until Monday.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1931) to increase the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 944) increasing the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth G. Scott.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 14, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 12, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the eleventh number of the statistical abstract prepared by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a draught and recommending its passage, of a bill amendatory of the oleomargarine act; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY ESTIMATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting deficiency estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1889 and for prior years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SCHOONER E. C. ALLEN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy of an appropriation to pay the owner of the schooner E. C. Allen for injuries sustained by collision with the United States ship Constellation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PIERRE ZERIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy of an appropriation to pay Pierre Zeria for injuries sustained while employed on the United States steamer Quinnebaug; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEPOSITS, NEW YORK HARBOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation for the prevention of injurious deposits in the waters of New York Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the second annual report of the Interstate-Commerce Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PALVAREDO GRANT, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a supplemental report of the surveyor-general for New Mexico, on private land claim No. 131, known as the Palvaredo grant; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

DISMISSED CASES, COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a list of cases dismissed by the court for want of jurisdiction, under the provisions of the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

S. SPRIGGS BELT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact and opinion of the court in the case of S. Spriggs Belt, administrator, vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

OVERTON HOTEL COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact and opinion of the court in the case of the Overton Hotel Company vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES HARVEY DENNIS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact and opinion of the court in the case of James Harvey Dennis vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MADISON FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact and opinion of the court in the case of the Madison Female Institute vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ALFRED B. CARTER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact and opinion of the court in the case of Alfred B. Carter vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE M. BARBOUR ET AL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the following cases: George M. Barbour, Cornelius Phezing, Sidney Ballard, Philip Shearer, Christian Esterday, J. J. Bailey, R. D. Frayser, administrator of Fletcher Lane; Ed. Tarry, administrator of May S. Hunt; C. C. Farrar, administrator G. W. Smith; and John D. Cunningham, administrator C. S. Cunningham, vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR, AND RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railroad Company, prepared in compliance with the act incorporating said company; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS FOR UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with Senate amendments.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendments. I desire to state that when I called this bill up for concurrence a few days ago the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] submitted objection to its consideration. Since that time he has withdrawn that objection, and consents that the bill shall be considered. I ask to have read a letter explanatory of the objection which the gentleman from Georgia urged.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Georgia has given his consent to the consideration of the bill, but has the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER]? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANHAM. That is about to be ascertained.

Mr. REED. We sort of missed something this morning. [Laughter.]

The amendments of the Senate were read at length for information.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that a brief letter from the Supreme Court Reporter be read.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to reserve the right to object until we can have this measure explained.

Mr. LANHAM. I will cheerfully make the explanation.

Mr. BURROWS. The rules, I believe, provide for the disposition which is to be made of Senate amendments, and we had better conform to the rules.

The SPEAKER. The bill, then, will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman will not demand that. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be permitted to remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to give me his attention for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has objected.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand he has, but I desire a moment if the Chair will allow me. [Cries of "Regular order!"] This bill simply relates to supplying certain courts with sets of the Supreme Court decisions——

Mr. BURROWS. I understand that perfectly, but we had better proceed under the rule.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask, then, to non-concur in the Senate amendments. Will the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. BURROWS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The bill with the Senate amendments will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, returned from the Senate with disagreement to the House amendments and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The request for conference was agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. DUNHAM. Should it not go to a committee?

The SPEAKER. It does not. It is a Senate bill. The House adopted certain amendments which are disagreed to by the Senate, and it has reached that stage at which it is privileged, and a conference has been asked. The Chair will appoint as managers on the part of the House the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CLARDY, the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. RAYNER, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. O'NEILL.

Mr. MAISH. I object. I believe that it ought first go to a committee.

The SPEAKER. It has reached a stage where a gentleman may move to recede from the amendments on the part of the House. The bill is now open to nothing else.

Mr. MAISH. I understand that the Senate has struck out most of these amendments, and must not the bill, when it comes back here, first go to the committee?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. The Senate has disagreed to the amendments of the House, and the bill has reached that stage where, under the rule, it is privileged. The Senate has asked for a conference.

EUROPEAN GOVERNMENTS AND INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House joint resolution (S. R. 122) declaring the sense of the Government of the United States in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate concurrent resolution that the report of the National Academy of Sciences for the year 1887, with its appendices, be printed in the usual octavo form, and that 1,000 copies of the report and memoirs be printed for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Academy of Sciences; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

FLAGS FOR INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 10, 1889.

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Clerk will be directed to return the resolution to the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILBER (on request of Mr. MOFFITT), for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LATHAM, for this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. CARLETON, for this day, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, for three days.

To Mr. WICKHAM (on request of Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR), on account of sickness.

HOUR OF ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit the following, and ask for its adoption:

Resolved, That the order made on the 11th day of May, 1888, providing that the session of the House shall close each day at 5 o'clock, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that a report from the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. DUNHAM. Where does it come from?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] offers it.

Mr. DINGLEY. For what purpose?

The SPEAKER. For adoption. The gentleman asks the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. The objection comes from that side of the House, I notice.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to offer the resolution for reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I offer it for reference to the Committee on Rules, and demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman yield to me to ask unanimous consent to have a substitute for the Territorial bill printed, in order that it may be ready for the action of the House on Tuesday next, on which day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I shall call up the South Dakota bill?

Mr. REED. That is, you will if some gentleman does not object?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, if some gentleman does not object; but the bill will be the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has demanded the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill No. 944, to increase the pension of Mrs. Scott, which is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the presentation of the substitute for the Territorial bill as proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], in order that it may be printed?

Mr. SAWYER. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, how many times must the regular order be called?

The SPEAKER. Only once.

Mr. BURROWS. I demanded it some time ago.

Mr. COX. I beg my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to allow this bill to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us proceed under the rule.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to withdraw it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state to the House that the bill to which I have referred—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] calls up, as a privileged matter, the bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 944) increasing the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth G. Scott.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] is recognized.

Mr. WEAVER. I merely want to say that I have refrained from making parliamentary motions this morning because I have been waiting for the report from the Committee on Rules of the resolution which has just been offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and referred to that committee. That is why I am not making motions now. [Laughter.]

MRS. ELIZABETH G. SCOTT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] calls up the bill the title of which has just been read, and upon which the previous question has been ordered by the House.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to raise the question of consideration against that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] raises the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House proceed to consider the bill the title of which has just been read?

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the title be again read.

The Clerk again read the title of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will be read.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to ask for the reading of the bill? If it is, I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. It is in order. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Goodale Scott, widow of Robert N. Scott, deceased, late lieutenant-colonel Third United States Artillery, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the amount now received by law.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of this bill?

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEELE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 63.

Mr. MATSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 43 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 142, nays 68, not voting 113; as follows:

So the House determined to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

The Clerk read the vote.

The SPEAKER. The pairs will now be announced.

The following members were announced as paired until further notice on all political questions:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. FORD with Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. JONES with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MCSHANE with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. WILBER.

Mr. CARLTON with Mr. WICKHAM.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. HITT.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. WISE with Mr. JOHN R. BROWN.

Mr. NEAL with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. WHITE, of New York.

The following members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. CRISP with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. SOWDEN with Mr. DE LANO.

The following members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. NUTTING.

Mr. SPINOLA. I am announced as paired with my colleague from Brooklyn [Mr. WHITE], but that pair applies to political questions only, not to a question of this character, because in such a case as this he would vote the same way I have voted.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to know whether any time is fixed as the limit of debate on this bill.

Mr. STEELE. The order allows fifteen minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER. Thirty minutes are allowed for debate—fifteen minutes on each side. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] will be recognized to control the time in support of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I have no desire to debate the bill if there is no such desire on the other side. I reserve my time.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I have opposed the consideration of this bill, not on account of any personal feeling toward this claimant, for when the bill came from the Committee on Pensions I did not know who she was; but one strong reason with me for opposing the consideration of the bill was because in this way the bill is taken out from among a number of other bills similarly situated on the Calendar, and is allowed a preference over others which I think are, to say the least, equally meritorious. This bill is certainly no more meritorious than eighteen others which are situated just as it has been for a number of months. I will go further, and say that I believe it is the least meritorious of these measures.

As I understand this report, the main reason, the reason so strongly urged by the Committee on Pensions in indorsing this lady's application for an increase of pension, is based upon the services of her husband in a civil capacity as a clerk in the War Department.

Mr. STEELE. My colleague will allow me to correct him. Colonel Scott was a regular Army officer——

Mr. MATSON. I understand that; and I see the report states the fact that he served during the war.

Mr. STEELE. He did serve through the war, and died in the service of the Government.

Mr. MATSON. But the Committee on Pensions of the Senate, and the House Committee on Pensions, indorsing the Senate report, lay great stress on the fact that he rendered distinguished services to the Government in compiling the war records.

Mr. STEELE. As an officer of the Army—lieutenant-colonel of the Third Artillery.

Mr. MATSON. Of course; but those were civil services. I say, Mr. Speaker, that among a number of bills on our Calendar in which an increase of pension is asked for widows on account of the services of their husbands this stands alone, being the only case in which stress is laid on the civil service of the husband. The passage of this measure will constitute a very dangerous precedent for this House; and for that reason, if for no other, I think the bill ought not to pass. While I have no sort of antipathy to this lady, while I know nothing about her, while I did not know until a few moments ago who she is or what have been her relations to other persons—I am quite sure that upon this principle this bill ought not to pass; and it certainly ought not to be accorded the extraordinary privilege of being taken out from among other measures providing for cases where soldiers have rendered distinguished service on the field of battle.

Mr. STEELE. Will my colleague allow me a question?

Mr. MATSON. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. Do you understand that this widow is now drawing a pension?

Mr. MATSON. I so understand.

Mr. STEELE. How, then, does she get a pension, unless because of the service of her husband, and his death as the result of such service?

Mr. MATSON. I do not question, of course, the proposition that he was an Army officer.

Mr. STEELE. But unless his death was the result of his military service his widow could not have obtained a pension.

Mr. MATSON. I am aware that he was in the Army from 1857, that he died while an officer in the Army, and that his widow is now drawing a pension.

Mr. STEELE. Because he died as the result of his service; otherwise she could not have obtained a pension.

Mr. MATSON. Of course the pension must have been granted because of his service; but this is a proposition to give her a pension above that allowed to the widows of other officers of similar rank——

Mr. STEELE. Because he was wounded in the service—was worn out in the service, and because her father also was worn out in the service, and she is a poor widow with five daughters. That is why the House determined to give her a pension.

Mr. MATSON. The House has not yet determined to give her a pension, though I apprehend from the vote that has been taken on the consideration of the bill that it will do so. I wish, however, to warn the House, in view particularly of the manner in which this bill has been placed before it, and in view also of the report of the Senate committee, that the passage of this measure would furnish a very dangerous precedent for pensioning persons on account of civil service, not on account of military service.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. If no other gentlemen desires to address the House, the question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I will simply ask to have the report read. I want to disabuse the mind of the House of the idea that this woman is receiving a pension on account of the civil service of her husband; for such is not the fact. Her father, General Casey——

Mr. MATSON. I have not stated that this widow is now drawing a pension on account of civil service of her husband. I admit that she is drawing a pension as the widow of an Army officer; but this application to Congress for an increase of her pension is based upon the idea of civil service rendered by her husband in the War Department as compiler of the war records.

Mr. STEELE. The report will show whether that statement is correct or not. Before the report is read I wish to state—I do not know whether the report states the fact—that this lady is the daughter of General Casey who compiled the "Tactics."

Mr. MACDONALD. Was a pension allowed to her by the Pension Department?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The committee recommend that the bill pass, and adopt the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions as follows:

The late Robert N. Scott, lieutenant-colonel Third Artillery, entered the service as second lieutenant February 21, 1857. During the war of the rebellion he was transferred to the Adjutant-General's department, rendering service therein and in the field, which was rewarded by two brevets and honorable mention in general orders. After the war he served as aide-de-camp on the staff of General Halleck until 1872; professor of military science and tactics at Faribault, Minn., until 1873; commander of his battery until 1877; and from that date until his death, in 1887, he was engaged in the compilation and publication of the official records of the Union and Confederate armies. Added to these duties he was, during 1877 and afterwards, variously employed in the compilation of Army regulations, as secretary to a Congressional commission on the reorganization of the Army, and as a member of the Army Regulations Board.

The work of compiling and publishing the records of the Union and Confederate armies, on which Colonel Scott was engaged during the last ten years of his life, was probably the most involved and difficult ever imposed upon a military compiler. To cull and arrange out of the confused and sometimes chaotic mass of Union and Confederate reports a full, just, and intelligible history of events, and omitting therefrom the vast body of superfluous or irrelevant material, required industry, patience, and methodic intelligence of the highest order. These qualities Colonel Scott manifestly possessed, for his labors received the highest commendation of his superiors and military critics at home and abroad. He prosecuted the work with a zeal which surpassed enthusiasm, and amounted to an utter absorption of time and faculty, for during all these years it is certified that he never took a holiday, nor spared time for a mid-day lunch; and that when the office was closed he carried papers home with him, and remained engaged on them, as a habit, until after midnight. This continuous labor, without recreation, wore out his strength until, when he was attacked by a slight cold, he had no vitality to resist it and died. Surgeon O'Reilly, of the Army, who was for years his physician, states:

"I look on his death as being as much caused by his entire devotion to the Government service as though he had been killed in battle."

Services of a quasi extra-official character like these by Colonel Scott, and of equal difficulty and importance, performed through a series of years and with so total a disregard of the limitations of prudence and duty, are not compensated for by mere pay and allowances. Nor, while the country neither exacts nor desires of its agents unreasonable service, can it afford to allow patriotic sacrifice to go unrecognized. It is plain that this officer, in his enthusiastic devotion to duty, the performance of which he felt could neither be shared nor delayed, went down to his grave before his time, depriving the country of superior talents especially trained, and prematurely removing from his family their protection and support. The committee, having just appreciation of Colonel Scott's labors, and believing that excessive devotion to duty is not likely to grow into a habit so common as to become a burdensome precedent, think it reasonable that the pension to his widow should, as asked, be increased to the moderate sum of $50 per month; and they recommend the passage of the bill to that end.

Mr. CHEADLE. I desire to call the attention of every friend of pension legislation on this floor to the fact that the bill now pending is a proposition to increase the rate of pension to the widow of a deceased soldier of the grade of lieutenant-colonel from $30 to $50 per month.

I want to say to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, from whom much will be expected by the men who saved this Government, during the coming Congress, that there is only one bed-rock of principle upon which we can stand, and stand successfully, and that is to give equal pensions for like disabilities. This pension proposes to trample under foot every principle that is vital to our national life. It proposes to create a favored class of citizenship, and as one member upon this floor, having taken a solemn oath to support the Constitution of the United States, I will not cast my vote for a law which must, if it shall become a law and remain in force, have the effect to trample under foot the very fundamental principle upon which the whole superstructure of this Government of the people is erected, and that is, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, equality of citizenship before the law.

It is said, Mr. Speaker, that this bill ought to pass because of the faithful services the distinguished soldier rendered to the country. I ask if it is not true that when a boy is sent to the Military Academy at West Point he is sent there to be educated by the people for a special purpose, and that purpose he is required to subserve even to yielding up his life, if necessary, in defense of his country. That is the first duty of a soldier.

Now it is claimed that this man did his duty. I say, gentlemen, that he could have done no less than do his full and complete duty, because he had been educated by the Government for that special purpose, and he had taken a solemn oath that he would perform that service.

Again, gentlemen, I call your attention to one other singular fact, and that is this: That the leader on the Democratic side of the House, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, my colleague, Colonel MATSON, of Indiana, as well as the leading member on this side of the House on that same committee, Mr. MORRILL, of Kansas, have voted against the passage of the pending bill. Colonel MATSON, chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House, has called attention to the fact that to pass the pending bill would be to set a most dangerous precedent, and I therefore appeal to the deliberate judgment of my colleagues on this side of the House whether they can afford to vote to increase a pension when that pension has already been granted to the full extent of the law, and when there are scores of thousands of the widows of our comrades in the North living in penury and want who are not pensioned at all. I say, sir, we must be just before we attempt to be generous, and I hope this bill will not pass.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration proposes what my friend who has just taken his seat has indicated, and that is, to do justice to the survivors of a brave and gallant officer of the Union Army. They do not come here as mere suppliants for aid, but they come here asking that justice may be done to them, upon the same basis and upon the same principle that all others have come who have asked for and received assistance in the same direction. This officer performed all his duties as a brave and gallant Union officer, and no one will question that fact. The mere statement that two-thirds of the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions are opposed to it is only evidence of the fact that through some prejudice those gentlemen are opposed to the principle involved in this bill and because it does not cover something which they desire to accomplish. Now, sir, I will go as far as any member upon this floor to oppose the creation of a civil pension list. No legislation of that character can ever receive my vote as a member of Congress. But in a case like this, where simple justice is asked in behalf of the survivors of a gallant and faithful officer of the Army, I as one member on this side of the House shall give it my vote.

I trust, therefore, what my friend from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] states will be looked at with reference to the point of view from which he speaks. It will be remembered that during this entire Congress he has been incessant in his opposition to a certain class of pension cases, wanting to bring up the private to the same plane with the officer, which the law does not permit. If the law allowed it I would go as far as the gentleman or any other member of the House, but when the law stands in the way I am going to do the best I can under the circumstances, and therefore shall give my vote in favor of those who in my belief, for their gallant and faithful services, are entitled on a fair consideration of their case to the same increase of pension which has been granted in other cases of a similar character. I hope the bill will be passed and this increase of pension will be granted to the heirs of this gallant officer.

Suppose he was educated at the expense of the Government. So were all the great captains of the war. Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan were educated at the expense of the Government, and so, too, were all the officers who now command the Army of the United States educated at the expense of the Government. They have done their duty; and so did Colonel Scott. After he retired from the Army, after he had served——

Mr. STEELE. He did not retire.

Mr. SPINOLA. No, I do not mean that; but after he had served through the entire war he was detailed to other duties. After the close of the late war I know myself of hundreds of brave and gallant officers who went out of the service and entered the ordinary pursuits of civil life. Should that fact debar them from recognition by the Government for services rendered during the war? Why, that should be to their credit, it seems to me, and because Colonel Scott was detailed to other duty that should not be urged against him as a reason why his heirs ought not to receive a common act of justice at our hands.

I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] in regard to this character of legislation. I understand, although the bill now before us does not so state, that the widow of this officer already receives the same pension which the widows of other officers of like grade in the service receive. If this officer suffered any extraordinary disability while in the service there is no evidence before the committee or the House to show it. Whatever his services may have been to the Government since the war they were not different in their character from those performed by a large number of other officers now on the civil list; and, as the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions says, the passage of this bill will be the recognition of a civil service as the foundation for the claim for pensions.

But there is another thing to which I wish to call the attention of the House, and it is that, while it is true this officer did perform valuable services, of a character similar to those done by the civil officers of the Government, he has during the whole of his lifetime received a large remuneration for his services from the Government, or at least he has received quite a considerable pay, and it was his duty to his family out of that pay to have saved something for them. We ought not to provide against a lack of prudence on the part of public officers who fail to make suitable provision for their families from the money received for their public services. The passage of this bill will be an inducement to every civil or military officer of the Government to make no provision out of his current wages for the care of his family after his death, and hence I do not think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will give me its attention for a few moments, so that it will understand what is a fact, that this bill sets no precedent, as has been alleged by my colleague from Indiana. There are now the wives of a great many captains and of majors and lieutenant-colonels on the roll drawing pensions at the rate of $50 a month where the services rendered were not so distinguished as in the case of the husband of this lady, nor so distinguished as were the services of her father.

A MEMBER. Who was the father of this lady?

Mr. STEELE. General Casey, who compiled our Tactics. I say that the services of her husband and father were meritorious in a marked degree; and hence, in view of the fact I have already stated as to the widows of other distinguished officers being on the pension-roll at the rate specified, there can be no question of precedent presented here. She was left with five daughters in a condition of destitution, and her husband and her father were worn out in the service.

Talk of precedents! Are we going to allow these people to go to the poor-house or to live on $25 a month because of that cry when a great Congress of the nation is appealed to in their behalf and when we have an overflowing Treasury? Talk of dangerous legislation! Why, there is no more dangerous legislation than that which permits us to come as we did last night and pass bill after bill which the Committee on Invalid Pensions saw proper to report to the House, with only a dozen or two of members.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman has evidently not read the RECORD of last night's proceedings.

Mr. STEELE. I did not; but I supposed that the usual course was pursued, and that dozens of these bills were passed. Now, I am not opposed to any class of pension legislation. On the contrary, as is well known here, I favor pensions.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Was not the gentleman here last night?

Mr. STEELE. I was not, nor on the Friday before. I am only sorry that the Committee on Pensions seem to be so much concerned about precedents, and that instead of passing bills night after night they have not brought forward and reported to this House and called up for consideration at the earliest opportunity some general pension legislation.

But, sir, I have no desire to enter upon the discussion of this bill. It is like many that have gone before it, and this is of an unusually worthy character, in my estimation.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I think that some gentlemen are laboring under a misapprehension in supposing that in this class of legislation a distinction is often made between the private soldier and the commissioned officer, and that these increases of pensions are granted simply because of rank. As I understand it, we have allowed these extraordinary pensions because of distinguished services; and if services of equal value had been rendered the Government by a private soldier, an equal rate of pension would be granted to him or to his widow. Fifty dollars per month in this case is being awarded by this Congress to the widow of the officer, not because he was in commission, but because of the service he rendered to the Government. We give this sum in order to testify our appreciation of the character of the services that were rendered to the Government of the United States by the husband of the beneficiary. And let me say to you, and to the House, that if we expect distinguished services in the future, we must show our appreciation of them as a people. Brave men only come from the body of a generous people. When the British Government awarded a large pension to Lord Nelson it was not because he was an admiral simply. Standing upon the quarter-deck of his flagship, he was subject to no danger that was not shared in common by every sailor that stood with him.

He did not point the shotted guns against the ships of the enemy. He perhaps performed less of labor in these conflicts that rendered him and the British navy immortal than many of the gunners upon the decks. Why was he distinguished or selected from those to receive such consideration of the British people? It was because he planned the battle. It was because of the great services he rendered that made victory possible; and so it is we are coming in here day by day and giving officers or their widows pensions—and we would award them with as great or greater pleasure to the private soldier—because of the value of the services these men have rendered to the country. I do not vote for the increased pension for this widow because she is poor; I do not vote for it because she has five children dependent upon her for support—to be sure these are considerations that enter into and influence to an extent my action—but I give it to her because I desire, as one of the representatives of the people, to display my gratitude and admiration for the character of the services rendered by her husband to the people; because I want by this action to encourage those in the future who may be called upon to discharge these important and dangerous duties, and because I would encourage them to perform them fearlessly. For, let me say to you, our reputation as a nation has in some measure been made—not in a small measure either, but in a great measure—by the bravery and devotion to duty of our soldiery during or in the conflicts through which the nation has passed. I have no respect for that cold-blooded economy that stands here in the face of these things and protests against the representatives of the people putting their hands in this small measure into the Treasury of the people and paying these pensions. The people indorse our action when we do it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired, excepting the moment during which the message was received from the Senate.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to ask my colleague [Mr. BROWNE] a question, if he will allow me. He says he proposes to vote for this bill on account of the services of the husband; not because the widow is poor or because she has five children. May I ask, in perfect good faith—because I am not informed by the report—what these services were on account of which the widow's pension ought to be increased?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understand from the statement of gentlemen, as well as the report—certainly from the report—that he went early into the service of the country and served it faithfully through the war.

Mr. MATSON. I call attention to the fact that the report seems to show that he served during the greater portion of the war in the Adjutant-General's Office.

Mr. STEELE. Not in the Adjutant-General's Office, but as adjutant-general.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds upon examination of the Journal that this bill had not been ordered to be read a third time. The previous question had been ordered, and it was made a special continuing order. The question now is upon ordering the bill read a third time.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPINOLA and others. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 72.

Mr. STEELE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 110, nays 81, not voting 132; as follows:

So the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of the members voting be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced for the remainder of this day:

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, with Mr. DE LANO.

On this vote:

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. WARNER.

Mr. CRISP with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. SPOONER with Mr. HIRES.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. COWLES. My colleague, Mr. ROWLAND, is detained from the House on account of sickness, and I ask unanimous consent that he be excused from attendance for the remainder of this day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. COWLES. I make the same request for Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, who left the House a short time ago feeling quite unwell.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I ask that Mr. HAYES, of Iowa, who is absent on account of ill-health, be excused for the remainder of this day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MRS. ELIZABETH G. SCOTT.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill having been ordered to a third reading, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill, and the Speaker declared the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CHEADLE and Mr. BROWNE of Indiana demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 104, nays 85, not voting 134; as follows:

Mr. LATHAM with Mr. NICHOLS, until further notice, on all political questions.

Mr. ROWLAND with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, for the rest of this day.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, with Mr. MCCOMAS, on this vote.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. CANNON, on this vote.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. LYMAN, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of the bill (S. 3762) granting a pension to Nancy Polock; in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced the Senate had adopted the following resolution; in which concurrence was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (S. 2305) to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments, the Committee on Enrolled Bills be instructed to insert in lieu of the word "Senator" where it occurs in the eighth line the word "Senators."

PUBLIC BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report which was under consideration yesterday, on Senate bill No. 1931, to increase the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1931) to increase the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "eight hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "$800,000;" and the House agree to the same.

SAM'L DIBBLE,
C. NEWTON,
P. S. POST,
Managers on the part of the House.

LELAND STANFORD,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1931) making appropriation to increase the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal., respectfully submit the following statement for the information of the House:

The Senate passed the bill for San Francisco, Cal., limiting the cost of site to $850,000, which was recommended by a commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The House reduced the limit to $650,000. The conferees recommend $800,000.

SAML. DIBBLE,
C. NEWTON,
P. S. POST.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on agreeing to the report). The noes seem to have it.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 79, noes 13.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. DIBBLE. I demand the yeas and nays, unless the gentleman from Texas will withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that if the vote be first taken by tellers, and no quorum should vote, the yeas and nays can still be demanded.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then I will withdraw for the present the call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 142, noes 23.

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the presentation of reports of committees; and I will state that if this motion should prevail, I will ask unanimous consent that members having reports to present may file them with the Clerk.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL to dispense with the morning hour for reports of committees was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks unanimous consent that members having reports to submit may file them with the Clerk for reference to the appropriate committees. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

Mr. LAWLER also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5880) for the relief of James McCauley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next I shall ask the House to consider the contested-election case of Smalls vs. Elliott.

Mr. RANDALL. Can not the gentleman agree to withhold that until Thursday? The Committee on Appropriations expect to reach the consideration of the sundry civil bill on next Wednesday.

Mr. CRISP. I understood that the committee were going to take that up on Monday. [A pause.] Very well; then I give notice that I shall ask the House to consider the election case on Thursday next. I suppose that the delay of one day is not important. My purpose is to press this case and the California case to a conclusion at as early a day as possible.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. COX in the chair.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the first general appropriation bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11854) for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina, that the first reading of this bill be dispensed with? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, read the following:

For pay of four assistant instructors of cavalry, artillery, and infantry tactics (captains), in addition to pay as second lieutenants, $2,400.

Mr. ROGERS. For the purpose of making an inquiry, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether there is any new legislation in it at all?

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman from South Carolina will permit me, I will answer the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] by saying that there is no new legislation in the bill; there are some changes in the items.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there not a provision for a new building?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, for a new building; but there is no new legislation.

Mr. ROGERS. Is not the provision for a new building new legislation? Is there anything beyond that?

Mr. TILLMAN. There are only some small items other than the provision for the two public buildings.

Mr. HOLMAN. What amount of money does the construction of those public buildings involve?

Mr. TILLMAN. Five hundred and ninety thousand dollars; and the appropriations for this purpose have in both cases been recommended by the General of the Army and the Secretary of War. One of the last official acts of General Sheridan was to approve the appropriation for the erection of these buildings.

Mr. ROGERS. What are the other items of new legislation?

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, there is nothing in the way of new legislation except some small increase or decrease of appropriations which the committee unanimously favored after thorough investigation.

Mr. ROGERS. To what do they relate?

Mr. TILLMAN. They are not new legislation in fact; they relate to field musicians of the regular troops stationed at the Academy, extra pay for the enlisted men, repairs of the soldiers' chapel and the cadet chapel—merely an increase in a few particulars.

I will also say to the gentleman from Arkansas this bill is a decrease of $18,000 as compared with the bill for the last fiscal year; that is outside of the two public buildings which are provided for.

Mr. ROGERS. If I understand the footing made at the end of the bill there is an increase over 1889 of something like $570,000. In other words, the appropriation for this year is $315,000, while for the year 1890 the appropriations aggregate $889,000. What I am trying to get at is, whether the increase here consists of new legislation or occurs as the result of an increase of salaries, or what.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I remarked awhile ago, the increase is principally for new public buildings which have been deemed to be necessary, unanimously, by the Military Committee, and which have been recommended both by the General of the Army and the Secretary of War.

Mr. ROGERS. These new buildings are to be at West Point.

Mr. TILLMAN. They are.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no increase of salaries whatever.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move in line 4, page 3, to correct a typographical error; "1889" should be "1890."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] a question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know whether there has been any law authorizing the construction of the buildings to which this bill relates, or is this the inception of appropriations for these buildings?

Mr. TILLMAN. There was an appropriation of $70,000 for the academic building and of $35,000 for the gymnasium at the last session of Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. For what purpose?

Mr. TILLMAN. To make additions to what is known as the academic building, which is the larger building, and $35,000 for the gymnasium, or smaller building, provided for in this bill. It was deemed so inadequate and so impossible to repair those buildings to accomplish the purpose required that the academic board thought it best to allow those appropriations to be covered back into the Treasury. An academic board appointed by the Superintendent of the West Point Military Academy recommended unanimously the erection of entirely new buildings, and as I remarked awhile ago both the General of the Army and the Secretary of War agreed to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. This is the result, then, of their recommendation?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. And this is the inception of the appropriations for this purpose?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir; except that the appropriations of $70,000 in the one case and of $35,000 I referred to was passed by both Houses of the last Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two appropriations here, one for $490,000 and one for $100,000. Will my friend from South Carolina state whether the remark he has made applies as well to the appropriation of $490,000 as to the one for $100,000?

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not catch the gentleman's remark. There is an appropriation of $490,000 for the erection of a fire-proof academic building, and also an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of another building to be used for a gymnasium as indicated by the language of the paragraph which will be found in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the statement the gentleman from South Carolina has made apply equally to both of these appropriations?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir; to both.

Mr. KILGORE. I rise to a point of order, that these appropriations are not authorized by law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That item has not yet been reached, and the point of order therefore can not be raised against it. My friend from Texas is a little too previous.

Mr. KILGORE. I thought they were under consideration.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Is this the first reading of the bill for information, or is it the reading of the bill by clauses for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading of the bill for information was dispensed with, and the bill is now being read by clauses for amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection of a fire-proof building on such site of the public grounds at West Point, N. Y., as may be designated by the Secretary of War, to accommodate all the departments of instruction of the Military Academy, to be constructed according to the plans recommended by the academic board and approved by the Secretary of War, $190,000: Provided, That plans and specifications for said building shall be prepared under the direction of the academic board and approved by the Secretary of War, which plans and specifications shall be such that when said building shall be fully completed the cost thereof shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order on that clause, that it provides for the erection of a building which has not been authorized by law.

Mr. ROGERS. In order the whole question may be passed upon, because it is a matter of some importance as a precedent, I make the additional point of order that before any public building can be constructed the matter should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds under clause 21 of Rule XI, which says:

All subjects relating to public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States other than appropriations therefor—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Whereas by the pending clause of this bill the construction of this building is provided for in the bill itself.

It not only makes the appropriation but it likewise provides the method and manner and the plans and specifications by which or through which it shall be constructed. So I hold that the point of order is not only well taken as to clause 3 of Rule XXI, which point of order has been suggested by the gentleman from Texas, but it is also good under clause 21 of Rule XI, as I have suggested, and on either ground it seems it must be sustained.

In this connection I will state to the Chair that I have sent for a ruling which was made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] in the Forty-ninth Congress, if I am not mistaken, in relation to a point of order on an amendment offered for the purpose of constructing additional reservoirs on the Government property at Hot Springs, Ark. The point of order was made against the amendment on the same ground now stated by the gentleman from Texas, by Mr. RANDALL, and was sustained by the Chair. At the same session of Congress the same point of order was made with reference to the construction of some telegraph cables upon the Rhode Island coast. I do not remember who was Chairman at that time or who made the point of order, but I believe I made it myself. At all events that point of order was also sustained upon the same ground.

Now, personally to me it is a matter of indifference what the ruling is to be, except that I think the House should be consistent in this regard, and that these precedents heretofore established ought to be observed. Moreover, in support of the point of order I may be permitted to state that there is a question of jurisdiction involved in this proposition. If preliminary to the construction of a public building the consideration of the subject should first be had by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, then that committee should consider this proposition before it is brought into the House for action. But that has not been the case here. There is no report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in support of the proposition. Here the whole construction of the building is taken out of the ordinary course adopted for the construction of such public works and placed under a board that ordinarily—or as the general practice prevails—has nothing to do with the construction of public buildings at all.

So I hold that on both grounds the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the question. The Chair has no doubt——

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the Chair proceeds with the decision of this question of order I desire to call his attention to the fact that as to the point made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], the House may certainly take upon itself the right to pass any bill without reference to a committee, if it sees proper to do so. So that there can be nothing in that objection urged by the gentleman from Arkansas.

As to the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas, it seems to me that this may be regarded as the case of a public work or building already in progress or authorized by law; and that this appropriation is simply an enlargement of the work so authorized. Under the provision of the rule which excepts "objects already in progress" this may properly be regarded as not subject to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas. I think that has been so held by Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole at various times; and it seems to me that the point of order will hardly be pressed against this provision.

Mr. ROGERS. One observation by way of reply. Of course, Mr. Chairman, if a bill were introduced into the House and were referred by the House to the Committee on Military Affairs, that committee could and should dispose of that question; because the House can change its rules or refer a bill, notwithstanding its rules, wherever it pleases. But it is not pretended that any bill has been introduced relating to this subject-matter and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. ROGERS. In what respect?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There was a bill introduced at the last session and referred to the committee which has jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. ROGERS. A bill for the construction of this building?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The very identical building; and that bill was unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. ROGERS. I have no information on that question; but if the bill were so referred to the Military Committee then the question would revert whether or not under the rules the inadvertent reference of a bill to a committee not having jurisdiction of the subject-matter could confer jurisdiction; and what I meant by an inadvertent reference is a reference without an examination of the bill by the Speaker. Of course if the reference is made by a vote of the House jurisdiction is conferred.

But on the point of order, especially that raised so clearly by the gentleman from Texas, this falls more strictly within the ruling made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole in the Forty-ninth Congress. The question there decided, as I have said, had reference to the Hot Springs property, and the whole question was discussed. There were reservoirs——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would like to ask if the gentleman is aware of the fact that in the last Congress this subject was referred to this committee, and in the annual appropriation bill provision was made for the erection of this academic building and gymnasium?

Mr. ROGERS. I was not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That was the law passed in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And for remodeling this whole building.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, and rebuilding.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not know that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And in addition to that there was a provision for the erection of a gymnasium without reference to remodeling, but a separate provision for the erection of a gymnasium.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gymnasium is not involved in this provision.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will read the language of the law of last year:

For the erection of a gymnasium for cadets.

I was simply calling the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in the Forty-ninth Congress, in this very bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy, these two items occurred, and the appropriations were made. The only reason why the buildings were not constructed under that law was because the appropriations were found inadequate, and it is for that reason we have made the appropriation in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gymnasium is not involved in this discussion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman has raised the point of order against both.

Mr. HOLMAN. That occurs in the following paragraph.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the provision relative to the academic building, as well as the gymnasium. I have read the language in regard to the gymnasium. I will read now in regard to the academic building.

Mr. ROGERS. We have not come to the gymnasium.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Texas raised the point of order on that portion of the bill. I will not avail myself of the technical point that the gentleman has not availed himself of the point of order in reference to the academic building.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the paragraph that is now under consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will not raise any trouble about that.

In the first place, for every building erected at the Military Academy since the establishment of that institution and the location of the Military Academy the appropriations have been made in the bill for the support of the Military Academy. Jurisdiction for reporting appropriations for support of the Military Academy was formerly in the Committee on Appropriations, but is now in the Military Committee, and in every bill the appropriations for buildings have been made in this appropriation bill from time immemorial. When my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and I were on the Committee on Appropriations, and we had charge of this very identical bill, he and I inserted in the bill appropriations for new buildings.

Mr. HOLMAN. No point of order was made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No one ever thought of making a point of order when jurisdiction had been immemorially conferred upon that bill to provide appropriations for the erection or repairs on any buildings for the Academy. It is the first time in the history of the American Congress that any one has ever attempted to deprive the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Military Affairs of the right to make appropriations for the purpose of supporting that Academy.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will read that paragraph.

Mr. ROGERS. I will resume the floor unless we can have the language of the paragraph read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will read that paragraph, so that we can see what it says in regard to the remodeling and rebuilding.

Mr. ROGERS. I am willing to let the gentleman read the paragraph about these new buildings.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will read all of that paragraph. In the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, in a bill making appropriations for the Military Academy, occurred these two items:

For the erection of a gymnasium for cadets, and for repairs and alterations to present gymnasium building, $35,000, to be immediately available.

For remodeling and building the academic building, putting an additional story thereon, and rendering it fire-proof and suitable for section-rooms for instruction of cadets, $70,000, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, upon plans and detailed specifications, to be approved by the academic board.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, in discussing this question I will refer to the text of the bill, and I shall be very brief.

For the erection of a fire-proof building on such site of the public grounds at West Point, N. Y., as may be designated by the Secretary of War.

It will be observed that this is a new building entirely, to be erected on a site which is to be selected by the Secretary of War.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman is mistaken. It is to be erected on the site at present occupied by the academic building, and the materials in the old building are to be worked up into the new.

Mr. ROGERS. I read from the bill the gentleman prepared, and I supposed it was properly prepared. I assume the facts stated in this bill are correct. I will observe, as being appropriate to what the gentleman has just said, that when discussing a point of law raised by the record, you are not permitted to discuss matters dehors the record. The bill reads:

For the erection of a fire-proof building on such site of the public grounds at West Point, N. Y., as may be designated by the Secretary of War, to accommodate all the departments of instruction of the Military Academy, to be constructed according to the plans recommended by the academic board and approved by the Secretary of War, $490,000: Provided, That plans and specifications for said building shall be prepared under the direction of the academic board and approved by the Secretary of War, which plans and specifications shall be such that when said building shall be fully completed the cost thereof shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this is not a proper designation of what is intended to be done, then it is no fault of mine. This is a proper description. It is a new building, lock, stock, and barrel, and it is not proposed to be erected where any particular building was. It is a new site, a new building in substance, and a round sum is appropriated for the building.

Mr. LYNCH. With the ramrod thrown in.

Mr. ROGERS. With the ramrod as well, as is suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania. In a clause of the appropriation bill referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]—

For remodeling and rebuilding the academic building—

That is a building already in existence; and for—putting an additional story on and rendering it fire-proof and suitable for section-rooms for instruction of cadets, $70,000, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, upon plans and detailed specifications to be approved by the academic board—

I should not hesitate one moment to say that that was clearly within the power of the Military Committee; but these items are totally different.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Read the second paragraph that you have been reserving the point of order upon.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from Illinois is entirely under misapprehension. He thinks that that section of the bill relating to the gymnasum has been read and the point of order made upon it. I am discussing only the first paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, it is simply a question under the rules as to whether this is in order, and permit me to say that I feel no interest in the matter beyond having the rules sustained and the jurisdiction of committees preserved.

I am willing to concede that perhaps the latter point made by me about the first rule may not be sound; I am not sure as to that; but it is important for us to know whether or not this committee have the right jurisdiction under the rules to go out and construct a public building in toto, starting with the very foundation of it, without any authority of law for its construction, and I make the point for the purpose of having that question determined.

Now, I want to allude for a minute to the matter at the Hot Springs reservation, as illustrating this case. In that instance there were reservoirs built; they were in operation, they were inadequate, and hundreds of thousands of gallons of water that ought to have been used were running to waste. Under those circumstances I offered an amendment to one of the appropriation bills providing for the construction of additional reservoirs, and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, on that state of facts, after a full discussion upon a point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], held that the amendment was out of order because it was violative of clause 3 of Rule XXI. If that be true, how much more is this out of order when it is proposed to construct an absolutely new building at a cost to the Government of $600,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am indifferent as to what the rule is, but I want the House to either overrule these precedents upon a full discussion of the question, or else let us adhere to the line of decisions heretofore made.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, just a word in reply to the gentleman from Arkansas. I submit, sir, that the appropriation bill now under consideration really proposes no new legislation. Substantially, we have simply copied the appropriation bill of the last fiscal year, except that we have increased the amount deemed necessary for the repair or remodeling or rebuilding of these two structures which the academic board unanimously recommend and which the Secretary of War and the General of the Army and Military Committee approve. In addition to the fact mentioned by the honorable chairman of the Military Committee, that from time immemorial it has been understood and has been the uniform practice of the House that the Committee on Appropriations formerly had and the Committee on Military Affairs now has exclusive jurisdiction over the matter of erecting and repairing buildings at West Point, I would say that, although the language of the present bill may not be as specific as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] contends it ought to be, yet it is understood, and by all intelligent men who know anything about the topography of West Point, or who have ever been there, that the academic building can not be erected anywhere except on its present site.

Besides, sir, what is West Point but a town of many public buildings, all belonging to the Government? And if two more public buildings be added to those now in existence at the Academy the new buildings in question will be mere adjuncts to the old ones, or the total architecture of what is known as West Point.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the points of order made by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Arkansas have any force. As to the authority for rebuilding and remodeling these structures, it is found in the last act. This bill simply provides for reconstructing the building because it has been found that it can not be repaired with economy. As for the reference of the bill, they should have made the point at the time the bill was introduced. When the Speaker referred it to the Committee on Military Affairs he doubtless did so understandingly, and if there had been anything in that point it should have been made at that time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, the points of order attempted to be made upon this paragraph divide themselves under two heads. The first point is that the Military Committee have not the jurisdiction to make an appropriation for a public building. I think the gentleman from Arkansas himself [Mr. ROGERS] will not, upon reflection, hold that that position is tenable. The second point is that this is new legislation. In regard to the first point, when we seek for the foundations of the jurisdiction of the Military Committee in dealing with this bill, we follow the bill back to the time when it was in charge of the Committee on Appropriations. That entire jurisdiction, so far as it related to the Military Academy and all its branches, all its departments and all its interests, has been transferred from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman permit me to make a correction?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not now. Let me finish my statement. Now, Mr. Chairman, whatever jurisdiction the Committee on Appropriations have had in years past in reference to the Military Academy, or with reference to its maintenance and support, that jurisdiction in all its length and breadth has been transferred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to correct the gentleman, because he totally misapprehended the point that I made. I hold that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have the jurisdiction to authorize the construction of a public building, but that the Committee on Military Affairs have the right to make the appropriation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, to finish very briefly what I desire to say, if the gentleman from Arkansas will follow the history of the Military Academy from its foundation in 1802 down to the present time, he will find that in all the years that have passed the Committee on Appropriations have had the unquestioned right, authority, and jurisdiction to decide upon the construction of such new buildings as were deemed necessary to carry out the purposes of the Academy. This is not the ordinary case of erecting a public building for a post-office in a town, or for a custom-house in a city. It is simply an appropriation to give additional facilities to a national institution which has been in existence for three-quarters of a century, and in this case what is proposed is no more than the repair of an old building.

The CHAIRMAN. Without entering upon the question of the jurisdiction of one committee as related to that of any other, the Chair holds that under clause 12 of Rule XI, "to the military establishment and public defense, including the appropriation for its support and for that of the Military Academy," the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction of this matter; and therefore they have properly jurisdiction of this subject-matter as to the erection of buildings.

The Chair will cause to be read the third clause of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Without regard to the precedent cited by the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair decides that, within the meaning of the provision just read, the building proposed to be erected—"fire-proof building on site of public grounds at West Point"—is within the purview of the rule. The construction of a building is an incident to the maintenance of the Academy itself, the object being already in progress—the main object contemplated not only by the bill but by the very institution of the Academy itself.

Without reference to other decisions made from the Chair either in Committee of the Whole or otherwise, the present occupant of the chair is informed that the Speaker of the House on a former appropriation bill held that an appropriation for the construction of a new vessel was in continuation of the general object of maintaining a navy; and that decision of the Speaker "runs on all fours" with the decision which the Chair now makes when he overrules the point of order.

Mr. KILGORE. Then I move to amend by striking out all of this bill from line 9 to line 20, inclusive, on page 14.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Before the question is put on this motion I ask to say a word. During the last session I was appointed by the Speaker of the House as one of the Board of Visitors to West Point, and served in that capacity with the two gentlemen from New York [Mr. BACON and Mr. FITCH] and Senators REAGAN and CULLOM. We examined carefully into the condition of the two buildings known as the Academy building and the gymnasium. For some years I had known that the Academy board had been urging appropriations for the rebuilding of the Academy building, the gymnasium being but a part of the present Academy building, being the basement story of that building. I had read the urgent appeals made by the board on this subject, but, like my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], and my friend from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], I had often turned a deaf ear to these appeals.

It had been asserted in emphatic language that the condition of the building was such that not only was the health of the students imperiled but there was actually danger of the building tumbling in. The building is very old; and from my investigation I am convinced that not a word or a line which has been sent to us from the Academy board or from the War Department urging the erection of these two structures has been in any degree whatever exaggerated. Not only is the present condition of the Academy building, with the gymnasium, dangerous to the health and the lives of students, but it is a disgrace to the country to provide any such building to be used in connection with the education of youth. These students come from every Congressional district in the land; and the future efficiency of the Army may depend to a very large extent upon the proper education and care of those students. Hence I feel it to be a simple duty incumbent upon this Congress to appropriate every dollar asked for this purpose.

One word further and I am done. In reference to the cost of the building, I am satisfied that careful estimates have been made by those who can have no motive whatever except to subserve the public interests, and that every dollar provided for in this item of the bill is absolutely necessary for the erection of proper buildings for this purpose.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I presume that but a small number of the gentlemen who are called upon to vote on this appropriation have read the report on this subject made by the Military Committee—a report which can be obtained from the document-room. Hence it seems to me proper that a somewhat more explicit statement of the need for this building should be made.

The present Academy building at West Point was erected fifty years ago—in 1838. In its day it was a pretty fair building, being four stories high, I believe, with walls of stone. It was built upon a very peculiar style of architecture. In order to obtain space for the riding-hall in the basement story, the only support for the three upper stories consisted of wooden pillars. Of late years iron pillars have been added, and this basement story, the old riding-hall, is maintained as a gymnasium. In the last Congress an appropriation of $70,000 was made for remodeling and rebuilding this structure. Examinations were made by architects and experts with reference to the expenditure of this money, and bids were solicited. No bid was made within $30,000 of the amount appropriated. It was declared by the experts who made examination that the only way to remodel the building would be to go to work and take out this entire interior structure, because it is a mere fire-box inside. The partitions are all of wood, carried up on these wooden supports; and it was declared that the only possible way to remodel or rebuild it would be to go to work and raze everything except the exterior walls.

It was decided by the architects and experts that this could not be done for within tens of thousands of dollars of the amount appropriated. The authorities at West Point, as well as at the War Department, then took under consideration what next should be done to meet the urgent demand which was made for some change in this respect, and after a most careful examination and deliberation they came to Congress with a recommendation and asked us at the beginning of this Congress, and the appropriation was recommended by the War Department, that we should provide, not for remodeling or taking the inside out of the building and putting a new one in, but to leave it as it is, and to authorize the construction of a modern building, suitable to the purposes according to the plans of modern science and the experience of our day, with proper provision for lecture-halls, for light and ventilation, in fact, such a building as would meet the requirements of that institution. At the first session of this Congress the bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and was subsequently unanimously reported, carrying out precisely the same idea that is involved in this paragraph. That bill waited in its order upon the calendars of the House, like many other measures of importance, and I suppose is still there.

Now what are the facts in regard to that building? It was, as I have said, built about fifty years ago. It is entirely inadequate——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to have a few moments longer, with the consent of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. CUTCHEON. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, this building is entirely inadequate in capacity. The number of cadets at that institution has, of course, been largely increased, as the number of Congressional districts has been increased. It is an unventilated building, it is an unsafe building, and is actually unfitted for the occupancy of the upwards of four hundred young men whom we send there to become the leaders and instructors of our Army. If there is a public building needed in the United States to-day, and badly needed, it is a new academic building there and a gymnasium, but I will come to that part of it later on. At present I wish to confine myself to the paragraph under consideration, which refers to the Academy building alone.

In regard to this building the section-rooms and the recitation-rooms are entirely unsuited. There is no examination hall whatever. There is no place for holding annual examinations or for holding the semi-annual examinations of the graduating class. There is no place for keeping the chemical and philosophical apparatus and other apparatus employed in teaching the students, and we have no place for storing the invaluable collections which are there, embracing, among other things, models of ancient and modern fortifications, models of civil engineering structures and stone-cuttings; models of fire-arms and projectiles, showing the progress of invention and the art of war; models of drawings used for instruction in topography and reconnaissance, and many of these are of great historic value and can not be replaced; plans of campaigns and battle-maps, extensive geological and mineralogical specimens, and so on throughout a whole list of invaluable articles.

These are all stored in this old rattle-trap, non-fire-proof building, actually ready to crumble at any time—the entire structure liable to fall down, and yet it is the only place where all of this valuable apparatus and objects of great historical value can be stored.

Now, the West Point board has examined and reported favorably on this question. In the last Congress the Board of Visitors strongly recommended this structure. The Superintendent of the Academy says it is an almost absolute and immediate essential; the Secretary of War has recommended it; the General of the Army has recommended it; the Secretary has sent in his estimates, and we have reported in favor of it. In view of these statements, it seems to me, and of the facts as they exist, as the officers of the Academy have certified, there can be no reason whatever for refusing the appropriation.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. KILGORE. Is it not true that at the last session of Congress a bill was presented providing for the erection of a building not to cost over $490,000, which bill was vetoed?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, no; the bill was presented.

Mr. KILGORE. What became of it?

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is now on the Calendar. In the preceding Congress we appropriated $70,000 to remodel the building; but, as I have said, experts testified that it could not be done for anything like that amount. At the last session of this Congress the Military Committee reported the identical bill which is now inserted here in this appropriation bill?

Mr. GEAR. I would like to have read a brief extract from the report of the committee in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon careful inquiry the committee is advised that the academic building was erected in 1858, fifty years ago, to provide for the necessities of instruction at that time. Its basement, designed for a riding-school and used as such for many years, rests directly on the ground, has no means of ventilation, is damp, and therefore is not available for recitations, models, or apparatus. At present it is used as a gymnasium, for which purpose it is badly adapted and entirely too contracted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas, to strike out this paragraph.

The question was taken; and the Chair decided that the noes prevailed.

Mr. KILGORE. I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

Mr. KILGORE. I will withdraw that demand.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection of a fire-proof building on such site of the public grounds at West Point, N. Y., as may be designated by the Secretary of War, to be used as a gymnasium and fencing academy for the cadets of the United States Military Academy, to be constructed according to the plans recommended by the academic board and approved by the Secretary of War, $100,000: Provided, That plans and specifications for said building shall be prepared under the direction of the academic board and approved by the Secretary of War, which plans and specifications shall be such that when said building shall be fully completed the cost thereof shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated: Provided further, That the sums herein appropriated for erection of one building to be used by all departments of instruction and one gymnasium and fencing academy shall be immediately available after approval of this act.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order upon that clause, that there is no provision of law for the erection of that building, and hence the appropriation should not be provided here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. KILGORE. Now I move to strike out that clause of the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. McCREARY. The next bill for consideration is the bill making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States, and I hope that my friend from South Carolina will simply ask that his bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation; and that we go on with the diplomatic and consular bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I withdraw the motion that the committee rise, and move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCREARY. I call up the bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. The bill under consideration has no changes except two. The consulate at Elberfeld, Germany, is abolished, as the town is a suburb of Barmen. The compensation of the consulate at Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, is increased from $1,000 to $2,000; and that of the consulate at Matamoros reduced from $2,000 to $1,000. The whole amount appropriated by the bill is $1,440 less than the amount appropriated last year. Therefore I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any new legislation in the bill.

Mr. McCREARY. There are no changes in the bill except those to which I have referred.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are there any changes made in the law?

Mr. McCREARY. There are no changes from the bill passed last year.

There was no objection, and the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The bill was then read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. McADOO. I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman. I can not permit this bill to pass without emphasizing what I consider to be the popular demand for the abolition of our present system of diplomacy. There is much comment upon the fact that one of the great countries of Europe is unrepresented at this capital, and the Government of that country is said to have refrained from sending a minister in order to resent what they consider an insult in the return of their former minister to his home. Now, I have no doubt that 99 per cent. of the American people do not know, and do not care, whether a minister has been, or will be, sent from that country to the United States or not, and I am certain that the interests of the United States would not in any degree suffer if we did not send a single minister to any court in Europe or elsewhere.

Our people are indifferent as to whether foreign ministers come or domestic ones go, because they realize that the whole system in our day, and so far as we are concerned, is a mere playing with dead forms, a meaningless mummery, which has ceased even to amuse.

I know that I am only repeating what has been often said on this floor when I say that in this age of steam and electricity, with the frequent and ready means of communication existing between this country and the other nations of the world, the present system is obsolete. Of all things in the world the most absurd to my mind is a United States minister at a great European court. He can not compete, so far as decorations and display of tinsel and ribbons and general glitter and display are concerned, which accompany the muster of the representatives of other countries at those courts; and he comes in at the tail-end of a long procession of bespangled, bedizened, and bedecked representatives of all the nations of the world, a jackdaw among the flaming feathered birds of the tropical forests.

We send at his earnest solicitation John Smith, for indiscernible reasons, as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary to the court of the High Muckamuck of Mozambique. An envoy special, magnificent, phenomenal, and extraordinary, and a minister full of power, if not omnipotent certainly plenipotent! Is it any wonder the head of the poor man is turned? That his senses reel on this dizzy height? Hitherto to him a militia general in full uniform was a spectacle to make the assembled gods stand in awe; but the spectacular grandeur and eye-tiring magnificence of the court imperial and heaven-ordained muckamuck shades the child of war as a circus band-wagon would a push-cart. When in this mad whirl of a new existence he has succeeded in kissing the queen's toe, has been offered a bad cigar by a worse duke, has orated at the annual dinner of the Ancient and Honorable Society of Royal Clam-Diggers, and has communed on literature and law with the Fellows of the Society of Revered and Honored Fossils, has lunched with an earl, dined with a duchess, supped with a baron, and exposed his legs in silk stockings in his Majesty's drawing-room, and been told that Mozambique and not the whole of Europe is his mother country, is it any wonder that the weak-headed man, dug out of obscurity, intoxicated with flattery and empty form, begins forthwith to apologize for having been born in America, and that America—that is, the substantial brain and muscle, the real men and women of America—becomes heartily ashamed of him?

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the small coterie of flunkeys and lord lovers in our country want to go abroad and apologize for our existence as a republic, let it not be done under Government patronage. It is not so much a question of men. There are, and always have been, among our representatives at foreign courts a goodly number of able, sensible, patriotic men who are proud of their country and its institutions.

Why compete in this playing with past customs? An envoy who underwent soul-stirring perils to reach and remain at his post was no ordinary man; a minister who carried war or peace in his keeping, unchecked by the speedy communication of railroads, steam-boats, or telegraphs, was to be respected and feared. These have passed away, yet we, a republic, play with the older world in aping the language, customs, and forms of the ages when these were real and had a meaning. The master of many serfs had "the honor to be and remain the most humble, obedient servant" of the king who had hosts of slaves. Equals passed meaningless compliments to befog and impress the ignorant multitude, and the language of the court became the varnish of falsehood. The whole system in our age is a jabbering ghost that, walking by day, begets laughter and contempt instead of reverence and respect. And in this spectacular burlesque on the old heroic and chivalrous ages when form and substance kept pace, we, as a country, play such a part as to shame ourselves and make the whole performance ridiculous. Thomas Carlyle, attacking these sham observances in modern times, once said:

Is our poor English existence wholly becoming a nightmare; full of mere phantasms?

The Champion of England, cased in iron or tin, rides into Westminster Hall, "being lifted into his saddle with little assistance," and there asks if in the four quarters of the world, under the cope of heaven, is any man or demon that dare question the right of this king? Under the cope of heaven no man makes intelligible answer—as several men ought already to have done. Does not this champion, too, know the world; that it is a huge imposter, and bottomless inanity, thatched over with bright cloth and other ingenious tissues? Him let us leave there, questioning all men and demons.

I regret that the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] now occupies the chair, because if he were on the floor he would doubtless add force to what I am saying. He has had experience as a minister abroad, and while he undoubtedly reflected credit upon American wit, humor, and statesmanship at the court of the great Sultan, I am sure he would join with me in saying that the system is an obsolete one, which is totally unfitted to this age and to the character of our institutions. Why, Mr. Chairman, for twenty-five years past it has been a common saying among the people of the United States that we have not had a thorough and genuine American representative at one of the principal courts of Europe where we have interests at stake, and taking the samples which both the great political parties have sent there I am convinced that we shall never get, for practical purposes, a really good, genuine, out and out, in and in American minister at the court of St. James until we send a lay figure there, its legs made of good Alabama pig-iron, its arms of California live-oak, its abdominal recess filled with Mississippi cotton, its head of Eastern granite, and its auricular appendages tasseled ears of Illinois corn. [Laughter.] Such a lay figure would certainly do us as much good as has been done by any minister we have sent for the past quarter of a century to that or any other court in the world.

Why should the hard-working people, the honest producing people of this country, be compelled to pay for these things? This play costs something, and is only a play. The taxes are not rained into the Treasury like the manna from heaven. The money that fills your vaults at the other end of the avenue is stained with the sweat and the blood of the honest producing people of this country, and what right have we, as their Representatives, to take that money and pay it out in large salaries and bonuses to our ministers at foreign courts, in order that they may attempt to compete in ridiculous display with the representatives of the monarchies of Europe and Asia? I believe in being as dignified and proper as other nations, but our absence would be a potential protest against the resurrection and preservation of an absurd pomp in which we can not take part without stultifying ourselves. I am not an iconoclast. The symbols of the past preach to the present, but this game of diplomacy, besides being useless to us, teaches only deceit and falsehood. The motive of the play is bad; the language belongs to another age.

The United States consular system is absolutely necessary, I will admit; and a good consular service can do all our business, help our commerce, and represent us officially in all parts of the world. If there is any portion of our public service to which the so-called civil-service reform doctrine applied it would be to our consular service, that we might have to represent this country abroad a trained and experienced body of men, who know their own country, its institutions, and its wants, and understand its commerce. I must say that it looked to me inconsistent—and I dislike to be personal in this respect—that one of the great fathers of the present civil-service system, who helped in the Congress of the United States to plant it upon the statute-book, and himself to-day a minister plenipotentiary from this country, did not extend it to the one branch of the civil service that it could benefit, above all others, if it benefit any, to wit, the consular service, where experienced and trained men would have something to say as to what is necessary, and where it might have been of value, instead of extending it to tide-waiters, charwomen, messenger boys, and the men who open packages and boxes in the custom-houses of the United States. I have no desire, however, to go into any discussion at this time of the present civil-service law. Let us reform this diplomatic and consular service. Let us kill each sham in turn. What a grand world this will be when a sham will find no resting place on the whole earth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. MCCREARY. It is not my purpose to discuss our diplomatic service or present the merits of those who represent us abroad. Their faithful performance of their duties makes this unnecessary, and the brief time allowed for debate and my desire to conclude the consideration of the bill this evening compel me to speak briefly. Attacks have been made periodically in the House of Representatives on our foreign service, and the criticisms of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] are in many respects of the same tenor as those made by others at previous sessions of Congress, but nevertheless our diplomatic service has continued for a century, and will probably continue in some form as long as our Republic lasts.

There are doubtless defects in our foreign service, but I do not believe our diplomatic service should be abolished. Many able and accomplished gentlemen have represented us abroad as ministers, who, in my judgment, have reflected credit on the United States. The distinguished Chairman of this committte [Mr. COX] rendered conspicuous service as a foreign minister. I might name many others if my time permitted who are now in service or who served with distinction in the years that have passed. The argument presented by my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], while it indicates that he is not pleased with what has occurred in Great Britain, does not, in my opinion, in the least degree justify the abolition of our diplomatic service.

There should probably be a revision of the laws regulating our diplomatic and consular service, and if the gentleman wishes to discuss that subject he will have an opportunity when the bill now on the Calendar for the revision of our consular system comes before the House. At present we are considering the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which seeks to appropriate money to pay the salaries of our ministers, consuls, commercial agents, clerks, and such other expenses as are necessary, and I hope we will proceed without delay. Nearly all the nations of the world send their diplomatic and consular officers to our country, and this, the greatest Republic in the world, should send diplomatic and consular officers wherever they can advance the dignity and the commerce of our great nation or be of benefit to American citizens.

Mr. MCADOO. I do not desire to detain the committee, but have just one word to say in reply to my honorable friend from Kentucky. I want to emphasize the absurdity of the present diplomatic service as applied to our institutions. The whole play, the very terms of it, the very ribbons and feathers and forms of it, and the mummery of it, pertain to a past age. I am told that in one of the Western newspapers during the late campaign one of the ordinary forms of diplomatic courtesy between the representatives of two countries was kept at the head of the paper with a view of presenting the present Secretary of State in a sycophantic and snobbish position towards a diplomat representing England here. Of course this was untrue and absurd, but it shows how ridiculous this game is in a country like ours. The very terms, the sign manual, of the system are as obsolete and dead as possible, and yet it is retained in our country.

If every court in Europe refrained from sending ministers here the mass of the American people would not care a handful of last year's chestnuts. It might possibly annoy a few snobs who in their opinions, if they have any, as much represent the American people as they do the natives of Zanzibar.

I am not, as my friend suggests, applying these remarks to Great Britain; I am not making any invidious distinction between Great Britain, Russia, China, or any other country; but am speaking of the principle at stake in this question broadly presented. I repeat that this so-called diplomacy is absolutely obsolete and dead among the progressive peoples of the world; and it belongs to us, an intelligent republican people, to set an example by abolishing it, showing to the world that it is a service which is useless in this day of steam and electricity, that the business of nations now, like the business of individuals, is conducted on plain common-sense methods and principles, and that our consular service could be so employed.

Mr. MCCREARY. It is now getting near 5 o'clock, and I hope we will continue the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey withdraws the formal amendment.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MCCREARY. I move that the committee rise and report to the House the two appropriation bills which have now been disposed of.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman to permit the Committee of the Whole to remain in session in order that the fortification bill may be considered this afternoon. It is a very short bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am of opinion that we shall not have time to-day to dispose of the fortification bill. There are some points of order to be raised on that bill, which will take some time for their discussion and determination. I think it better, therefore, that the Committee of the Whole should rise now, in order that the House may dispose of the two appropriation bills already acted on. Then, if it is desirable, the House can again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. If there should be any trouble in regard to the fortification bill, I will myself move that the committee rise in time for the House to pass the two appropriation bills already acted on.

Mr. MCCREARY. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that we can pass these two bills in a few minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is my purpose to make a point of order on some of the provisions of the fortification bill; and it will take some time to dispose of that measure. I think, therefore, we had better rise, so as to pass the two bills already acted on.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask a vote on my motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and the bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TILLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House next proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCCREARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The Clerk will read the title of the first bill in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11917) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. ADAMS. In proceeding to the consideration of this bill by paragraphs there is no adequate opportunity to have the House understand the policy of the committee; and I see by the report——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that dispensing with the first reading of the bill does not cut off general debate.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sums of money herein provided for be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

Preservation and repair of fortifications: For the protection, preservation, and repair of, and preparation of plans for fortifications, $100,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, the item immediately following the first item of this bill is one on which I wish to raise a question of order; and the point which I wish to discuss is applicable to every succeeding item of the bill. I have been unable since the bill has been taken up to get a copy of it, and therefore I am compelled to follow it simply from the reading.

Mr. Chairman, the rules of the House have conferred on the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction over appropriations for fortifications, or, to state the matter rather more broadly, have given that committee jurisdiction over all subjects relating to fortifications. The word "fortification" has a well-defined meaning in the dictionaries, and is no doubt sufficiently understood by the Chair and by the members of the House without any definition by me. The bill which we have now under consideration contains in its first item all that can be found in it relating to the question of fortifications. I refer to the item—

For the protection, preservation, and repair of, and preparation of plans for fortifications, $100,000.

Every other item of the bill relates to armament, relates to providing guns and means of defense for the seacoast. There is no other item in the bill relating directly to fortifications.

The CHAIRMAN. The subsequent paragraphs have not yet been reached, and the point of order can be made against them as they are reached.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is that?

A MEMBER. The Chair has decided the gentleman can not cross the bridge until he has come to it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, we have reached one bridge and I have crossed it, and it is in reference to that bridge that I have made the point of order. The first item is for the—

Preservation and repair of fortifications: For the protection, preservation, and repair of, and preparation of plans for fortifications, $100,000.

All the other paragraphs relate to something less than fortifications, and have no right under the rules to be included in this bill. I make the point of order that the paragraph "torpedoes for harbor defense" is not in order upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph has not yet been read by the Clerk.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I supposed the Clerk in reading the bill had read that paragraph. It commences on the first page of the bill and goes down and includes line 6 on the second page.

The CHAIRMAN. That has not been read at all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will wait until the Clerk reads it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Torpedoes for harbor defense: For the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them for closing the channels leading to our principal seaports; for needful casements and cable galleries to render it possible to operate submarine mines; for continuing torpedo experiments and for practical instruction of engineer troops in the details of the service, $330,000.

For torpedo-shed at San Francisco Harbor, $22,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against what the Clerk has just read. Now, I have already stated that the only jurisdiction conferred by the rules of the House upon the Committee on Appropriations in relation to the military establishment of the country is to make appropriations for subjects relating to fortifications.

Clause 12 of Rule XI is as follows:

12. To the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriation for its support, and for that of the Military Academy: to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Now, then, as I have already stated, only the first paragraph in this bill relates to fortifications. It is there provided:

Preservation and repair of fortifications: For the protection, preservation, and repair of, and preparation of plans for fortifications, $100,000.

The item which has just been read in reference to torpedoes for harbor defense has no relation to fortifications at all, but provides:

Torpedoes for harbor defense: For the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them for closing the channels leading to our principal seaports; for needful casements and cable galleries to render it possible to operate submarine mines; for continuing torpedo experiments and for practical instruction of engineer troops in the details of the service, $330,000.

It will be seen, therefore, it has nothing to do with fortifications. It is the planting of submarine mines. These are never planted in fortifications themselves, but they are planted away from the fortifications. They are usually planted in the harbors to prevent the entrance of the enemy's ships. They have nothing more to do with fortifications, therefore, than the gun or the uniform with which the soldier is equipped.

Mr. REED. Let me interrupt the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Certainly.

Mr. REED. What is the aggregate of appropriation provided for in this bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Eight hundred and ninety thousand dollars.

Mr. REED. A tremendous bill for the fortification of a country of this size! [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My purpose, Mr. Chairman, is not on this occasion to discuss the merits of the bill, but merely to have the point of order which I have raised determined, not only for the present but for the future action of the House itself. So far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, it has no pride of opinion in reference to the matter. It desires that the House in the transaction of its business shall be consistent in what it does. It desires to see the jurisdiction conferred by the rules of the House exercised by the committees upon which that jurisdiction has been conferred. It does not desire to see jurisdiction exercised by committees upon which the rules have not conferred it. In other words, it asks that the rules shall be executed as they are and not in any different manner than in accordance with their provisions.

Now, the only jurisdiction conferred by the rules in regard to fortifications on the Committee on Appropriations is simply for the preservation and repair of fortifications, which are provided for, as I have already stated, in the first section of the bill. There is not one word in the rules conferring upon that Committee on Appropriations any power to make appropriations, to provide armament for these fortifications, to provide for paying the expenses of maintaining them, to provide for furnishing them with guns, but simply for the preservation and repair of the fortifications themselves. Now, when you look at clause 12, Rule

XI, you will there see that the jurisdiction conferred upon the Committee on Military Affairs is in reference to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support, and for that of the Military Academy.

The question is a plain and simple one and no one can misunderstand it. The Committee on Military Affairs has exclusive jurisdiction over the question, and not the Committee on Appropriations. That was the decision at the last session of Congress, and it has also been the decision during the present session. I have before me a copy of the resolution reported from the Ways and Means Committee referring the President's message, and that in the most specific and pointed manner refers this question to the Committee on Military Affairs, leaving no ground for controversy. It is there declared that armaments for fortifications and seacoast defense shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and not to the Committee on Appropriations. Such was the resolution reported from the Committee on Ways and Means under the instructions of the House to provide for the distribution of the subjects discussed in the message of the President to the various committees of the House. Here is the resolution, signed by the Clerk, whereby the subject of the armament for fortifications and the public defense was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On the 6th day of last December Mr. McMILLIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following privileged resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to Congress at the present session as relates to the Army of the United States, including appropriations therefor, and to providing an armament for defense on the seacoast, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The message of the President of the United States discussed the various means of providing a system of defense for the seacoast, and amongst them was discussed the question of providing torpedoes. Included also in the same message was a reference to submarine mines.

I insist, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that this is a clear-cut, square question upon which the point of order is raised and on which I ask a ruling of the Chair. It is a matter of but little concern to the Committee on Military Affairs or to any member of that committee as to what may be the ruling in this regard. It is simply a sense of duty that impels me as well as the Military Committee to insist that the House shall be consistent with its own rules, and with its reference of this subject to that committee by the resolution to which I have just referred, and that the question so referred shall be left to the consideration and disposition of that committee.

I do not care, sir, to occupy the attention of the committee unnecessarily, and having stated simply, plainly, and briefly the ground on which I base the point of order, I will say nothing more upon the question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I was not present during the last session of Congress when this question was chiefly discussed, although I was present during a portion of the discussion. It stands, it seems to me, in an altogether different attitude to-day from the position it occupied at that time, because this question now raised, of which committee shall have jurisdiction and report appropriations for the armament of our seacoast defenses, has been taken in hand by the House itself, has been definitely decided, and it has referred the entire matter, by a resolution of the House, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

But, sir, in the few moments that I will occupy the floor at this time I shall not discuss the question upon that narrow basis, but rather upon the more general ground of the principle underlying our rules and procedure here.

Formerly the entire matter of appropriations for the public defense was in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations. In the Forty-ninth Congress, by an amendment to the rules of the House, the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations was segregated, and portions of that jurisdiction were distributed to various other committees of the House. Among the appropriation committees so created was the Committee on Military Affairs, and to it was assigned the duty of making appropriations for certain purposes in addition to its former jurisdiction; so that by a reference to the rules as at present existing, the jurisdiction of that committee now embraces:

All legislation relating to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support—

That is, the support of the military establishment and the public defense—and for that of the Military Academy.

The words "the military establishment and the public defense" include all matters that relate to the military arm of the Government. The House has carved out of this wide and general field a narrower field, which is called the field of fortifications, and has committed that to the Committee on Appropriations. All the remainder of the military establishment and the public defense has been committed to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Now, sir, my first proposition is this: that as the broader, the general and universal field is committed to the Committee on Military Affairs, that is, the whole military establishment and the entire public defense, and then a minor and lesser field is carved out and committed to another committee, that the language by which this segregation is made must be strictly construed; and that when the House has committed to the Appropriations Committee a certain portion of the field, namely, that of fortifications, that term must be taken in its literal sense, because it is in qualification of the wider and more general jurisdiction which is conferred on the Military Committee. I think there can be no question about that as a matter of interpretation.

Then the question arises, what is meant by the language of the rule where, when it says that to the Committee on Appropriations, by subdivision 3 of Rule XI, which confers jurisdiction upon the Committee on Appropriations to provide for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, and for sundry civil expenses, are also included the words "for fortifications?" I say, what is meant when the rule says, in this paragraph, that the Committee on Appropriations shall have jurisdiction of matters relating to fortifications? To determine that we must turn the light on by determining what is meant by the terms "military establishment" and "the public defense." What is the military establishment? The military establishment relates to all permanent military forces of the United States. It embraces, first, the infantry arm; second, the cavalry arm; third, the artillery arm of the service, and fourth, the engineers. All matters pertaining to the military establishment of the United States, the four branches of the military establishment I have named, are committed to the Committee on Military Affairs. That carries with it all matters relating to the equipment of these four arms, to the provisioning, to the supplying, to the clothing, and the transportation, and everything of that character. Now, among the four arms of the service each one has its own appropriate armament. The infantry has its muskets or rifles; the cavalry its carbines, revolvers, and sabers; the field artillery its field-guns, and the heavy artillery the siege-guns and coast-defense armament. I maintain, sir, that the armament of the artillery, the equipment of the field artillery, and the equipment of the heavy artillery for coast defenses is just as much a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs as is the matter of supplying the Army with clothing, or with provisions, or with transportation, or as the matter of manufacturing arms for the infantry or cavalry.

The paragraph of the bill which we have now reached relates to torpedoes. Now, the torpedo system of the United States is eminently and manifestly a part of the regular military establishment. It pertains to the engineer branch of the military establishment. The torpedo is no fortification. The torpedo has nothing to do with fortifications in any proper sense of the word. A torpedo is an arm. A torpedo is just as much an arm as a musket, a rifle, a saber, a field-gun, or any other arm with which the Army is equipped. It is an arm which may be planted on shore in a water channel, and it may be operated by electricity or by steam, or in any other way; but in whatever way it is operated it is by the Engineer Corps of the United States. We have a post at Willets Point, outside of New York Harbor, where the Engineer Corps is drilled from month to month and year to year in the torpedo system of the United States.

Now, my position, Mr. Chairman, is this: that it is exclusively a matter of armament, and not of fortifications. In the second place, that it is a matter pertaining to the military establishment of the United States and the arming of the military of the United States, and for nothing else. My third position is that it has been expressly and definitively committed to the Military Committee by a solemn resolution of this House, and it belongs to them, and to nobody else.

But, Mr. Chairman, let us look a little further at this matter of fortifications. I concede that all matters of fortifications are committed by the laws of this House to the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, I hold in my hand volume 7 of the American Encyclopedia. Under the head of "Fortifications," in the special acceptation of the term, it defines fortifications into three classes: permanent fortifications, siege fortifications, and field fortifications. I have read this article from beginning to end, and I find that it does not speak at all of armaments. So that armament is not necessarily part of fortifications.

A few years ago, in the time of old General Totten, the Congress of the United States decided on the fortification of our ports. A plan of fortification was prepared, was inaugurated, and carried out at a cost of more than $50,000,000. Such fortifications as Fortress Monroe and Fort La Fayette in New York Harbor and many other forts along our coast were built.

Now, all matters as to fortifications, under the rules as they exist to-day, go to the Committee on Appropriations; but when it comes to arming these fortifications; when it comes, in other words, to arming the troops that are to occupy the fortifications—because it is the troops that are armed, and not the fortifications—then that matter of arming the troops belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs under the order of this House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have reached but one paragraph of the bill. In regard to the first paragraph no question can be made that relates to fortifications. We have already determined that all matters pertaining to the armament of the Army is committed to the Committee on Military Affairs. But if you will cast your eye down this bill a little further you will find here appropriations for field artillery—for 3.2-inch guns, the lightest kind of field artillery, and you will find appropriations here for field carriages for such guns. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations assume to take into its jurisdiction this entire matter of arming the Army by providing the field artillery for the Army of the United States, and taking that right away from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. Chairman, this may not be a very important question. The important question is that the work be done. But in an orderly transaction of the business of this House I insist that the Committee on Military Affairs shall be permitted to report here and have charge of the measures that this House has entrusted to it. It is not a mere matter of jealousy between committees. It is a matter for the orderly division and transaction of the business of this House. I could say a great deal more about this question, but the hour is late and I do not desire to consume the time of the House upon this point of order. But it is a point of order that will be renewed upon each point where it is pertinent. The House conferred that jurisdiction on the Committee on Military Affairs and can take it away, but I think it ought not to do so without some reason.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think I am like the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in this connection. He says he has no feeling on this subject. I fear if I said so I would not do justice to my frankness. Enforced absence kept me from the House when this subject was discussed at the last session. I had supposed it was finally settled. It seems now to rest upon a resolution distributing the President's message.

The strong point at which we should look, and, it seems to me, the only one that should have weight with the Chairman of this committee in ruling upon this question, is, what authority or power or jurisdiction did the Committee on Appropriations have before the separation of the appropriation bills? It is not disputed that all the subjects of appropriation to which reference has been made in this connection then attached to the Committee on Appropriations, but the rules were changed and jurisdiction was given to the Committee on Military Affairs of a portion of the expenditures of the public money in connection with the Army. The Committee on Rules, which reported those changes, settled and fixed beyond controversy, in my judgment, what was intended by that committee in recommending the change, and the House, by following the recommendation of the committee, confirmed that interpretation. I read from a volume of committee reports belonging to the Committee on Appropriations, page 11 of the report of the Committee on Rules. This is what the committee say:

The fortification bill, being one relating jointly to Army and Navy fortifications and the general public defense, is left with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Who made that statement?

Mr. RANDALL. It is a part of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What does the rule itself say?

Mr. RANDALL. The rule has been in operation, and, under that rule, jurisdiction has been claimed by the Committee on Appropriations, and the decision of this very House sustained that claim at the last session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will my friend do the House the justice to have the rule itself read? because I believe that the individual who drew that report misconceived the nature of the rule which was being reported, and certainly the rule itself ought to have more weight with the House than the report of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I am only telling you what in my judgment was intended by the report of the Committee on Rules, and we have operated under that rule several sessions.

Mr. MAISH. If the report of the Committee on Rules is to determine this question, will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations inform us what is the difference between "general public defense," the language used in the report, and "public defense," the language used in the rule which the same committee reported?

Mr. RANDALL. The action of the Committee on Appropriations in taking jurisdiction of this subject shows what was the meaning of the rule, and the House affirmed it. Never, until the last session, was any question raised against the Committee on Appropriations exercising that power, and when the question was raised it was settled by a vote of this House in favor of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAISH. The gentleman misapprehends my question. Rule 11 provides that to the Committee on Military Affairs shall be referred all matters pertaining to the military establishment and the public defense. Now the gentleman has just read an extract from the report of the Committee on Rules, which says that that matter shall belong to the Committee on Appropriations, and I want him to explain whether the matters pertaining to the "public defense"——

Mr. RANDALL (interposing). That is a very plain question, and easily answered.

Mr. MAISH. Very well, I would like to have it answered.

Mr. RANDALL. The practice of the House settles that question. The practice of the House settles it that under the rule the Committee on Appropriations have jurisdiction, and they have taken that jurisdiction by the action of the House in this and in former Congresses. So that the gentleman's opinion, or mine (which, it seems, differ), has not that force and effect which the precedents established by the House have and should have.

Mr. MAISH. But still the gentleman does not answer my question. The rule provides that the Committee on Military Affairs shall have jurisdiction in relation to the "public defense," and the report which the gentleman has quoted says not.

Mr. RANDALL. I say that this report of the Committee on Rules made plain what was the intention in making the change of rule; that it shows what was taken from the Committee on Appropriations and what was left; and I say, moreover, that the action of the House itself in construing the rules confirms the position of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. The House took action by adopting the rule. The Committee on Rules made a report, but the House did not adopt that report; it adopted the rule. The House had nothing to say about the report. It has not affirmed or indorsed that report. The House simply takes action upon the rules reported by the committee. The observation which the gentleman quotes from the report of the committee is not an official act of the House; it is simply an opinion of the committee. Now, I want to ask him whether the voice of the House, speaking through the rule, ought not to have more force and weight than a simple recommendation of the Committee on Rules?

Mr. RANDALL. I have said so. I have said that the gentleman from Illinois and I might possibly differ in regard to the construction of the rules, but that the action of the House itself has settled the question and has settled it in favor of the Committee on Appropriations having jurisdiction in this connection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. When did the House so determine?

Mr. RANDALL. In the last Congress, by passing bills that came from the Committee on Appropriations, and in the first session of this Congress the question was settled directly by a decision, though I, unfortunately, was not able to be with my colleagues in their gallant fight for the rights of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say to my friend [Mr. RANDALL], who was not here, that the decision of the Chair on the occasion to which he refers was made upon the ground that the matter in question had been sent to the Committee on Appropriations by the reference of the estimates; but here we stand in an entirely different situation, the House having by a unanimous vote referred this question to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. I have read what the Chair decided at that time; and I do not think he held as stated——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My recollection is that that is the effect of the decision.

Mr. RANDALL. I was not here, but I read the decision; and I differ from the gentleman.

I do not rest at all upon what the Committee on Rules says, except as a view of the question which ought to have force in this House as interpretative evidence.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The best evidence is the rule itself.

Mr. RANDALL. But I do rely on the action of the House; and I submit that the pro forma resolution coming in here from the Committee on Ways and Means, and having no relation to the rule at all, was never intended by that committee to be the subject of any such nice or ingenious construction as is now sought to be put upon its language.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have no feeling as to the particular committee from which this subject-matter should be reported; but in view of the fact that stress has been laid upon the resolution reported from the Committee on Ways and Means in regard to the reference of this subject to the Committee on Military Affairs, I think it but just to that committee to say that the language used in that resolution providing for the reference of the President's message is not new language to this House in connection with the reference of this subject-matter. By turning to the RECORD of the Forty-ninth Congress, page 613——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Perhaps I misapprehend the gentleman. Does he deny that the resolution which I have read is the one which he himself presented to this House?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not deny it at all. It is the resolution we introduced; but I say it is in form the same resolution which had been introduced previously. That this is no new reference I will prove to the gentleman from Illinois by reading a clause from the resolution adopted in the Forty-ninth Congress referring to various committees the subjects embraced in the President's message.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am very happy to have the gentleman read that, because it strengthens my position.

Mr. McMILLIN. As I stated in the beginning, I have no anxiety in this matter except that the facts in connection with it shall be fully before the House. This is the language of the resolution adopted in the Forty-ninth Congress as given on page 613 of the RECORD:

That so much as relates to the Army of the United States and to Department of War, including appropriations therefor, and to providing an armament for the defense of the seacoast, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Hence it appears that this committee, by reason of this reference, has no new authority, no authority which it had not in the Forty-ninth Congress; and, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it would seem that the House at the first session of this Congress did not conceive this to be a precedent giving jurisdiction. We simply copied the resolution adopted in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, for more than fifty years provisions similar to those now under consideration have been a part of the fortification bill reported by the proper committee to this House. In the first session of the present Congress this point was raised upon the appropriation of money for the purchase of steel; and after deliberation, after argument pro and con by those favoring the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and those opposed to it, it was determined by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole that this subject-matter was entirely and exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and was properly embraced in the fortification bill emanating from that committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend from Texas certainly does not insist that for fifty years this subject-matter has been in the fortification bill——

The CHAIRMAN. As the hour fixed for the adjournment of the House has arrived, the Committee of the Whole must rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11917) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House stands adjourned until Monday next.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 14, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

JOHN P. JONES, a Senator from the State of Nevada, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting copy of a letter from the Chief of Ordnance, showing that the sum of $2,550, in addition to the appropriation for "Rock Island bridge, 1889, $9,000," will be required during the present fiscal year for care, preservation, and operating the draw of the bridge; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the commission authorized by law to negotiate with the band of Ute Indians of Southern Colorado for such modification of their treaty and other rights and such exchange of their reservation as may be deemed desirable by such Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho, remonstrating against the admission of the Territory of Utah into the Union as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPOONER presented a memorial of the Turnverein Milwaukee, of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the passage of the Senate bill to secure to the people the enjoyment of the first day of the week, commonly known as the Lord's day, as a day of rest, and to promote its observance as a day of religious worship, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill (S. 3809) extending the provisions of the Revised Statutes relating to town sites; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLUMB. I am also instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3665) to provide for the sale of certain lands, to report it adversely, the subject-matter of it being embraced in the original bill which I have just reported. I move that this bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3706) to establish two additional land districts in the State of Nebraska, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3810) to establish two additional land districts in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the memorial and findings of fact by the Court of Claims in the case of Flora A. Darling, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

LANDS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3804) for the relief of the inhabitants of the town of Flagstaff, county of Yavapai, Territory of Arizona, to report it with amendments. As it is a matter of public interest, I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, line 5, after the word "occupants," to strike out the words "and inhabitants," and in line 7, after the word "twenty," to insert "one;" so as to make the section read:

That the probate judge of Yavapai County, Territory of Arizona, be, and is hereby, authorized to enter, in trust for the occupants of the town of Flagstaff, for town-site purposes, the south half of section 16, township 21 north, range 7 east, Gila and Salt River meridian in the Territory of Arizona, subject to the provisions of sections 2387, 2388, and 2389 of chapter 8 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to town-sites.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 6, after the word "section," to strike out "or three hundred and twenty acres;" in line 7, after the word "made," to insert the words "in a body;" and in line 8, after the word "subdivisions," to strike out "and contiguous;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That upon the passage of this act the Territory of Arizona, through its proper officer, shall be, and is hereby, authorized to select as indemnity for said land, and in full satisfaction thereof, and for the purpose stated in section 1946 of the Revised Statutes, one half-section of public lands at any office in said Territory, said selections to be made in a body according to legal subdivisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the occupants of the town of Flagstaff, county of Yavapai, Territory of Arizona."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890; and

A bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of the annual volumes of the Astronomical Observations of the Naval Observatory for 1886, 1887, and 1888; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5985) to increase the pensions of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardener, and Mrs. Lilla May Pavy to $30 per month.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 104) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1887, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

WISCONSIN WATER-RESERVE LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3782) to amend an act entitled "An act declaring that certain water-reserve lands in the State of Wisconsin are and have been subject to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States,' approved March 3, 1875," approved September 10, 1888, to report it without amendment. The effect of the bill is simply to correct a date named in an act passed during the first session of the present Congress, and as it is a somewhat important matter with reference to rights that have been initiated under the law, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 3811) to secure to the several bands of Indians of the Sioux Nation in Dakota separate reservations, and a relinquishment of the remainder of said reservation to the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3812) for the relief of J. F. Bailey & Co., and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3813) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Wehr; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3814) granting an increase of pension to Thomas F. Sanford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3815) granting a pension to Elizabeth T. Pyle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3816) granting a pension to Thomas Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3817) reviving the grade of lieutenant-general in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives, on Wednesday, the 13th day of February, 1889, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirement of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States; and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that two persons be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate, and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses assembled, as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States; and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A bill (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890; and

A bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment, offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2510, line 2690, after the word "plates," it is proposed to strike out:

Angles, beams, and bolts, and copper and composition metal which may be necessary for the construction and equipment of vessels built in the United States for foreign account.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Sheets, angles, beams, and bolts, deck and bulb beams, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, and copper and composition metal, forgings of iron or steel, castings of iron, steel, or composition, flues and tubes of iron, steel, or composition, machinery and parts of machines, and all other articles of foreign production necessary for the construction and equipment of steamers or other vessels built in the United States for foreign account.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from Delaware proceeds, if he will permit me, I desire this morning to submit an amendment to the bill with a view of having it printed and allowing it to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. GRAY. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to offer an amendment, which is proposed to be inserted on page 86.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the amendment had better be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield for the purpose of allowing the amendment to be read?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 11, on page 86 of the Senate substitute, line 57, after the word "approval," it is proposed to insert two new sections, as follows:

SEC.—. Until April, 1900, there shall be paid to the producer of sugar, testing not less than 80 degrees by the polariscope, from beets, sorghum, or sugar-cane grown within the United States, a bounty of 1 cent per pound under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe. The producer of said sugar, to be entitled to said bounty, shall have first filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a notice of the place for production, with a general description of the machinery and methods to be employed by him, and with an estimate of the amount of sugar proposed to be produced in the next ensuing year, and an application for a license to so produce, to be accompanied by a bond in a penalty and with sureties to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, conditioned that he will faithfully observe all rules and regulations that shall be prescribed for such manufacture and production of sugar, and shall have been duly licensed.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, upon receiving the application and bond hereinbefore provided for, shall issue to the applicant a license to produce sugar from sorghum, beets, or sugar-cane grown in the United States, at the place and with the machinery and by the methods described in the application; but said license shall not extend beyond one year from the date thereof.

No bounty shall be paid to any person engaged in refining sugars imported into the United States, or sugar produced in the United States upon which the bounty herein provided for has already been paid or applied for, nor to any person except upon sugar produced by such person from sorghum, beets, or sugar-cane grown in the United States. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall from time to time make all needful rules and regulations for the manufacture of sugar from sorghum, beets, or sugar-cane grown in the United States, and shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, exercise supervision and inspection of the manufacture thereof.

The bounty herein provided for, including the expenses incident to the payment thereof, shall be paid from the duties collected and paid into the Treasury on sugars imported into the United States, and a sufficient sum for said purpose is hereby appropriated and shall be paid annually from the duties so collected, such annual appropriation and payment to continue until the 1st day of April, A. D. 1900, and no longer.

SEC. —. Any person who shall knowingly refine or aid in the refining of sugar imported into the United States or upon which the bounty herein provided for has already been paid or applied for, at the place described in the license issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, and any person not entitled to the bounty herein provided for who shall apply for or receive the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not exceeding $5,000, or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will lie on the table and be printed. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I presume that this morning very little is necessary to be said about the amendment which I had the honor to offer on Saturday to section 2510 of the Senate substitute. I am disposed to believe that it is apparent to Senators that my object in offering the amendment was the same as that which is manifest on the face of the section as it now stands in the Senate bill, and that it is necessary that these additions should be made in order to make effective the encouragement that we seem disposed to give to the building of ships in American ship-yards to engage in the foreign commerce of the world.

I called the attention of the Senate on Saturday to the fact that the conditions upon which a ship, launched from an American ship-yard, engaged in the foreign commerce of the world, competed with its rivals were essentially different from those surrounding the coastwise commerce of the country and those ships that are built, as they must be built, exclusively in American yards to engage in that coastwise commerce.

The latter class of vessels are protected by the navigation laws of the United States. They are protected as other industries are protected, by keeping out all foreign competition. But when we launch on the ocean a craft that is to carry our flag into foreign ports there we come into competition with all the world. There is no protection for the freights of an American-built steamer so engaged, and the conditions are so different that it is manifest we must consider the building of such vessels from a different point of view from that from which we look at vessels intended for the coastwise commerce.

I ventured the assertion that there were many articles and structural shapes that went into the building of a ship that could not be made in this country so advantageously, and some which could not be made at all in this country; and if an American ship-builder was to be permitted to avail himself of the advance in the science of ship-building, and to be allowed to use all of these contrivances which modern genius and modern science had evolved in the science of ship-building, he must be permitted to go to a foreign market for them.

It is not necessary that this condition of things should continue indefinitely. I think we all believe that the imitative genius of American mechanics, their enterprise and their skill, will soon adapt these modern inventions and produce them in American shops, but here and there and at different points in the building of a ship there must be the liberty to go abroad for certain parts, for certain structural shapes, certain contrivances, if we wish to build a ship which will be in all respects equal to the foreign rival of that ship when it goes upon the ocean.

I have information since Saturday from an American ship-builder of my own State as to some of these important elements in the construction of a ship. He says:

In addition to the composition castings—

Of which I spoke on Saturday, notably the case of the composition propeller wheels—

In addition to the composition castings, hollow steel shafting generally used in the larger steam-ships is not manufactured in this country, and can only be had from the Vickers or the Armstrongs of England, the Krupp works of Germany, or from the Creusot works of France. Other articles of equipment necessary to vessels whose business takes them to all parts of the world, such as the compasses of Sir William Thomson, are not made in this country.

There is no reason in the world why, if we are compelled in our coastwise commerce to put up with just such ships as an American ship-yard may turn out, that we should be compelled to forego the building of a ship that can engage in the world's commerce by being shut out from these contrivances and these aids to ship-building that are open to all the rest of the world. I believe that in all these matters in a very short time, if once they are used in American-built ships, American mechanics will soon produce the very articles themselves, or substitutes for them which will take their place, and in that way, and in ways that we can not see now and can not anticipate, American industry in all parts of the country will receive the aid and impetus that will be given to it by upbuilding this one great industry in this way.

I therefore hope, Mr. President, that it will not be thought necessary by the Senate to limit the scope of this amendment, or to strike from it, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, as was his opinion should be done, the designation of machinery and parts of machines. This very matter of hollow steel shafting to which I have just called attention is an important part of the machinery of an iron steam-ship or of any steam-ship. It connects the propelling power directly with the wheel, and might be called a part of the engine.

I think it will be seen, as I said on Saturday, that the admission of these articles free of duty affects no American industry. It will not cause one blow less to be struck by an American workman, but will help a great enterprise and increase the capital engaged in American industries and the number of workmen who will find ready employment.

For these reasons I trust that the amendment will commend itself to both sides of the Senate, as it does not involve any consideration of the theories that underlie the advocacy of or opposition to this bill.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Delaware on Saturday asserted that the decay of the shipping interest in the United States was due wholly and entirely to the protective duties put upon the materials which enter into the construction of ships.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to correct the Senator from Colorado in the outset, if he makes any supposed remark of mine to that effect the text of what he is going to say. I did not intend to make so sweeping an assertion as that.

Mr. TELLER. I will read what the Senator said, so that I shall not misquote him.

Mr. GRAY. Where do you read?

Mr. TELLER. I read from the remarks of the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. I mean, on what page?

Mr. TELLER. On page 745 of the RECORD of Saturday's proceedings. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] said:

If we can we should relieve at any point an industry that suffers from this protective legislation. Here is one that manifestly does. It is conceded on all hands that your protection has so shut in and closed the avenues of profitable enterprise that this great enterprise, to wit, the iron-ship building industry for foreign account and to engage in foreign commerce, is absolutely extinct in this country.

If the Senator did not say what I stated, then I do not understand the meaning of his language.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I do not wish to interfere with what the Senator has to say, but that is very different, I conceive, from saying that the protective-tariff law was the only cause of the decay of American ship-building for foreign account. There are some other reasons that I recognize. The war had a great deal to do with the transfer of the ownership of American ships to foreigners. But what I meant to say, and I think what I did say, was that as we are situated now we should lift the bars at this point in the protective fence. I did not mean to cast any aspersion, in saying that, upon the protective policy. I was not arguing as to the views on that question; but I said at this time the lifting of the bars at that point would, in my opinion, enable ships to be built that could not be built now. That is what I meant to say.

Mr. TELLER. I will read further what the Senator said:

We see that the protective tariff, which is advocated on the ground that it is useful to all the industries of this country, that it promotes the prosperity of all the people of this country, in this one instance is crowding down and pressing out of existence an industry as important as any in this country. Why should not we, if we can, lift the bars at one point without assailing the protective tariff at any other, and give a chance for this industry to get upon its feet; not only that it may encourage that much of American labor engaged in the construction of the hulls and machinery of ships, but to send our flag all over the world and encourage the ownership of American vessels engaged in foreign trade, and make a new avenue for American capital and American enterprise not now possessed by us?

There are no ships to be used in the foreign trade built now in American ship-yards. How then can it hurt any industry if we allow those articles to come in free of duty which would not be made here under present conditions, and which would not cause a blow to be struck by an American workman if this provision was not made, for I take it to be conceded that vessels can not now be built in American ship-yards to engage in the foreign commerce of the world?

The assertion there very plainly is that we can not build these ships because of the import duties upon the materials of which they are constructed. Therefore the Senator makes a very ardent appeal to us to allow all the materials out of which ships are built to come into the United States free of duty.

When he was asked on Saturday whether he was willing to have ships brought in free constructed in other countries than our own, he declined to answer. The very theory upon which he has based his amendment shows that he is in favor of free ships. He is in favor, not of doing a portion of the work abroad and doing a portion of it here, and thus keeping up our ship-yards, but he belongs to the class of men who would build all our ships abroad, who would not have any ships built in this country, because they can be built a little cheaper on the Clyde than they can be built in the United States. He belongs to that class of statesmen who would close all the American ship-yards unless more money can be made by building ships in American ship-yards than can be made by building them in any other country.

In other words, the Senator has the general idea that distinguishes a free-trader from a protectionist, and that is that the great object of life is to get something cheap. The cheaper a thing is the more valuable it is in the estimation of a free-trader; and if ships could be built for $1 a ton or $10 a ton less on the Clyde or somewhere else than they could be built on the Delaware, the Senator would immediately transfer all the ship-building to that side of the water to save a dollar a ton, or $10 a ton, whatever it might be.

What kind of a spectacle would be presented by this country, a great leading nation of the world, without a shipping interest? I find in a book that I read a few words from on Saturday that eight-ninths of the shipping of the United States is engaged in the coatwise trade. I find, according to the report of 1880, that there are fifty-seven thousand persons engaged in the seacoast trade, and we have practically nobody engaged in the ocean carrying trade.

The Senator would have us to understand that if the tariff was not the entire reason why we are not engaged in the foreign carrying trade it is at least the chief reason, and from his remarks I understand him to mean that that was the sole reason. However, I accept the modification that something else may have entered into it.

We can not compete first with the cheap money of Great Britain in this country. We have had profitable enterprises presented to the American capitalists of the land. We have been building more railroads than all the rest of the world. We have been putting money in profitable investments here at home, and there has been no call for the American capitalist to put his money in the ocean transit business; and if there was, we can not compete, as can be readily seen, with the English seamen, with the Swedish seamen, with the Scandinavians who run their vessels all over the world at wages paid to their sailors so much less than are paid to ours. If the American ships cost no more than the ships built on the Clyde or in other portions of the world it would be utterly impossible for us to engage in oceanic transportation even if we had the ships.

I want to call attention to a statement made in the book to which I referred by Mr. Jeans, in an article entitled "The Supremacy of Great Britain." He says:

As with ship-building, so with ocean navigation, which is so important a part of the commercial business of this country. The only other country that has a mercantile marine approaching to our own is the United States, but while our steam fleet is almost three times the size of that of America, it is important to observe that only 154,000 tons, or about a ninth part of the whole steam tonnage of that country, is available for over-sea traffic. The remainder is enrolled for the home trade only, in which English ships are prohibited from competing. The effect of this absence of possible competition is seriously felt in the local freight paid on American waters.

Not only do American-made ships cost much more than the same vessels would cost in England, but the wages paid to American sailors are also much higher. Let us for a moment compare the wages paid in the two countries, so that the extent of this difference may be fully appreciated. In the United States, according to the census report of 1880, the average wages paid to the 57,000 sailors employed on steam-ships plying on American waters was £95 per annum. In England, on the other hand, the average wages paid to able-bodied seamen in the same year was only £39. Here, then, we have a difference of £56 a year, or 143 per cent. against the United States. Protected as American vessels are on their own waters, this enormous difference does not greatly, if at all, affect their home trade; but it renders it impossible for them to compete with English bottoms in the carrying trade of the rest of the world, and secures to us, at least so far as America is concerned, a practical monopoly of that trade.

It may now be worth while to inquire briefly what is the value to England of her carrying trade. Some very striking and valuable data on this subject are contained in a paper read by Mr. Giffen in 1880 before the Statistical Society, to which the reader is referred for further details. Briefly, however, it may be stated that while the total earnings of the shipping trade of the world have been calculated at about one hundred and thirty-three millions sterling, no less than seventy-three millions, or 52.2 per cent. of this amount has been credited to the United Kingdom, against only 19.6 falling to the United States, 5.4 to France, and about 5.5 to Germany.

Later on he says:

The carrying power of Great Britain on the sea between 1870 and 1880 increased by more than 7,000,000 tons, being exactly 60 per cent. of the total increase of carrying power in the world during that period. The total maritime carrying power of England in 1880 was 48 per cent. of the total carrying power of the world at that date. Put in another way, the carrying power of England per 1,000 inhabitants increased from 310 tons in 1870 to 487 tons in 1880, being an increase of 177 tons; while that of France in the same interval, only increased from 44 to 53 tons per 1,000 inhabitants; that of Germany from 32 to 45 tons; that of Russia from 7 to 11½ tons; that of Austria from 12 to 14 tons; that of Italy from 37 to 46 tons; that of the United States (at sea only) from 64 to 74 tons.

The writer then goes on and declares that there are other reasons why Great Britain not only has the supremacy in the carrying trade over America, but other countries also. But the matter is too voluminous for me now to read.

Everybody knows that since 1860 there has been a great increase in the ship-building capacity of Great Britain. The Senator from Delaware said on Saturday that there were no subsidies granted in Great Britain as we understand subsidies. I do not know what the Senator means by that statement. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] put in the RECORD what everybody understands has been the policy of Great Britain for many years, to subsidize ships to all parts of the world by immense subsidies. Whether it is in the nature of a mail contract or whether it is so much per ton per mile is quite immaterial. We know for what purpose they have subsidized their ships. They have not subsidized them in the interest of the mails, but in the interest of commerce. When the Senator says that there are no subsidies in the way we use the term, I call his attention to the statement submitted by the Senator from Nevada on Saturday, which shows that immense sums of money have been thus paid. I have not taken the pains to aggregate the amounts, but commencing in 1848 with $3,250,000 and sometimes running up to $5,000,000 and nearly $6,000,000 per annum, the amount for the last year, 1882, for which the figures are given, is $3,538,835.

The Senator can not be ignorant of the fact that France within a few years has subsidized her ships by immense bounties to the ship-owners and the persons who sail their ships. The great trouble with sailing ships and owning ships in this country is because many years ago it was asserted in regard to shipping and transportation by ships, exactly as is asserted now by the Senator from Delaware and his coadjutors, that we were able to contend with the world in shipping and in the carrying trade, and when we took away from the ship-owners that which had been theirs from the very beginning of our navigation acts, from that hour there was a decline of American shipping, and there will be a decline of American shipping until we return to the old system of encouraging shipping, or until the rest of the world shall abandon their system of encouragement by subsidies and largesses that they pay out to their ship-owners.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, personally I know very little about the construction of iron ships; but it seems to me the effect of the amendment of my colleague, which proposes to relieve, to a certain extent, persons engaged in that business from certain duties which they are now compelled to pay, is to enable them more successfully to compete with those engaged in the same business on the other side of the water.

We have heard a great deal of complaint about our shipping interest being depressed, especially such as is engaged in the Atlantic foreign carrying trade. It has nearly disappeared from our country and is being transferred to other countries. I apprehend that one of the reasons is because the construction of our ships is more costly than in other countries.

Personally, I say again, I know but very little about it, but I have information to the effect that the duties which our builders are compelled to pay upon materials that enter into the construction of all classes of vessels are so great that they can not compete in the construction of vessels with those engaged in the same business on the Clyde and in other countries.

I had the honor, a few years ago, of being a member of the committee that went up to New England to inquire into the fishing business. While there we investigated to some extent the question of the effect of the duties imposed by our system of taxation on the materials that enter into the construction of fishing vessels. Of course they are a distinct class from the iron ships referred to in the amendment of my colleague. But perhaps it may not be amiss to call the attention of the Senate to the information we derived on that subject as applied to fishing vessels. Though they are a distinct class from the iron shipping, it may not be unimportant to know how even that class of vessels are subject to burdens imposed by our tariff system, which, I apprehend, applies in as great extent to vessels built of iron as to the fishing vessels of New England.

We had before us Mr. George Steel, a very prominent and intelligent citizen of Gloucester, Mass., and who is the president of the American Fishing Union. In the course of his testimony he was examined upon this very subject of the duty on articles entering into the construction of vessels, and, of course, he restricted himself to the fishing vessels about which he was being interrogated. He said:

I heard the Senator speak in regard to what duties we are paying. I think I can give you a little information in regard to the construction of our vessels.

Senator EDMUNDS. State it, if you wish to.

The WITNESS. The duty on cables and cordage is about 20 to 25 per cent.

Then, after being interrogated a little upon the subject of cordage and the materials made of cordage, he proceeded with the question of anchors and chains. I suppose that would apply to ships built of iron as well as to fishing vessels. He said:

The WITNESS. If we wanted chains to-day for the vessel we would have to pay duty, but if the vessel should go into Halifax and buy them it would save the duty.

Senator EDMUNDS. How much would it save?

The WITNESS. A cent or a cent and a half a pound; not over 2 cents; but a saving of 1 to 2 cents a pound on chains is quite an item. So it would be on anchors or any iron in the construction or running of a fishing vessel.

RUSSIA BOLT ROPE.

I would say now that there is a duty on Russia bolt rope of 3 cents a pound on the manufactured article, because we can't manufacture it in this country on account of not having the Russia tar, which makes it so supple and pliable; that quality is given to it by the tar that they use in Russia.

Then I interrogated him on the subject as follows:

Q. What articles are there entering into the construction and equipment of one of your fishing vessels which have to pay duty, besides cordage, iron, etc.?

A. I have spoken, of course, of the anchors and chains; then there is wire rope, on which there is a duty of something like 45 to 73 per cent.

Q. Do you use much of that?

A. We are using more and more for the standing rigging of the vessel, and we are trying it as an experiment for cables.

Q. And there is a duty on the raw material that enters into your cordage?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if those duties were taken off of the manilla and other things, ought you not to be able to buy those things cheaper in this market than now?

A. Yes; I should say of course there would be a great saving.

DUTIES ON ARTICLES OF CONSTRUCTION AND OUTFIT.

Q. Can you form an estimate of the amount of duties paid upon a vessel, say of 100 tons, upon the material entering into her construction and outfit?

A. I should say, to the best of my judgment, it would be 30 to 35 per cent.

That is the estimate, in reference to the fishing vessels, of one of the most intelligent witnesses whom we had before us, the president of the American Fishing Union, and yet he states upon being interrogated that the duty on articles entering into vessels of that description would be from 30 to 35 per cent.

Now, I apprehend that there is no less a duty upon articles entering into the construction of iron-built vessels, and the amendment of my colleague is designed to relieve the builders of our iron vessels in order that they may be able to compete with men engaged in the same business abroad.

I have no question that this burden imposed by our tariff system upon the articles entering into the construction of our vessels has a very material influence upon our commercial marine. If our builders could compete successfully and build ships as cheaply as they can upon the Clyde, I have no doubt that our people would invest more of their money in the construction of such vessels, and being interested in them would seek a portion of the carrying trade of the world. We should have greater interest manifested in that matter if we could induce our prople to put their capital into that class of vessels.

I hope that the amendment of my colleague will prevail. I believe it is just and right; and especially as we do not need as much revenue as we are deriving from our present revenue system, I think it is proper to relieve this industry as far as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the committee for a moment, as well as of the Senate, to section 2510. When this law was passed in 1872 it was intended to cover every imported article that was used in the building of wooden ships. Some use was made of it, but not near so much use was made of it as people generally supposed would be—not enough to make anybody who was a one-half tariff man complain that too much latitude was given in this matter of ship-building. Then in 1883, iron-ship building having commenced, words were added for the purpose of helping the builders of iron ships. Then this clause inserted by the Finance Committee in this bill is still further for the evident purpose of encouraging the building of iron ships for foreign trade. I have no doubt that under the language of the committee two-thirds at least of everything going into the construction of iron ships will be admitted free of duty.

But in modern ship-building many names have sprung up, new names representing new portions of the architecture of a ship, and some difficulties have been experienced as to whether certain things should be admitted.

Now, it seems to me that the committee might reasonably consent, their purpose being the purpose I have stated, to encourage iron-ship building for the foreign trade, to an amendment which I shall suggest. As I understand, in line 2691 the committee have amended the word "bars," making it "beams."

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; we have stricken out "bars" and inserted "beams."

Mr. FRYE. Now amend by striking out the next word "and" and inserting the words "sheets, and other structural shapes." Then, after the word "metal," in the same line, amend by adding "together with castings and forgings of iron, steel, or composition." So as to exclude complete machinery or anything of that kind, I would insert after the word "construction," in line 2692, the words "of hulls and machinery;" so as to read:

Which may be necessary for the construction of hulls and machinery.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator that "sheets" are not "structural forms," and I have no doubt "plates" includes sheets. I think practically the reconstruction of the section as it stands includes all the material which the Senator from Maine now proposes to include.

Mr. FRYE. But the men who are building ships think it does not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Sheets are not structural forms.

Mr. FRYE. No. I put in "sheets and other structural forms."

Mr. ALDRICH. And "other structural forms" as they read it would cover too much, but I have no doubt that "plates" includes sheets. I do not see any reason for adding a lot of words to the section which do not add to its significance.

Mr. FRYE. The men who are building the ships are very desirous that these additions shall be made; and certainly if the amendment does not extend the scope of the clause, why should the committee object to it?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it is evident that the people who are building the ships are anxious to have everything that goes into a ship admitted free; and the Senator from Maine from observations made here and those who are supposed to represent them are anxious that everything which goes into a ship shall be admitted free, but that we shall not have free ships. It was the purpose of the committee that any material used in the construction of ships which would give employment to American mechanics should be admitted free, but the committee are not in favor of free ships and they are not in favor of anything which under another name will be equivalent to free ships.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Rhode Island is doing me a very great injustice. For eighteen years I have been fighting free ships, both in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, and there is not any comparison between the two propositions here and that for free ships. For instance, the proposition has come from the other side that ships should be admitted free and that they would admit all these things free to make an offset. It is no offset or it is no compensation for that at all. If you can buy a ship free of duty, who will take your angles, and your bars, and your beams, and your plates, and everything else entering into a ship, and have them put into a ship here, employing your mechanics, your carpenters, your painters? They will be employed abroad, and then the ship will be taken to the dock and loaded with freight and brought over here and get a profit on the freight and bring it into the port of New York. It will come a completed ship, without a cent being paid to us on the freight coming here, and the ship will actually have made money in coming here. Why do you admit all these things which this provides for, even if they would make an entire ship? Suppose you admit the whole. The freight upon a 4,000-ton ship would amount to $25,000 landed in Maine. In addition to that, if you admit everything that goes into a ship, one-half of the work of putting together, the work of carpenters, painters, etc., would be done here.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator believe that if this amendment of his was made we could import those things for the purpose of building ships?

Mr. FRYE. I do not to a very great extent, but the iron-ship builders of this country up to the present time have only built four for the foreign trade. They have built three or four or five iron ships as good as there are in the world. I think John Roach built two hundred for the coastwise trade.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator why they have to do so. Is it not because the ships built on the Clyde can not get into our coastwise trade?

Mr. FRYE. That is exactly the explanation I should have made if I thought it was required. Our iron-ship builders have built vessels for the coastwise trade. They have built no ships for the foreign trade—none at all. My recollection is that only two ships, wood or iron or steel, have been built for the foreign trade for the last few years in the United States of America. These ship-builders say that if they can have certain advantages given to them under these exceptions they can build ships for the foreign trade, and I say it is well enough to try the experiment. My judgment is that all they will use it for will be to bring in occasionally a structural form, an angle, or a bar, or something of that kind which they can not conveniently get at home. I do not believe they will ever import everything that goes into a ship.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the Senator tell us why not?

Mr. FRYE. The reason, I say, is what I stated on Saturday.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to have the Senator repeat it.

Mr. FRYE. As I stated on Saturday, if the Senator from New York were to-day starting upon the project of building a 4,000-ton iron ship, that building, in order to be completed at the least possible cost, must be driven at the highest possible speed. You must get from the men who are employed for you the largest amount of work in a given amount of time; and in order to do that, if you wish to import the whole material from abroad, you will be compelled to make out your plans and specifications for that entire ship from stem to stern, all the machinery, every angle, every bar, every plate, every structural form, everything that goes into that ship, and send them to a foreign country to be responded to in that foreign country and then sent back here. That is not practicable.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is where I am afraid I differ with the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the Senator from Maine, the only reason why it would not be done would be because of the cost of freight.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no. I say you would be compelled to put in these plans and specifications in advance, and you could not wait, and from time to time you might want to change the plan of your ship.

Mr. ALDRICH. Suppose you put it in advance and send the plan over to the foreign ship-yard and all the ship is completed there in all its forms and parts, as I understand the Senator further to say, it would not then be sent here on account of the difference in cost of freight, the greater cost of freight in an incomplete form. Why would it not be done?

Mr. FRYE. I say for this reason: Suppose when your keel is ready you want to change the machinery in that ship; suppose when the machinery is in that ship you find that there is too much machinery or something more needed, and you want to change something else about your ship; suppose you want to change the form——

Mr. ALDRICH. Can not you do it in advance at Bath or Wilmington?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly; if you make your contract anew, and new plans and specifications at a cost of $100,000 or $500,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why will not the contractor on the Clyde make those changes as readily and for the same compensation as the contractor at Bath or Wilmington?

Mr. HISCOCK. Allow me a moment. Why will not the ship-builder on the Clyde prepare the plans and specifications for his ship and send his material over here and build his ship here, and if he wants to change it he will change it by substituting one piece for another over there?

Mr. FRYE. Well, the most that I have learned practically about ship-building I learned from John Roach, whom I regarded as about the best ship-builder in the United States. In discussing this with John Roach in connection with the free-ship bill, for the free-ship bill always provided that raw material should also come in free, Mr. Roach told me that under that clause he did not believe a ship would ever be built in the United States. It was absurd, he said, for a builder to talk about making plans and specifications, and then sending across the water 3,000 miles and importing all the materials, all the bars, and everything else for a ship. He never would do it. I remember he told me that for a 4,000-ton ship it would cost in the first place $25,000 freight to land it at his ship-yard. I remember, in the second place, he told me that when every single thing was landed there, then you had not furnished one-half the work required for a 4,000-ton ship; that then your carpenters and painters and ship mechanics and riveters, to put these forms together, would be called into play, and that at least one-half of the work of that ship remained to be done in American ship-yards, and that being so, it had to be done at twice the cost it was done on the Clyde. He said it never would work practically, and I do not believe it will work.

Under the old law of 1872 I do not believe that one-twentieth part of the material for wooden ships which could have been imported has been imported. I do not believe the law has been taken advantage of to one-tenth the extent that it might have been.

I simply say now that these men believe they can build iron ships for the foreign trade if they can have the advantage of these exceptions under this law, and I do not see why it is not perfectly safe to grant them these exceptions. If the Senator from Rhode Island in his bill has gone to the extent of two-thirds of everything that goes in, is there not the same reason for going to the extent of three-thirds? I do not agree with the Senator from Delaware that you should admit machinery free. It it just as important to this country that we should have mechanics capable of building marine engines and all such things as it is that we shall have men capable of building iron ships, and I would not permit a completed form of machinery or a boiler or anything of that kind to be brought here free of duty. I do not agree with the Senator from Delaware in that.

Mr. CHACE. I ask that the amendment may be read.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine if he does not think that it is just as important that our mechanics should have some practical experience in the construction of these different parts of ships as in putting them together?

Mr. FRYE. They understand all that.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me, on the theory of the Senator, that the ship would practically be built abroad and put together here.

Mr. CHACE. I ask——

Mr. FRYE. Let me make one more suggestion right there.

Mr. CHACE. I should like to hear the two amendments read.

Mr. FRYE. Hold on a second, that I may make a suggestion while it is in my head.

We have not built, I think I am right in saying, two ships, iron, steel, or wooden, in the United States in two years for the foreign trade. Now supposing this change of the law induces the building of two next year, have we lost anything even if everything except completed machinery is made abroad? Have we not gained something in the two ships?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator will allow me to ask him this: Suppose we should let the completed ship come in and they should bring in twenty, have we lost or gained anything then?

Mr. FRYE. In my judgment I will say that you have broken up every ship-yard in the United States of America, and have transferred the ship-building industry from the United States to a foreign power, and your country might just exactly as well be without a Constitution as to be without ship-yards. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Maine will bear with me a moment, he is in favor of allowing certain articles to be used in the construction of ships to come in free of duty—all the articles, all the materials. We have gone to the extent of two-thirds. Now he wants us to go to the extent of the other third. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] supplements that by a proposition to allow all the machinery used in the construction of vessels and boilers to come in free, so that the only thing to be done in this country by the American shipbuilders is the assembling of the parts in some ship-yard of the country and putting them together.

Now, the Senator from Maine says—and I have no doubt says truly—that if that should be done it would impose a cost of $25,000 for freight for an ordinary iron ship. Would not the ship-builder come here and appeal to Congress, and appeal with a great deal of force, and say, "Why am I burdened with this cost of $25,000 freight when that ship could be brought here for $4,000 if all the parts were sent here and were not put together on the Clyde?" Where are you going to draw the line if you allow a completed ship to be built on the other side and brought here on the deck of a vessel, instead of being brought on the waves of the ocean for the mere sake of putting it together for the painter or the carpenter? I do not see, myself, where you can stop. If you allow the completed vessel to be made upon the other side and brought here in pieces, upon what argument can you say "We will not admit the completed ship free of duty?" Why impose this $25,000 freight—freight paid to a foreign corporation probably, and not for the benefit of any American citizen? Why not have the ship come over here free entirely completed?

Mr. FRYE. Why does the Senator from Rhode Island consent to two-thirds coming in?

Mr. ALDRICH. Because it is two-thirds in the form of material, and because we found it in the present law, and I have no objection myself, when you confine it to materials, to having two-thirds come in for the benefit of American mechanics. But when you go further and say that you will admit machinery—the amendment of the Senator from Maine would admit machinery in the form of pieces instead of being put together; that is the only difference, as I understand, between his amendment and that of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. There is considerable difference, if the Senator from Maine will pardon me a moment.

Mr. CHACE. I should like to hear the amendments read.

Mr. GRAY. One moment. There is a considerable difference between the amendment offered by myself and that of the Senator from Maine. His amendment leaves out machinery and boilers, completed engines, which should be brought here free of duty. I think they ought to be so brought here. I think it would be directly in the line of the policy that is manifest upon the face of this section and the existing law.

The Senator from Rhode Island asked where you can draw the line. If I were a high protectionist, as he is, I should find where to draw the line, and I would try to make my theory of protection a practical one, and when I found it produced friction here and pressed hardly there I would endeavor to accommodate that protective system to the existing conditions surrounding the industries of my country. If every component part of a ship to be engaged in foreign trade could be brought here free it would still have to be put together, when assembled, by American mechanics and American workmen to the extent, as the Senator from Maine said, of more than 50 per cent. of the whole cost, and he got his information from Mr. John Roach, and that would be a distinct gain to American industry.

If you allow two-thirds to come in free, why not allow the other third? If you admit the head and body of the horse, you may as well let in the tail, too. That has nothing to do with free ships. I intended to say that if you allow free ships to come; that is, if you allow American capital to order on the Clyde a 4,000 or a 5,000 ton ship, that ship sails over here built up by English workmen, comes over with freight and is sailed under the American flag, with no blow struck upon it by American labor, and the ship-yards of this country might go out of business entirely were it not for our coastwise commerce. The ship-yards of this country are engaged entirely now in building vessels engaged in the coastwise commerce. That is all that is left of ship-building in this country, I admit.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Delaware agree with the Senator from Maine that if we should have free ships for foreign trade exclusively it would close the American ship-yards?

Mr. GRAY. So far as they depended on building ships for that trade.

Mr. ALDRICH. How as to the coastwise trade?

Mr. GRAY. American ship-yards always, under our present law, have work to do in supplying the coastwise marine of the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would it have any unfavorable effect upon the American ship-yards?

Mr. GRAY. That is another question, but I can see the distinction, and it seems strange to me that the Senator from Rhode Island, with all his experience in these matters, can not see the distinction between admitting a ship free to engage in the foreign commerce of the world and allowing all these materials, if it were possible to bring them here in that ship, to be assembled in American ship-yards and there made into American ships.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2690, after the word "plates," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "account," in line 2693, as follows:

Plates, angles, beams, and bolts, and copper and composition metal which may be necessary for the construction and equipment of vessels built in the United States for foreign account.

And insert in lieu thereof:

Sheets, angles, beams, and bolts, deck and bulb beams, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel and copper and composition metal, forgings of iron or steel, castings of iron, steel, or composition, flues and tubes of iron, steel, or composition, machinery and parts of machines, and all other articles of foreign production necessary for the construction and equipment of steamers or other vessels built in the United States for foreign account.

Mr. FRYE. If that is voted down, I intend to offer the amendment which I read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Maine was not sent to the desk. Will he state his proposed amendment?

Mr. FRYE. In line 2091, after the word "bars," which should be "beams," I move to strike out the word "and" and insert "sheets and structural shapes," and after the word "metal," in the same line, insert "together with castings and forgings of iron, steel, or composition."

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask if that is an amendment to the amendment offered by myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine stated that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware should be voted down, it was his intention to suggest or offer the amendments which he has just read. As the motion of the Senator from Delaware is to strike out and insert, the Chair will state to the Senator from Maine that, under the rules, while the motion to strike out and insert is not divisible, the part proposed to be stricken out and the part proposed to be inserted are both amendable. The Senator from Maine can propose an amendment to the part to be stricken out before the vote is taken on the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. FRYE. The language in which the amendment is drawn is such that it is less difficult to do it in this way than it would be in that motion.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware to make a statement explanatory of the amendment which he has proposed.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator can do that after I have finished.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to know whether or not he understands the scope of his amendment to be such that completed marine engines come in free of duty.

Mr. GRAY. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Whether a pair of completed marine engines ready to be put into the hull of a ship would come in free of duty if the amendment were adopted?

Mr. GRAY. I do.

Mr. STEWART. It was questioned on Saturday whether or not France also subsidizes her ocean steamers, and some question was also raised with regard to Germany. I have not been able to find the statistics as to Germany, but I have been informed by the publications. I have seen heretofore that Germany also grants liberal subsidies. The bounties granted by France for the promotion of ship-building and aiding ocean carrying trade are as follows:

The new shipping bounties in France (1880) are as follows: 48 shillings per ton for building iron vessels, and 16 shillings for wooden; 15 pence per ton per 100 miles run, on French-built vessels entering French ports; 7½ pence per ton for French vessels not built in France.

It will be seen that the French bounty is direct, unequivocal, not only in aid of the carrying trade but also in aid of ship-building. She makes no pretense that it is for the purpose of carrying the mail, but it is to enable her vessels to carry freight. She gives so much per ton for the freight carried in a French ship. Otherwise we should have no French line running between France and the United States. Germany has done the same. If we are to maintain our protective system let us be consistent. Let us promote our home production. Let our people who build ships make it possible for them to do so. The only way to make it possible to do so is to give our people the same advantages that other nations who are contending for the carrying trade find it necessary to give. There is no necessity for breaking up the protective system in order to acquire the carrying trade. We can not acquire that trade by so doing.

If ships could be built in this country with the material given to us free, they could not be run against the competition with which they would have to contend in the way of the granting of subsidies by other nations, because as soon as they started on the sea the subsidies granted by other nations, and particularly England, to their vessels would be increased. England has done that in every instance whenever we have endeavored to subsidize our vessels. The only way to compete with her is to grant equally large subsidies and thus give our ships an equal chance. If we do that we will have our full share of the carrying trade; but to break down the protective system and injure our mechanics, throw them out of employment, or deny them the privilege of keeping up with the times in building ships and in the construction of all the parts to make up a ship, for the purpose of acquiring ships we can not use in the carrying trade, can not be justified. It is not proposed that they shall be used in the coastwise trade. That is the only place they can be used. They can not be used in the foreign trade, because the competition will be such if they attempt to do anything of importance; if the trade they do amounts to anything, other governments will increase their subsidies and drive our ships off the seas.

The uniform policy of Great Britain for the last thirty years in granting subsidies wherever there is competition shows us that it is entirely useless to attempt to regain our carrying trade without subsidies or differential duties in favor of American ships. I would be willing, if that is the sentiment of the Senate and of the country, to resume our share of the carrying trade, to vote for such legislation as would accomplish it.

The carrying trade of England, amounting in the aggregate to over $300,000,000 a year, although yielding a small percentage of profit on the money invested, is of immense benefit incidentally in cultivating the foreign trade and aiding the general growth of that nation. They so regard it, and they maintain it at all hazards and at any cost. It is useless to make any effort in that direction unless we give our people the same advantages both in the building and running of ships that the English Government gives to ship-builders and ship-owners.

There is no necessity of interfering with the operation of the tariff. It will do no good, and if you get ships constructed they will be used in the coastwise trade or lie at the ports rottening and useless, because if you do any considerable business the discussion in England on the granting of every subsidy takes into account what other nations are doing. "On this line," they say, "the Americans have subsidized ships. We must have an additional subsidy and run them off. We can run them off by our competition." That is what they have done and will do again. Now, to make a feeble effort to regain our carrying trade seems to me childish. If we are to meet the question let us meet it fairly and recover this carrying trade. If we will put American ship-builders and American seamen on an equal footing with those of foreign nations they will do as they did previous to 1840; they will divide the carrying trade of the world.

There is no doubt about that. But there is no use of pretending that you are doing something for them when you are doing nothing. That seems to me to be altogether out of the question. Let the question be met in its entirety; let it be met as a proposition to regain our foreign trade, and let the country understand it, and I believe that such legislation would be approved by the country as would give us that trade again. It was once our pride, and it ought to be again. If, on the contrary, it is not considered worth recovering, if it costs too much, if we are not willing to compete with France and Great Britain, that have subsidized their steam-ship lines, then we ought not to pretend to have a foreign trade, for we can not have it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I trust we shall not extend the list of articles which by the present law are permitted to be imported free of duty by ship-builders who are building vessels for foreign account and ownership or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade. The law as it stands seems to me to be a departure from the principle of protection. I know of no other industry in the United States which has the right to import raw material, or materials which for that industry are raw materials which can be produced in this country, free of duty. But in this ship-building industry the law as it stands permits lumber, timber, wire rope, and iron and steel rods and bars, spikes, nails, plates, angles, beams and bolts, and copper and composition metal, all of which are produced in this country and by American labor, to be imported free of duty if the vessel is for foreign account or ownership or to be employed in the foreign trade. I think if this were a new question I should not be in favor of that. I do not know that I particularly want to change the law or desire at this time to raise the question of whether the law should be changed so that none of these materials should be imported free of duty; but it seems to me that we can not stand for a moment upon the theory that the ships which are to be constructed for foreign account or ownership are to have this privilege.

There are two classes of ships for which the specified materials may be imported under this law. The one is those built for foreign account and ownership, and the other those that are to be employed in the foreign carrying trade. Now, taking first those which are to be built for foreign account and ownership, why should we allow a portion of the materials of anything that is to be built for foreign account or ownership to be imported free of duty? The law as it stands allows a rebate when an article is exported, allows the manufacturer to import all his material and get drawbacks on it, but not to import portions of his material free of duty; and in no other instance that I know of is any such law applicable. It seems to me that in the case of a ship built for foreign account and ownership there is no more reason why the builder should be permitted to import a portion of his material than there would be for allowing the manufacturer of woolen cloth who should get a foreign order to import a portion of the material which went into the cloth for that foreign order free of duty.

It seems to me that that disposes of that class of vessels which are referred to in this statute. Now, with regard to vessels which are to be engaged in the foreign carrying trade, it will be noted that in the law as it stands to-day there is nothing that requires them to be continued in the foreign carrying trade. You can build a ship to be engaged in the foreign carrying trade, import all these articles free of duty, but there is nothing which prevents that ship ever being sold to a foreigner to engage in the foreign trade. So it in no sense helps to revive our American industries; and if there were a provision here that the ship should always be run by American owners in the foreign carrying trade, it would be such a bagatelle, it would be so little of help towards reaching the end desired, that it seems to me it would not be wise to depart from the principle of protection, which, as I understand, covers all American labor engaged in the production of materials which are used in the manufacture of other products, and certainly that we ought not to extend the list.

Mr. STEWART. My attention has been called to another piece of very pertinent testimony directly on this point, which was given before the royal commission of Great Britain on the depression of trade, which sent out invitations to the boards of trade throughout the kingdom to report on the various industries. The Board of Trade of Greenock, among other things, made a report which was adopted and incorporated in the report of the commission upon the question of ship-building, and I want to read one or two extracts from that report, as follows:

> The gross value has decreased largely; contracts have been lately taken at such extreme low prices in order to keep works open as to yield practically no profit. The number of workmen at present and for the last two years employed in this trade and subsidiary trades has largely decreased.

That is, the trade of ship-building.

> It is reckoned that during the last period of depression, which culminated in 1879, the workmen then employed did not exceed 60 per cent. of the number employed in 1874. In 1882-'83 the gross number employed did not rise to the amount of 1874, but in 1885 the number is fewer than in 1879, the total being estimated at not more than 57½ per cent. of the number employed in 1874.

Then in a subsequent portion of this report they give the reason why ship-building in England is depressed. They say:

> Because since 1882 the continental orders have ceased; the ship-owners of Germany, France, Italy, and of the countries which were the principal customers of Greenock builders have now ceased to order vessels in Great Britain to the same extent as formerly, and for the following reasons:
>
> First. Because under the conditions of the subventions granted under color of mail service and under direct bounty inducements it is more profitable or obligatory to have the vessels constructed in their own countries.
> Second. Because under the above conditions, and in France especially, under the stimulus of direct bounties given to the ship-builders, a large number of powerful ship-building yards have sprung into existence on the Continent, capable of furnishing all the tonnage required.

Now, the proposition is, instead of treating our ship-builders and the persons engaged in the foreign carrying trade as France and the other continental powers have found it necessary to do in order to encourage home industry, that we shall import the machinery and put it together here. If we do import any of it, it will have a tendency to build up the English ship-yards and benefit English ship-builders in reviving a waning industry there, which is met with competition from the subsidies granted by other governments. We shall make no effort to build the machinery at home; we shall give over to England the building of it, increase her profits, and build up her ship-yards, and all we are to do here is to put the parts together.

It seems to me that this amendment is most vicious. Exceptions to the tariff are generally dangerous, and this appears to me entirely vicious. If it has any effect and the material is brought in, it will benefit England and not the United States. If we are to compete with England we must do just as France, Italy, Germany, and the other continental powers have done. We must grant bounties for the construction of ships or we must make it up in differential duties or subsidies under the name of paying for carrying the mail, as most of them have done. France did not disguise it under that name, but put it direct for carrying freight. But under whatever name it is done, we must pay money to enable our vessels to carry freight in competition with all the world, or we must give up the carrying trade. Legislation in that direction will revive our foreign trade, and no other legislation will be effective.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 107 of the bill, to be substituted for paragraphs 144 and 145, and ask for an order to print them. Perhaps the amendment had better be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish to have it read for information at the present time?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not ask it especially.

Mr. VEST. What is it?

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment relates to tin-plates. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to offer this amendment. If Senators will turn to page 107 they will see the changes proposed.

Mr. VEST. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraphs 144 and 145 and to insert in lieu thereof:

144. Sheets, of iron or steel, common or black, including all iron or steel commercially known as common or black taggers' iron or steel, and skelp iron or steel; valued at 3 cents per pound or less: Thinner than No. 10 and not thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, 1 cent per pound; thinner than No. 20 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 25 wire gauge, 1.1 cents per pound; thinner than No. 25 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 29 wire gauge, 1.3 cents per pound; thinner than No. 29 wire gauge, 1.4 cents per pound; corrugated or crimped, 1.4 cents per pound: Provided, That all common or black sheet-iron or sheet-steel not thinner than No. 10 wire gauge shall pay a duty as plate-iron or plate-steel.

145. All iron or steel sheets or plates and all hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel, excepting what are known commercially as tin-plates, terne-plates, and taggers' tin, and hereafter provided for, when galvanized or coated with zinc or spelter, or other metals, or any alloy of those metals, shall pay three-fourths of 1 cent per pound more duty than the corresponding gauges of common or black sheet or taggers' iron or steel; and on and after January 1, 1890, all such iron or steel sheets, when coated with tin or lead, or with a mixture of which these metals, or either of them, is a component part, by the dipping or any other process, and commercially known as tin-plates, terne-plates, and taggers' tin, shall pay three-fourths of 1 cent per pound more duty than the corresponding gauges of black sheet or taggers' iron or steel.

Amend paragraph 147 by adding thereto "until January 1, 1890."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be received and printed. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], but that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and I vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. FRYE (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and as I have some doubts about how he would vote on this amendment I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and therefore ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Vance,
Berry,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Call,	Faulkner,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	George,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Gray,	Turpie,

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Chace,	Hale,	Palmer,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Quay,
Davis,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Dawes,	Mitchell,	Sherman,

ABSENT—28.

Allison,	Evarts,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Beck,	Farwell,	Ingalls,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Brown,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Harris,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Hearst,	Pasco,	Stockbridge,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the disposition of the Senate is so manifest in this vote that I shall not offer the amendment which I proposed, but will offer one which is suggested to me by the Iron Ship Company of Bath, Me.; that is, to insert after the word "bolts," in line 2691, the words "forgings, rivets, and steel castings."

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2691, after the word "bolts," it is proposed to insert "forgings, rivets, and steel castings."

Mr. FRYE. I hope the committee will consent to adopt that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). As I have already stated, my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has been transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. I vote "nay."

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], and withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FRYE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine withdraws his vote.

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], and withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine withdraws his vote.

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bate,	Coke,	Gibson,	Turpie,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Gray,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Hampton,	Vest,
Butler,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Walthall.
Call,	Faulkner,	Reagan,
Cockrell,	George,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Chace,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Teller.
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Quay,

ABSENT—32.

Allison,	Frye,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Hale,	Paddock,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Harris,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Brown,	Hearst,	Payne,	Stockbridge,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Farwell,	Kenna,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the first paragraph informally passed over.

Mr. VEST. I gave notice on Saturday that I should offer some amendments to items on the free-list which were passed over on Friday. If it is convenient to Senators in charge of the bill I shall do so now.

In line 2183, paragraph 650, I move to strike out the word "bergamot" and insert "brick."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 174, paragraph 650, line 2183, it is proposed to strike out "bergamot" and insert "brick."

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. ALDRICH. That will simply make an absurdity of the bill, if the Senator will permit me to say so. This is "bergamot oil." If he strikes out that, it will be "brick oil."

Mr. VEST. I will meet the very serious objection of the Senator from Rhode Island by moving to strike out "bergamot oil," then, and insert the word "brick."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state that paragraphs 644 to 676 were passed over informally, and the word "oil" was not added.

Mr. VEST. The committee stated that they would add it, but it has not yet been done by the action of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not yet been done. The proposed amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be again stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 174, paragraph 650, line 2183, it is proposed to strike out "bergamot" and insert "brick."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the Senator from Missouri asks that the yeas and nays may be entered upon the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]; otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I will state for the last time to-day that my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has been transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As I fail to see the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] in his seat, I ask to withdraw my vote. I am paired with him generally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky withdraws his vote.

Mr. PAYNE. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN]. As he is not here, I withhold my vote.

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and withhold my vote.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there a quorum voting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet.

Mr. ALLISON. In order to make a quorum I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY. I did not vote, understanding that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], with whom I am paired, had not voted. I learn that he has voted, so I vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR. I am at liberty to vote if my vote is necessary to make a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum is now recorded.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Walthall,
Berry,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Wilson of Md.
Butler,	Faulkner,	Saulsbury,
Call,	George,	Vance,
Coke,	Gray,	Vest,

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Dawes,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Blair,	Dolph,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Teller,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Quay,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Reagan,
Blodgett,	Frye,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Brown,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Daniel,	Harris,	Payne,	Turpie,
Davis,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Voorhees.
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. In line 2190, paragraph 657, I move to strike out "Civet" and insert "Staves and woods of all kinds." I ask for the yeas and nays upon this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 174, paragraph 657, line 2190, it is proposed to strike out the word "Civet" and insert the words "Staves and woods of all kinds."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], on which he asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under that transfer of pair I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Coke,	George,	Vance,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Eustis,	Reagan,	Walthall,
Call,	Faulkner,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Chandler,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Cullom,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Blair,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Chace,	Hiscock,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Teller,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—32.

Beck,	Evarts,	Hearst,	Plumb,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Bowen,	Frye,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Brown,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Davis,	Hale,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Edmunds,	Harris,	Payne,	Turpie.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment on page 183, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 183, paragraph 788, line 2409, after the word "logs," it is proposed to add:

And round, unmanufactured timber, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

So as to read:

788. Wood.—Logs, and round, unmanufactured timber, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

Mr. ALLISON. The period should be stricken out after "logs."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In line 2195, paragraph 662, I move to strike out "lavender" and insert "laths." I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am going to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the technical absurdity of these various amendments he has offered. These articles are all oils, from paragraph 644 to paragraph 676, and the effect of his amendment, if agreed to, would be to substitute for oil of lavender, lath oil, which, of course, in itself is an absurdity. I suppose it makes no difference to the Senator from Missouri what the effect of it is as long as he gets the record of the Senate on the question of putting laths on the free-list.

Mr. VEST. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the absurdity of his objection in the face of the statement of the Presiding Officer of the Senate on the record of the Senate that the word "oil" is not added.

Mr. ALDRICH. These are all oils.

Mr. VEST. When "oil" is put in I shall renew the amendment, if it be necessary.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are oils whether the word "oil" is there or not. Under the provisions of paragraph 644 "oils," a general heading, a designation of oils, come the articles put upon the free-list from paragraph 644 to 676; they are all oils.

Mr. VEST. I am amending this bill as it stands before the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. As it stands before the Senate this is lavender oil or oil of lavender, and nothing else.

Mr. VEST. I am willing to accept the absurdity of the situation whether it is an oil or a solid substance, and insert "laths."

Mr. ALDRICH. The effect of this would be to put lath-oil on the free-list.

Mr. VEST. I do not care whether it is an oil or a solid substance; that is not the absurdity. The absurdity is in the bill per se.

Mr. VANCE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANCE. I should perhaps address my inquiry to the Senator from Rhode Island rather than to the Chair. I want to know if it is possible to increase the absurdity of a bill which taxes the laths used in building the poor man's cabin and permits to come in free the oil of lavender to sweeten a boy on Sunday when he puts on his Sunday clothes? If there is any possibility of increasing the absurdity of that, I should like to know it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course the amendment of the Senator from Missouri involves a double proposition. In the first place it proposes to remove the oil of lavender from the free-list, to put it upon the dutiable-list. I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from North Carolina thinks that a proper thing to do or not. They certainly do not make that motion as a separate, independent, substantive proposition. I do not know any interest which requires a duty to be placed on oil of lavender as a distinct and separate proposition. Of course the Senators desire to put laths on the free-list, but they incorporate with it another amendment to put the oil of lavender upon the dutiable-list. I suppose, of course, that that kind of argument and that kind of amendment are not intended to appeal to the sense of justice or judgment of this side of the Chamber, but merely to be used as an argument upon the hustings hereafter.

Mr. VANCE. Oil of lavender appeals to a sense. This appeals to the senses of the people who have a due regard to the principles of taxation.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Missouri, but I suggest to him that if he desires to test the sense of the Senate as respects these oils, he make a single motion to strike out all that part, and if he desires to test the sense of the Senate, I will premise by stating—not wishing to suggest to him—if he wishes to test the sense of the Senate as to these articles of wood, he can make a separate motion to put lumber, etc., on the free-list. The lumber schedule has been passed over. That is an important question which is to come up later on, and I submit to him that we are rather occupying time unnecessarily in these inconsequential motions, as I regard them, with all due deference to the Senator from Missouri. If there is any reason why these oils should be put on the dutiable-list, I should be glad to have the sense of the Senate tested upon that question, but it is certainly a manifest absurdity, if I may repeat what the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has said, to put lath oil on the free-list, and that is what his amendment will do if adopted.

Mr. VEST. I am very much obliged to my friends on the other side of the Chamber, but I recollect an ancient Latin maxim which has peculiar application just now, commencing Timeo Danaos. I do not ask advice on this tariff question from gentlemen whose position I understand so well as I do theirs. I care nothing about any of these perfumes or the bric-a-brac of fashion, but I do care something about the necessaries of life, and I want to put this question in antithetic shape to the Senate and the country. What becomes of lavender oil is mere "leather and prunella," but I want to put laths on the free-list, and I want to put the two propositions not only in juxtaposition but face to face, and see how the two parties stand in this Chamber.

As to the sympathetic advice of my distinguished friend from Iowa, I will simply dismiss it by saying the motive does away with the advice.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the vote of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not recorded.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I withhold my vote. I am paired with him.

Mr. VEST. I announce a pair between my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] and the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator desires to vote on this important amendment, with his consent I will transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and then he and I can both vote.

Mr. VEST. This is the pair of my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. ALLISON. I vote "nay," understanding that my vote is needed to make a quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], who is detained on a committee of conference.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Vest,
Berry,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Walthall,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Brown,	George,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Gibson,	Vance,

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Allison,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Blair,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Hiscock,	Palmer,	Teller,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Manderson,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Evarts,	Hoar,	Quay,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Frye,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Call,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Gray,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Payne,	Turpie,
Davis,	Harris,	Plumb,	Voorhees.
Edmunds,	Hearst,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALDRICH. On page 219, section 30, line 20, the word "designated" should be "designed;" so as to read, "designed for use otherwise than in the bona fide transportation of such merchandise." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In paragraph 321, line 1301, I move to insert, after the word "narrowed," the word "selvedge." These are simply verbal amendments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In paragraph 321, line 1303, after the word "fiber," I move to insert "finished or unfinished."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Retaining the comma?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, retaining the comma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proposed to insert after the word "fiber" the words "finished or unfinished," followed by a comma.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, a comma should come after "unfinished."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In paragraph 325, after the comma following the word "braids," I move to insert "boot, shoe, and corset lacings, 35 cents per pound."

Mr. VEST. What ad valorem would that be?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a little reduction from the 35 per cent. on the large portion of goods included within the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In paragraph 325 there should be a semicolon after the amendment just agreed to, and the word "cotton" should be inserted immediately following, before the word "gimps."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the paragraph as it will read when amended, punctuation and all.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

325. Cotton cords, braids, boot shoe and corset lacings, 35 cents per pound; cotton gimps, galloons, webbing, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. There should be no comma after "boot." It should read "boot shoe and corset lacings."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 1327, at the end of paragraph 325, I move to strike out "35" and insert "40;" so as to read, "40 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. VANCE. That is a decrease also?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is an increase.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 1329, paragraph 326, I move to strike out "35" and insert "40;" so as to make the paragraph read:

326. All manufactures of cotton not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VANCE. The old rules of pleading in the courts were, lest a man might conclude himself in some place, to plead everything he could think of, and then add "with leave to add." I think all these increases ought to be made "with leave to add." [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In paragraph 332, line 1340, the words "all of the above" have been added, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paragraph will be read as it now stands.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

332. Cables or cordage, and twine, including binding twine, all of the above composed wholly of manilla, or sisal-grass, 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. VEST. Is my friend from Rhode Island through with the increases? Is there any other increase?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, there is another increase. The item relating to cross-cut saws was passed over on account of the Senator from Missouri the other day.

Mr. VEST. I prefer to take that item up directly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator prefers to take up cross-cut saws later. He can go on with his amendments now.

Mr. VEST. In line 2199, paragraph 666, I move to strike out "Neroli, or orange flower," and to insert "Needles," and I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2199, paragraph 666, the Senator from Missouri moves to strike out—

Neroli, or orange flower,

And to insert

Needles.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On agreeing to this amendment the Senator from Missouri asks that the yeas and nays be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. STEWART (when his named was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. I do not see him in his seat. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BATE. I wish to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PLUMB. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. FRYE. In order to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I am authorized to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR. Is there a quorum?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet.

Mr. HOAR. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB. In view of the absence of a quorum I transfer the pair which I have heretofore announced between the Senator from Missouri

[Mr. COCKRELL] and myself to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and I vote "nay."

Mr. PAYNE. If there is no quorum I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	Coke,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Berry,	Eustis,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Blackburn,	George,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Call,	Payne.	Vest.

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Plumb,
Allison,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Teller,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Davis,	Hampton,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Edmunds,	Harris,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Hearst,	Sabin,
Butler,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,

Colquitt,	Gray,	Pasco,	Voorhees.
Daniel,	Hale,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST In line 2206, paragraph 670, I move to strike out "Ottar of roses," and to insert "Salt," and I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2206, paragraph 670, it is proposed to strike out the words "Ottar of roses" and to insert the word "Salt;" so as to read:

670. Salt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that upon agreeing to this amendment the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, when the item of salt was reached in the schedule where it is found I asked that it be passed over that I might make a few remarks upon it. To save the time of the Senate in recurring to it hereafter, I will say now what I desired to say then.

Salt is the preservative principle of nature, and in accordance with the necessities of mankind it is universally diffused. Two-thirds of the surface of the planet is covered with water which holds salt in solution. It is found in various places gushing from the earth in springs. In other places it is found by sinking wells, and in others it is stratified in the earth as rock, ready for the necessities of man. It is more necessary, perhaps, for the preservation of animal life than any other one thing—almost as much so, in fact, as the elements of air and water. Yet we find it loaded down with taxation whilst other things that are at the best mere luxuries or delicacies, used for the pleasure or the ornamentation of the things of life, are permitted to come in free.

Look at this free-list which we are now considering, and seven-tenths of everything upon it will be found to be an article of luxury, the production of some foreign clime. With the exception of tea and coffee, and hides, which are the raw material of our leather industry, there is scarcely an article upon the free-list that contributes necessarily to the comfort of mankind. Yet salt is taxed, and has been for years, a specific duty which ranges from 60 to 82 per cent., according to the price of the foreign article. It is taxed here 82 per cent.

Since I have been a member of this body I have used every proper occasion to secure if possible the placing of salt upon the free-list. I have desired that one of the chief ingredients of human necessity at least should be placed cheaply in the hands of the people of this country. So far I have succeeded in making no modification of the present duties on salt, except in securing in 1883 the use of free salt in the curing of fish taken upon the shores of the navigable waters of the United States. My earnest desire now is to have it made free for everybody for all purposes and for all uses.

What is the argument against free salt, Mr. President? In the language of the Senator from Iowa, it is the old, old story, that, in the first place, the duty upon salt makes it cheap, and in the next place it is said that if the duty were removed the salt industry in this country would perish, and that as soon as we removed the duty England, that has the greatest repository of salt perhaps in the world gathered in one spot the most convenient for manufacture, would immediately put up the price of salt in this country. They seem to think that the only way of keeping England from "cornering" all the salt in the world and putting up the price of this necessary article in the face of the competition of the world is to exclude her from the American markets by a duty of about 80 per cent. and allow the American salt manufacturers to corner for themselves in this country, which they have invariably done.

Will the abolition of the duty on salt destroy the salt-producing industries of this country? A tolerably fair argument in reply to that question would be the fact. I admit that fact will not go as far as theory. I admit that arithmetic does not amount to much in a tariff discussion; but nevertheless I venture to give as a reason why the abolition of the duty would not destroy the industry of making salt in this country the fact that it has been tried and that it did not. Let that go for what it is worth.

From 1846 to 1861 there was no duty upon salt imposed in this country. Did the salt-making industries die that year? Did England corner the salt trade of this country and put the prices up to an extraordinary per cent. and make salt cost us more than it would have done with the duty added if the duty had been kept on? I appeal to figures. I appeal, sir, to discarded and repudiated arithmetic. I appeal to the table of statistics which I find cited in the report of the Tariff Commission in 1882 as being authentic. From that table I take the figures which I shall now proceed to give.

The average price of salt from 1846 to 1859, inclusive, was 26.4 cents per bushel, and during that time, as I have stated, there was no duty imposed upon salt. The average price of salt from 1860 to 1873, inclusive, was 45.4 cents per bushel. There was a duty during that period of 18 cents per hundred pounds in bulk and of 24 cents per hundred pounds upon salt in sacks. The average price of salt from 1874 to 1885, inclusive, was 35.4 cents, when the duty had been reduced to 8 cents per hundred pounds on salt in bulk and 12 cents per hundred pounds on salt in sacks. During the year 1830 the production of salt in this country was 4,444,929 bushels, the average price of which per bushel was 21 cents, while the average price of the imported English salt was 12.5 cents.

In 1840 the domestic product was 6,179,174 bushels. The average price per bushel was 20 cents, and the average price of imported salt was 12.4 cents. The increase in production between 1830 and 1840 was about 50 per cent. and the decrease of price in the domestic article was 5 per cent. In 1850 the domestic production was 9,763,840 bushels. The average price per bushel was 22.7 cents. The average price of imported salt per bushel was 11 cents. The increase in the production of the domestic article was about 50 per cent.; the increased price of the domestic article was 2.7 cents, and the decreased price of the foreign article was 1.4 cents.

In 1860 the production of the domestic article was 12,717,198 bushels. The average price per bushel was 18 cents. The average price of foreign salt was 10.15 cents. The increase of the domestic production was about as much in bushels, but not quite so great in per cent., being 33¼, or about that. The decreased price of the domestic article was 4.7 cents per bushel. The decreased price of the article was 1 cent per bushel. That was the average when the salt-producing industries in this country ought to have perished, if they were bound to perish under free trade in salt.

In 1870 the domestic product was 17,606,105 bushels. The average price per bushel was 27.83 cents. This embraced the war period. The average price of foreign salt was 10.8 cents. The increase of production was about 40 per cent. of the domestic article, and the increased price of the domestic article was 9.8 cents, whilst the increased price of the foreign article was only eight-tenths of 1 cent per bushel.

The domestic production in 1880 was 29,800,298 bushels. The average price of the domestic salt was 16.5 cents, the average price of the foreign salt was 10.6 cents. The increased production was about 70 per cent. The decrease in price of the domestic salt was 11.33 cents, while the decreased price of the foreign salt was two-tenths of 1 cent per bushel. These foreign prices were those of the country whence imported, of course.

The highest price of domestic salt from 1830 to 1880, during a period of fifty years, was in 1870, when it reached 27.8 cents, and the highest price of the foreign salt, during a period of fifty years, was 12.5 cents. The lowest price of the domestic salt from 1830 to 1850 was 16½ cents, and the lowest price of the foreign salt for the same period was 10.15 cents, so that we see the fluctuations were almost entirely confined to the domestic article.

Much of this increased production between 1870 and 1880 was due to bounties offered by States for its production. Much of it was due, say the manufacturers who testified before the Senate Committee on Finance, to improved processes of manufacture, to more scientific methods, etc. None of it, as it seems to me, can be chargeable to the fact of a tariff, because we have seen from these tables that the effect of the tariff was almost precisely the reverse of what is claimed for it by its friends; that is to say, that the lowest prices at which salt ruled in this country were during free-trade periods, and the highest prices at which salt ruled were during the existence of the highest protective tariff upon salt.

It would be entertaining in connection with the old argument, that the high protective duty always brings down the price of salt, to read what took place in the case of the Michigan Salt Works, and to give a table which I had the pleasure to read in the course of the debate in 1883, and which I will read again. This table was introduced by the salt dealers who appeared before the Tariff Commission for the purpose of showing how the increased production of the American salt brought down the prices, and especially the price of foreign salt.

NOTE.—The prices of imported salt are in fiscal years ending June 30, and of Michigan salt in inspection years ending November 30.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator state whether that included the package, or was it bulk salt? Did it include the barrel which contained the salt?

Mr. VANCE. I do not know, sir. The table does not give it.

Mr. PLUMB. That is a very important item, because the barrel is worth, I think, 26 or 27 cents in Michigan.

Mr. VANCE. I will read what the witness said in presenting the table. He said:

These views are made manifest by the following exhibit, in which, for the sake of the comparison, pounds of salt imported in packages for our home consumption are reduced to equivalent barrels of 280 pounds each, the average foreign invoice value per barrel is calculated, and the annual average price of actual sales of fine salt per barrel from the Michigan works during the last fourteen years is given in contrast.

That is all the information the witness gives.

So it seems that when this exciting contest between protected salt and free salt began, free salt or foreign salt was 83 cents and a fraction per barrel, and the Michigan salt was $1.85 per barrel; and when the race was concluded in 1881 the foreign salt was 84¼ cents per barrel—it had gained a cent—and the price of Michigan salt was 87.80 cents per barrel. In other words, the foreign salt had won the race, and the only bringing down of price in the case was the bringing down of the price of home salt. Now they turn around and, in accordance with protection logic, claim that the domestic salt brought down the price of the foreign, whereas the figures show that the price of the foreign salt brought down the price of the domestic. When a bird is shot on the wing we generally say that the shot brought down the bird, but in protective parlance we would have to say that the bird brought down the shot; that is, the dead bird came down with the shot in his body. [Laughter.] That is the condition these men are reduced to by this exhibit of their own work.

If there ever was a country upon earth where nature had arranged in conjunction with art for the cheap and easy manufacture of this article of human necessity, it would seem to be the State of Michigan. In the Saginaw Valley, as I am told, there are located between eighty and one hundred large saw-mills, whose occupation is pretty nearly gone for the reason that the timber of that country has all been cut away or passed into the hands of a few very wealthy men who are holding it for big prices. Those mills are supplied by the logs which are imported from Canada across the line, which we have made free. Right under the site of those saw-mills is this geological stratum which furnishes the salt brine. So when a man establishes his plant for the manufacture of lumber he sinks his well into the ground, and the same machinery which runs his circular saw and cuts his lumber draws the brine from the well beneath the mill, and the sawdust, and the slabs, and the wastage of the saw-mill feed the furnace; and the same heat which operates the mill which cuts the lumber passes under the salt-kettles and makes the salt. Under those circumstances they say that the salt-making of this country will perish and pass from the face of the earth unless there is a duty amounting to 80 per cent. against the foreign article.

Mr. President, we understand, as a matter of course, why they are so anxious for this duty to be maintained. We understand, of course, why these salt manufacturers are continually crying in alarm against the circulars of those great English salt manufacturers, and saying that they are seeking to corner all the salt in the world and put up the price. We understand that very well. They are going themselves to do that same thing, and if they could keep up the English article they would increase the price of salt to a greater extent than we have ever had to pay in this country.

Many Senators now present will remember a speech that Mr. Bayard made in 1882 or 1883, when in the Senate, in which he told us of a visit that he made to the Kanawha Salt Works. He described how nature had located everything for the convenience and cheapness of the manufacture of salt. Right upon the banks of a navigable river the salt-wells were found. One bucket which went up filled with the brine from the dissolved salt-rock let down another bucket into the well of fresh water which was to replace the dissolving process in the rock, and within 250 or 300 yards across a little space of level soil there was an outcrop in the edge of the mountain of coal, and a tram-railway upon an inclined plane led up to that coal, and the loaded car that ran down the inclined plane full of coal and dumped it into the furnace that boiled the salt pulled up the empty car to be filled in its place. There, right upon the bank of the stream, with almost the whole operation automatic in its character and self-operating, the salt was boiled, put into barrels or packages, and rolled down an incline into a flat-boat, whence it was floated down the river to Cincinnati, at that time containing the greatest meat-packing establishment in the United States, where more of it was sold than elsewhere.

Yet that institution for the manufacture of cheap salt, and many others in the neighborhood similarly situated, were under what is called a dead rent; that is, the men from Syracuse, N. Y., had paid so much money to the proprietors of those salt works to keep them from making salt, to keep them idle, to keep them from supplying the wants of the people of this country. I am told that the same thing was done by the Canadian Salt Works across the border, and that a number of them were under a dead rent to the people of Syracuse, or perhaps of the State of Michigan—I do not remember which.

Mr. President, can we, as men of conscience, hope to maintain upon the free-list all these articles of luxury, of pure fancy, the production of foreign climes, nine-tenths of which even intelligent people never heard of and do not know what they are, for the gratification of the luxurious of our people, and keep such an article of dire and every-day necessity as salt upon the dutiable-list at the rate of about 80 per cent? Can we do it, I ask?

The juxtaposition in which the Senator from Missouri has placed these two articles will tell its own tale. "Ottar of roses," on the one side, free; salt, 82 per cent., on the other. Ginger, spice, pepper, mace, pimento, come in free. Palm-leaf fans, fiddle-strings, skeletons, and preparations of anatomy, and all kinds of sweet-scented things are permitted to come in free, but the tax collector follows up salt wherever it goes in this broad land, not only into the factory of the great pork and beef packing merchants of the Northwest, the greatest in this world, but into the cabins of the poor, into the gourds that hang in their chimney corners. I wonder if Senators on that side ever saw a salt-gourd? I reckon not; nor the poor herders of stock who climb the mountains or wander across the plains with a bag tied across their shoulders containing salt to sustain the lives of their cattle. Everywhere the agent of this protective policy with inquisitorial powers visits every use that is made of salt with a tax of 82 per cent. But you could go into a drug store, and half that you find upon the shelves, pure articles of luxury (I can not take the time of the Senate to read them over, they are before you all), are admitted free of duty.

Mr. President, what is "ottar of roses?" I suppose the definition that an old Democrat once gave of a Federalist might be applied here. He was denouncing the Federalists very much, and his friend to whom he was talking finally asked him, "Bill, what is a Federalist?" "Well," said he, "a Federalist is—a Federalist—well, a Federalist is something agin nater." [Laughter.]

What is ottar of roses? To what use is it applied? How does it benefit the poor and how does it conduce to the happiness and increase of wealth and wages of the beloved American workingman? I should like to know. It is something certainly very good, or else I know that gentlemen on that side would not put it upon the free-list. Salt is something we happen to know about. Salt is something that an Irishman said "made a 'tatur taste bad when it did not have any of it in it." [Laughter.] Salt is something that everybody uses; salt is something that everybody knows something about. Therefore, it is tangible and can be taxed and you go for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from North Carolina seems to think the duty on salt is a terrible burden to the people of this country. Has he figured out just about how much this duty adds to the expense of salt to each man, woman, and child in the United States?

Mr. VANCE. I had it figured out for me the other day by a gentleman on your side. I thought he made it about 3 cents a head, and my reply to that was if it was big enough to steal it was big enough to save.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator will find, if he investigates it, that the whole cost of salt, including the duty, does not amount to 3 cents upon each man, woman, and child in the United States.

Mr. VANCE. Then what do you want it for, if it is so little? Why are you wasting the time of the Senate, and abusing the patience of the American people, and outraging the sense of justice of everybody by insisting on a thing that is so little in itself and so enormous in its aggregate?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not consuming the time of the Senate. It is the Senator who is consuming the time of the Senate in talking about a matter so absolutely infinitesimal that it is not worth talking about.

Mr. VANCE. "The destruction of the poor," says the wise man, "is their poverty," If we can not take it off, if we have not the courage and the patriotism and the honesty to rescue the poor from these taxes, which in the little to each individual man seems so small and yet in the aggregate makes millions and millions for the pockets of the manufacturers—if we can not do that we had better resign our functions, abjure them, and let some one come here who can do it.

At all events, Mr. President, I think I have demonstrated that the claim for keeping salt upon the dutiable-list at these figures is untenable. I have shown that for a period of fourteen years, from 1846 to 1860, inclusive, while salt was upon the free-list, not only did the salt manufacturers of this country not perish, but they flourished, and the increase in the production during that period was as great as it was at any other. I have shown that the manufacturers of foreign salt did not come in and did not engross the market of this country and put up the prices beyond what they were under a heavy duty.

Mr. HISCOCK. When was salt put on the free-list, I ask the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. VANCE. In 1846.

Mr. HISCOCK. And it remained on the free-list until when?

Mr. VANCE. Until 1861.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator remember what it was worth during that period?

Mr. VANCE. I have read the figures to show what it was worth during that time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Was it placed on the free-list by what was known as the Walker tariff bill?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir, I suppose so; but the tariff acts of 1846 and 1861, as I remember them, were new acts out and out. They were not amendments of existing laws. In 1861 the duty was resumed.

I have shown, as I have said, that the argument against putting salt upon the free-list is fallacious in both instances, in regard to the prices of salt and in regard to the injury that the repeal of the duty would do the manufacturers. I hope that before this Congress expires on the 4th of March coming, or before it disposes of this bill, it will do something at least to commend it to the justice of the people of this country, and I can see nothing with regard to it that could more reasonably and properly fulfill that desire on the part of our constituents than the placing of this article of such absolute necessity upon the free-list.

I am tired, I am disheartened, I am discouraged at the peculiar way in which legislation is now conducted. It seems to me that the duty of the Congress of the United States and of all legislative authority everywhere should be to aid the weak, to help those who are struggling to help themselves, but that is not manifestly our policy. Instead of doing anything here to aid those who are fighting the battle of life unaided, the struggling many, our legislation here is directed in the interest of the few. Instead of aiding poor men throughout all the length and breadth of the land to make a living, to earn bread, the object of this legislation is simply to aid a few men to accumulate riches. The fundamental maxim of the protection policy seems to be not the greatest good for the greatest number, but the greatest possible good for the smallest possible number.

With this expression of my desire, I shall leave the Senate to vote, announcing my determination, as far as I can make it known, to declare hereon and hereby my preference for free salt over and above free ottar of roses.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to have him state what he understands would be the effect of this provision making salt oil free? That is all the effect it would have, and any attempt on the part of Senators upon the other side to say that it would have any other effect would be delusive to the American people. This "ottar of roses" is one of the oils put upon the free-list. If the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is adopted "salt oil" would be free. I do not know what oil there is that might be called a salt oil. If this is simply a farce, it is all right, and the American people ought to understand it so; but if Senators expect any practical effect by voting for this amendment it will simply put "salt oil," whatever that may be, on the free-list.

Mr. VANCE. The attempt to give the people of this country free salt may be a farce——

Mr. ALDRICH. But you are not proposing to make salt free. It is simply salt oil.

Mr. VANCE. I can not tell who is going to be the Secretary of the Treasury. It will be some gentleman on that side. If I think he will not have sense enough to recognize salt when he finds it upon the free-list, I shall vote against his confirmation and do all I can to keep him out of that position. The technicality suggested by the Senator can be very easily disposed of. If a disposition to legislate in the interest of the masses of the people is manifested on that side I will agree to take care of the technicalities.

Mr. ALDRICH. All I meant to suggest was that if this is in earnest, if Senators upon the other side are moving this amendment with some desire of having it effectual, they should make it in an intelligent way, and in a way which would result in placing salt upon the free-list if it were carried.

Mr. VANCE. What right has the Senator to assume that those of us on this side who want the duty on salt removed are not in earnest?

Mr. ALDRICH. Because their attention has been called repeatedly, both by the Senator from Iowa and myself, to the fact that if the amendment is serious, and if the amendment which is now offered should become a law, it would simply result in making certain oils free. Notwithstanding that explanation they persist in moving these amendments in such a way that if they were adopted they would be entirely meaningless and ineffectual to accomplish what the Senators say they desire.

Mr. VANCE. Then it would not do your friends, the salt manufacturers, any harm if it was ineffectual?

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. We ought to deal with each other in perfect candor. He knows very well that the technical objection he is making can be very easily remedied, and that what I mean and what the Senators on this side mean is to put salt on the free-list. He has heard again and again that the word "oil" is not now in the paragraph proposed to be amended. It is true that in a preceding paragraph the word "oil" occurs.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is precisely in the terms of the present law.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator mean that "ottar of roses" is an oil?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do, precisely.

Mr. VEST. Then I mean salt.

Mr. ALDRICH. Salt oil?

Mr. VEST. I want to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he will vote to put salt on the free-list anywhere in this bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. I certainly will not.

Mr. VEST. Exactly. Not one Senator who is now hiding himself behind that little technicality about the word "oil" here would vote to put salt on the free-list.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not hiding myself behind a technicality. I say I shall vote against a proposition to put salt on the free-list; but what I am calling the attention of Senators to is the fact that if the amendment prevails it will not accomplish what they say they desire to accomplish.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island where is the end of the paragraphs that he says embrace oils?

Mr. ALDRICH. Paragraph 676.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Where do the paragraphs stop?

Mr. ALDRICH. At paragraph 676, on page 175.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There is nothing in the bill to indicate where the word "oil" would apply, and I do not know what it would apply to. It would seem to apply to everything embodied in the free-list.

Mr. ALDRICH. I had already stated to the Senate that the committee propose to make their meaning entirely plain in this free-list by putting all these oils into one paragraph, and these paragraphs have been passed over informally for that purpose.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The paragraph in which the word "oils" occurs, "Oils.—Almond," which appears to be a separate paragraph, is paragraph 644. The next is a separate paragraph, "Amber, crude and rectified." I suppose, of course, that refers to the word "oils" that goes before.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In the way the bill is constructed I do not think anybody can tell what the word "oil" is applicable to in the succeeding paragraphs. The word "oil" does not any more apply to "ottar of roses," in paragraph 670, than it applies to "paper stock" in paragraph 684, in my opinion. So, as far as the grammatical construction of these paragraphs is concerned, paragraph 684, which provides that "Paper stock, crude, of every description," etc., shall be free, may as well be considered the "oil of paper stock" as to say that the "ottar of roses" is oil of ottar of roses as relating back to paragraph 644.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have already stated twice to the Senate that there might possibly be a misapprehension in the way these different oils are printed, although they are printed in the same form exactly that they are in the tariff as classified by the Treasury Department, and these paragraphs have all been passed over informally for the express purpose of allowing the preparation of an amendment which would put them all in one paragraph, to obviate the misunderstanding or misapprehension which the Senator from Arkansas seems to have as to the meaning.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not know that I have any misapprehension about it. I do not think I have. I simply asked for information where was the end of those alleged paragraphs. Each paragraph is numbered separately. Paragraph 644 contains two words, "Oils.—Almond." Then paragraph 645, which is a different thing altogether, follows with "Amber, crude and rectified." The Senator from Rhode Island says that those two relate to each other. There is nothing in the structure of the bill to indicate it, and I was calling attention to the clumsy structure of the bill, and was not asking for information; I did not have any misapprehension about it.

I do not suppose that the Senator means to claim that every paragraph succeeding the paragraph containing the words "oils" relates back to and is connected with that paragraph. I called his attention to the fact that nobody could tell where the end of the application of the word "oils" was to be unless he would have the kindness to state to the Senate where it should end. There is nothing to indicate where it would stop.

Mr. ALDRICH. I stated that exactly, I think, when these paragraphs were reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I did not hear the Senator state it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I asked that the paragraphs from 644 to 676 might be passed over to enable the committee to consolidate them all in one paragraph, so that there should be no misapprehension as to the meaning. That action was taken on the suggestion of the committee, and these paragraphs are not now before the Senate, but have been passed over informally to allow that amendment to be made.

Mr. VEST. That has not been done by the Senate, and I appeal to the RECORD.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was done. These items were all passed over informally.

Mr. VEST. Yes, but the word "oils" was not attached to each one of them. The Senator made that statement here this morning, but the RECORD does not show that it was done.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon; the paragraphs were passed over informally for the purpose of consolidating all of the oils under one paragraph. The RECORD will show that exactly. That was done.

Mr. VEST. It does not amount to much, but I recollect distinctly what occurred. On Friday the Senator from Rhode Island asked that these paragraphs from 644 down to the last number that he has named be passed over, without stating what his object was. That was done. Then just before the Senate adjourned I stated to the Senator from Iowa that I wanted to offer some amendments to that portion of the free-list which had been passed over, but on account of the absence of several Senators on this side I preferred to do so this morning. He said, "Very well," and the Senate then adjourned. There has been no action by the Senate putting the word "oil" after each one of these articles.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Missouri will agree with me that these items are all oils, and that the purpose of the present law, and the purpose of the committee, and the purpose of the bill is to put these oils upon the free-list. I suppose he will agree with me that that is the purpose of the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. In order that it may be seen——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The Senator from Rhode Island is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I was going to say, in order that it may be seen that the criticism made upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is merely hypercritical, look at paragraph 669, "olive oil, for manufacturing or mechanical purposes, unfit for eating, etc." That is oil. There is no change of heading until you get to paragraph 677, which reads, "olives, green or prepared." That is under the heading of "oils," according to the Senator from Rhode Island, but it does not mean oil at all; it means "olives, green or prepared." The next is "opium," still under this assumed heading of "oils," that is way back of that. Whatever the Senator's intention may be hereafter to marshal these things together, his criticism does not apply until that marshaling shall have been made.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the items have been passed over for the purpose of doing that, as was stated by the committee at the time.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, of course no one can doubt the entire sincerity of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. The very great solemnity with which he discusses all these questions is of itself evidence of his sincerity. The absence of humor, of jokes, and things of that kind which are supposed to accompany the flights of fancy in which men occasionally indulge, marks the utter and entire seriousness with which he discusses this question. I know he was serious, because he must have had in mind some of the things which he conveniently overlooked at the proper time, in which the people of North Carolina happen to be interested. He is here to serve them, and undoubtedly will find when he goes back to give an account of his stewardship justification for the duties he has aided to impose so far as they relate to products of North Carolina by saying that he has helped to rob the people of the United States for their benefit and therefore has helped them to get even.

The other day when the Senator from Iowa moved to take out of the free-list mica, one of the productions of North Carolina, quite a prominent one also, and put it into the dutiable-list at a duty of 35 per cent., the attention of the Senator from North Carolina was especially called to it, and he assented by a silence which is fully as convincing as any argument which I have ever heard him make. Certainly with all his yielding to the temptation to speak, if he had designed to oppose that amendment he would have been found on his feet at once. Every man in the North who uses a stove is affected by that duty. Unfortunately or fortunately, as the case may be, the people of North Carolina do not use stoves, and therefore they are entirely free from the burden of the 35 per cent. duty imposed upon mica that is used in stove doors.

So when I look further I find that sumac, or shumac, as it is called in the local vernacular, is subjected to a duty of, I think, 1 cent a pound. That is a North Carolina production, and the constituents of the Senator from North Carolina more than the people of any other portion of the United States are benefited by the imposition of that duty.

Mr. VANCE. Is not sumac on the free-list?

Mr. PLUMB. Sumac is not on the free-list; it is a dutiable article, and it is a North Carolina production. As strong as the Senator is at home, I think he would find himself a little bit worried in justifying a vote to place sumac on the free-list.

In addition to that, another staple crop of the good Old North State, peanuts, one of the articles which are especially the delight and stay of that class of people whom he so ably represents on this floor, is taxed 112 per cent. The Senator may have been absent when that duty was imposed, or he may have been asleep, or in some other way his vigilance may have been relaxed; but if he excuses himself on any of these grounds, I invite his attention to the fact that the bill is still open to amendment, and that it will be in order to move an amendment to the bill putting peanuts upon the free-list and thereby helping the great body of the people who are obliged by their state of finance and the depraved condition of their appetites to use this popular edible.

When the Senator comes to salt he waxes eloquent over that article, because he says it goes into every household; it is one of the staples of life. I do not know whether he said so or not, but I have no doubt he would put it next to or possibly even above whisky. Certainly the universality of its use can not be denied, nor perhaps the necessity of that use; but when I come to read along down this bill and come to page 129 I find that rice, a North Carolina product, is taxed by the bill 112 per cent. The Senator's concern is not about the food, it is about the dressing for the food. It is not the dress, but it is the trimming; and he has waxed eloquent here about the salt the poor men have to use, taxed, as he says, 80 per cent., but not a word has he said about the rice for the benefit of the North Carolina planter, which is taxed 112 per cent.

Mr. VANCE. Does the Senator say that we have considered and passed upon rice?

Mr. ALDRICH. We are going back to it.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from North Carolina must remember that he has been in this body a long time. He has lifted up his voice early and often upon the rights of the people. If this tariff of 8 cents a hundred pounds upon salt is the robbery which he characterizes it, he would have been in better trim to have made that characterization if he had, either at this session or at some former session, done what he could, by motion or otherwise, to relieve the people of the United States from the robbery of the 112 per cent. duty imposed upon rice.

Let the Senator make an open and candid confession. Let him admit, with all his assumption of candor, that he is doing what he can to get everything possible for the State of North Carolina to help his constituents, and, of course, on the other hand, in order to make perfectly sure that he does not tumble over backwards in the excess of his virtue, he is engaged in trying to cut down the duty on everything produced elsewhere. That would be the candid thing for the Senator from North Carolina to say; and in saying that I do not question his sincerity at all. He is pursuing the line of self-interest for his own people. He is endeavoring to get for them out of this bill everything that he can. He is perfectly willing that the people who buy stoves should pay 35 per cent. upon the mica that goes into the doors inevitably.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator from Kansas made a statement just now that seems to be about as accurate as any I have heard him make for some time, and that is that the people do not use any stoves in North Carolina. If the Senator made that remark seriously, I beg to correct him. If he made it jocosely, all right.

Mr. PLUMB. I will not discuss the stove question; but the fact of a duty of 35 per cent. upon mica is a cold, patent fact, and the Senator was a contributing element to the imposition of that duty. He sat in his seat. He heard the challenge on the part of the chairman of the subcommittee having charge of the bill. He assented to the report of 35 per cent. upon mica. He has been consenting to the duty of 112 per cent. upon peanuts. He has been consenting to the duty of a cent a pound, which is about 25 per cent., I think, upon sumac. He is ready to have us impose a duty of 112 per cent. upon rice. He is doing all these things in order that the people of North Carolina may have all the benefit that they can have, with the limited variety the productions of the people of that State are given to, out of this bill. If there is anything else which the people of North Carolina do which comes into competition with anything which is done elsewhere, except that which is embraced within these various items I have spoken of, I will venture to say that the Senator from North Carolina will vote for the highest duty that can be named upon those products of North Carolina skill.

There is one thing which I perhaps ought to make an exception. When we come to that provision of the bill which provides for free moonshine whisky, there the Senator is a free-trader for a North Carolina product sure enough. He will stand for that article, and he will stand for immunity to the men who make it in defiance of law, and if he can not get absolute immunity he will vote for a provision giving to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the right to pardon every one of them, nem. con., and to impose the lightest possible fine.

I have no doubt the Senator finds himself in his own contemplation even candid in this juxtaposition. Whisky is, according to his opinion, I have no doubt, more thoroughly and essentially a necessary of life than even rice, and therefore he is for free whisky, but he is not for free rice; he is not for free mica; he is not for free peanuts; he is not for free sumac.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, the Senator says that he does not blame me for the course that I pursue in relation to this bill, for I am following the self-interest of my constituents. That is an accusation that I partly admit. If I did not represent the interests of my constituents and do the best that I could for them here I should not be fit to occupy a seat on this floor; and every man must judge for himself what is the interest of his constituents.

The Senator has no right to say what I am going to do on peanuts, although I have no doubt he may feel an interest very deeply in that article. It may be very necessary to the conducting of public assemblies in Kansas that an abundance of peanuts should be distributed to occupy the time of the deliberators. He has no right to say what I am going to do in relation to the duty on rice, for I have not yet been called upon to vote on it. But I have this to say to him and to all others, that there is no product of my State on the dutiable-list (and there are only two or three) that I will not go as far as he, and a great deal further than he, in reducing those of his State. It is not true, as charged, that I desire to get everything that is on the dutiable-list from my State as high as possible and to cut down everything else that is produced in every other section of the country as low as possible. That is not the truth. I have not so voted here. I have tried upon all occasions to reduce all the duties, North and South, upon the products of every section of the country to a reasonable revenue standard.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will he name one article that is produced in North Carolina upon which he has voted to reduce the duty?

Mr. VANCE. There has been no proposition made yet that I know of specifically upon anything raised there to reduce the duty; but I expect to vote for the Mills bill, if you will give me a chance to do it, which reduces the duty on sugar, which reduces the duty on rice, and which reduces the duty on quite a number of other Southern products.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator was in his seat when we fixed a duty of 35 per cent. on mica, and when we fixed a duty of 112 per cent. on peanuts and upon these various other items.

Mr. VANCE. I am not responsible for the introduction of that duty upon mica.

Mr. ALDRICH. Neither he nor any Senator on that side has moved to reduce the duty on those articles.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator knows very well that I declined to have anything to do with the duty upon mica. The Senator knows very well that I declined to go with my own constituents before the subcommittee for the purpose of advocating that duty upon mica.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator means that he refused to have anything to do with it by sitting in his seat when the motion was made to put mica upon the dutiable-list and not objecting to it——

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then he is correct in the statement that he had nothing to do with it.

Mr. VANCE. Certainly. Does the Senator think that when I have failed to get a reduction of duty upon anything that affects my people, and he of his own motion proposes with a semblance of fairness to put a duty upon mica, that I should have risen and objected to it? Can the sense of honor and justice on that side be satisfied only by a Southern man voting to take off, which you would gladly do, if not ashamed, every duty that pertains to my State, when you will not permit a single solitary duty upon anything that is produced in your State to be reduced? Does he think that that is my duty as a representative or even as an honest man?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it is the Senator's duty to vote to increase the duties upon articles produced in his State if he thinks they ought to be increased, or to preserve them if he thinks they ought to be preserved. I was simply traversing the statement which he made just before I rose the first time, that he had voted to reduce the duties upon articles produced in his State, and I challenged him to name one single instance in which he had so voted.

Mr. VANCE. There are only two or three items that I remember in the pending bill that protect anything in my State, unless it would be the cheap cottons that he spoke of the other day, the duties upon which he reduces whilst he elevates and puts higher the duties on the cottons that are produced in his State. I know of nothing except the cheap cottons, rice, and ground-peas, the production of my State, that is now upon the dutiable-list. About sumac, that the Senator from Kansas spoke of, I know nothing. It is a wild plant in North Carolina and Virginia and all the Southern country. If there is any of it prepared in North Carolina for market, I do not know it.

Mr. BLAIR. Is not lumber a North Carolina production?

Mr. VANCE. I voted to reduce lumber, sir.

I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.

To-morrow, or as soon as we reach that part of the bill, I expect to vote to reduce the duty on lumber.

Mr. BLAIR. How much will the Senator vote to reduce it?

Mr. VANCE. To make it free.

Mr. BLAIR. To make it free?

Mr. VANCE. Plumb free, so that there shall be no duty upon the plank which shelters a poor man from the storm.

Mr. BLAIR. But the Senator's statement was that there was nothing upon the dutiable-list raised or produced in North Carolina except the trivial things which he mentioned.

Mr. VANCE. Those are all I can remember.

Mr. BLAIR. I supposed that lumber was an important production of his State, and I really rose for information. If the Senator votes to make it free, that is another thing. But lumber, I remind the Senator, and I give him this information gratis, is a production of North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I have thanked the Senator already for that information in the most classical quotation that I could call to mind. [Laughter.] There is more lumber manufactured in North Carolina, there are more trees growing there fit for lumber, than in any Atlantic State—enough to cover almost the whole State of New Hampshire; yet I stand ready to put it upon the free-list, and I did in 1883 vote to put it on the free-list.

Mr. BLAIR. I would ask the Senator this question, then, because this may reach North Carolina——

Mr. VANCE. I hope it will.

Mr. BLAIR. Whether he thinks it for the interest of those who produce lumber in North Carolina to put it on the free-list, whether the producers there consider it to their interest to have it made a free article?

Mr. VANCE. I do not consider their interest in contradistinction to that of the great mass of the people. That is the difference between the Senator and me.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has not answered the question.

Mr. VANCE. What was the question?

Mr. BLAIR. Whether the producers of lumber in the State of North Carolina consider it for their advantage that lumber should be placed on the free-list?

Mr. VANCE. I think they do. I think they are men of sense, nearly all of them.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose them to be.

Mr. VANCE. And if they think so I have never heard that they wanted a protection upon those things which nature furnished to their hands, but if they do I can not be with them, as a matter of course.

I am willing, to repeat what I said to the Senator from Kansas, to put everything, "beginning at Jerusalem," down to a reasonable revenue standard, and when I fail to bring down the tariff duties in this country to a reasonable standard, including everything in which my constituents are interested, I am not willing to submit to being twitted and charged with inconsistency because I do not ask that every small item that is protected in my country shall be made free, leaving everything else protected.

Mr. PLUMB. Apply that to what the Senator said a moment ago, if it is small enough to steal it is small enough to save.

Mr. VANCE. As how?

Mr. PLUMB. Mica is small, sumac is small, peanuts are small, and rice is small. They are small enough to save as well as small enough to steal, and the Senator can not excuse himself for what he calls, so glibly, robbery in other directions, because he sat mute when called upon to plead. The country, like a court in a criminal case, adjudges a certain legal consequence to a man who sits idly by when he is accused.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Kansas is uncomfortable in his present position. I know it very well. I know when he was commending me for working for what I thought to be in the interest of my people, that he was in hopes a similar view would be taken of his own case. We shall see, sir, when it comes to the lumber that is to shelter the people of the treeless plains of Kansas, whether he is as true in that respect as I am or not.

We have already seen on more than one occasion a very bold front made by that Senator over there in the making of motions that met with favor on this side as tending to reduce duties; and we have seen, too, those motions withdrawn and that boldness abandoned. I know just how it is; I have seen men in that fix myself; a sort of "I would if I could, but if I couldn't how could I?" condition. [Laughter.] No, sir; this is the proposition that I make, to repeat it once more: I stand here ready to reduce the revenues of this Government, which are now overflowing; and on the few articles that are on the dutiable-list in which my people are interested, I tender them for the purpose, not of bearing all the sacrifice, but of bearing their share of it. Is there any one over there who will do more, or so much?

The Senator says I am in favor of free whisky. I am opposed to the internal-revenue taxes, and I have said so here freely and openly; not that I want whisky free, but that I want to be rid of the crew of in-quisitorial spies and oppressors of the poor people in my country who exercise their tyranny in the name and under the authority of the United States for the purpose of gathering taxes. That is what I am opposed to. I have never denied that. I have never gone half-way into that and said that I would rather repeal the tax on whisky than to repeal it upon shoes and blankets and salt and the necessaries of life. I have never done that; and yet that is the intimation that comes from the Senator's party in its highest assemblages.

My position, as explained to the Senate before, was that I wanted to remove all the taxes that are imposed by the internal-revenue laws of the United States. I do not want to stop at the removal of the duty upon the income of Jay Gould; I do not want to stop at the removal of the tax upon rich men's bank checks; I do not want to stop at the removal of stamp duties upon playing-cards and all the wealth of this country that does not pay a dollar of taxes. I want to sweep it all away, all direct taxation upon the American people, and support the Government, economically administered, by an adjustment of the customs duties upon a revenue standard, let it bear as much protection incidentally as it may.

That is my position, sir, and in due time I hope to be permitted to vote in accordance with that position.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, a short time ago in this discussion something was said about the infinitely small interest which the people had in the subject of being relieved from the tax on salt. In that discussion it was stated on the other side of the Chamber, and it has been said elsewhere, that the tax could not exceed 3 cents to the person, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] said it was infinitely less than that; so as to show that there was no special reason for urging the exemption of the people from the duty on salt.

I do not know that we have any statistics which show the amount of the consumption of salt in this country, nor do I know of any reliable statistics showing the amount of salt per capita used by the people of this country; but looking to the great report of Senator Benton made upon salt a good many years ago, and to the information which he collected, I find this statement:

> The consumption of salt in this country is immense. From all that we have been able to learn on the subject, we believe that the consumption of the people of this country—> may be estimated at 22 pounds per head; in France it was computed by Necker that the consumption in those provinces which had purchased an exemption from the gabelle, at 19½ pounds per head.

This is in reference to England—

This was at a time when the mode of living of the people was perhaps different from what it is now, and when much less salt was probably used than at this time, I mean in the various ways in which it is used, because now in this country we use a great deal more salt than goes into the actual domestic use of the people, in the salt provisions that are exported abroad for sale.

I am not able to state precisely what is the retail price of salt—for that is the price which our people have to pay for it—but it would not probably be less than 1 cent a pound. I mean as it goes into the hands of the last buyer, and according to this table and according to the English evidence—and that is the result of the evidence of a number of most intelligent business men before a commission appointed to ascertain the whole truth with reference to the amount of salt, the amount used for the various uses for which it was made, and the effect of the tax upon salt. This evidence was taken most carefully, and I think I shall have to revise the estimates given in the Senate as to the amount of salt per capita that the American people use, and perhaps the tax will be more than 3 cents, and probably it will be more than four times 3 cents a head, and perhaps more than six times 3 cents a head.

I do not propose to enter into the general discussion of this subject, but I will volunteer to suggest in a friendly spirit to our friends on the other side that perhaps they had better take an interest in making salt free and in securing the best quality of it, for if they are to go before the American people on such a bill as this it will take a great deal of salt of the purest kind to save them in the future. So they had better make salt free if they want to be saved from the effects of such legislation as this.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, there is nothing that more completely illustrates the capacity and intelligence of the people of the United States than the speeches which have been made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. For more than half a century these speeches have constantly been made in Congress, humorous, extremely witty, and we have heard them upon the hustings at nearly every election, telling of the oppression of the people or the robbery of the people by reason of the salt tax. Since I have been in Congress I can not recall a session in which I have not either heard or read as made in Congress the typical speech of the Senator from North Carolina; and—here comes in the intelligence of the people of the United States—during this whole period of time the doctrine of protection has steadily advanced, constantly received converts, and the conviction of the propriety of a protective duty upon salt has been growing gradually stronger and stronger in every section of the country.

When the discussion first commenced, nearly all the salt manufactured in the United States was from the saline waters near the city of Syracuse, in the State of New York; and the duty upon it was attacked all along the line from the South and from the West; and New York, and New England, and Pennsylvania, and Ohio stood for the protection of salt and defended it upon principle, weak as the interest was, and with but one single vote I think originally in either branch of Congress interested in a duty on salt, and that one from the district which I formerly had the honor to represent in the other House. So far as individual interest was concerned, it was confined to one constituency.

Year after year we have been treated to the sort of declamation which has amused the Senate to-day, and year after year the protection of the salt industry of the country has grown stronger and stronger; and I repeat it is a tribute to the intelligence, to the common sense, to the understanding, and to the learning of the people of the United States that the result has been what we have witnessed. They laugh at the witticisms of the Senator from North Carolina; and he should bear in mind that they are pleased with his wit; they grow fat upon it, and fat requires salt; but they vote for the protection of salt every time; and when this question has been tested, as it frequently has been in the House and in the Senate, I point to the RECORD as illustrating and proving that a vote for the protection of salt never cost a Representative upon the floor of the House of Representatives or a Senator here the support of his constituency.

The Senator from Texas opens up the question of its being an onerous tax. His colleague the other day described to us the flourishing condition of the great State of Texas, how it had blossomed out within the last few years, how rich its people had grown, no State having kept pace with it in the giant strides which it had made in the direction of prosperity. I have no doubt that the Senator from North Carolina could point to the same sort of picture in his own State. They have all grown rich and prosperous under the beneficent administration of a protective tariff They have had the benefit of it, as the whole country has; and we are told that the residents of these States are suffering and borne down to the earth under this onerous tax which is imposed upon them, upon the 40 pounds of salt each uses per annum, and that is the extreme quantity consumed by each individual! Those ladies of North Carolina, who I have no doubt use many of the luxuries named in this bill that are protected or upon the free-list, as you please, are oppressed by it, and the sturdy toilers upon the land and in the forests are overwhelmed by this tax upon them, amounting in no instance to more than 3 cents per capita, provided it is a tax that is imposed by this tariff upon them.

Mr. President, there is not another industry in the country that has been so constantly misrepresented as this salt industry. The amount of protection which it receives has always been overstated. I do not know why this should be so. The argument against the duty consists in witticisms and in overstatement, to say the least, of facts in regard to the industry.

Twenty-five years ago, as I have said, nearly all the salt produced in the United States was produced in one locality. Now there is a bed of rock-salt discovered underlying 2,000 square miles of territory in the western part of the State of New York. The industry is prosperous in Pennsylvania, in Ohio, in Michigan. It is now becoming extremely prosperous in Kansas. It may be made prosperous, if it is not already so, in the State of Louisiana. In many parts of Texas salt is just as cheap as dirt. The development of the industry in all these States is largely due to the protection which has promoted the development of these new salt resources.

I desire in this connection to call the attention of the Senate to the ad valorem duty which is imposed upon salt which has been mentioned here.

The largest importation of salt to this country is from England—457,701,000 pounds, and the ad valorem duty upon it is 43 per cent. I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to that fact. From Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island, and some three or four other places, the importation to this country is 15,000,000 pounds, and the ad valorem duty on it is about 40 per cent. From the British West Indies the importation to this country is 66,000,000 pounds, and the ad valorem duty upon it is 83 per cent. From Mexico the importation to this country is considerable, and the duty is 34 per cent. From the Spanish possessions the importation to this country is something over a million and a half, and the ad valorem duty upon it is 83 per cent. As to all those grades of salt which enter into daily use, which come to us from England, which the people use, the common people and the rich people, which is upon the table of the rich as well as the poor, all that goes into the butter and is consumed in domestic use, the average ad valorem rate upon it will not in any case exceed 45 per cent.

There is a class of salt coming in which needs to be purified, as it is of the very coarsest quality which comes here in bulk, and upon which the ad valorem duty is 100 per cent. It is utterly impossible to frame a bill in which to draw the line between the two. It must be settled and determined by chemistry and by chemistry alone, and by an analysis of it.

There is nothing, however, in this pretense that the duty stands higher and is exceptional to the duties which are maintained by the present law and which have been maintained in all the past upon those articles which come in competition with the industries of our country. At the present time, with the vast beds of rock-salt discovered in New York, in Michigan, in Nebraska, in Kansas, in Louisiana, and in Texas, salt in its natural state is worth no more than the adjacent rock or the adjacent earth or the adjacent sand-pits. Every single mill of its value is in the labor which is bestowed upon it to refine it and prepare it for domestic use.

But, Mr. President, I have a word to say now in reference to the prices that the Senator from North Carolina has called attention to.

In 1867, I think under the same protection which salt has now, the price of salt per barrel was $1.77; in 1887 the price of salt per barrel was 55 cents, including the barrel worth 25 cents. This "onerous tax" that the people have had imposed upon them has produced just this result in this country. Geology has pointed unerringly to where the salt lay. It has told that nothing was necessary but capital to sink a well 1,000, 1,500, 2,000, or 3,000 feet, and then rock-salt would be found; and with the guaranty of protection capital has been ready to sink these wells. Geology was right; the rock-salt lay there, and to-day it goes upon the market at a fair remuneration to the capital invested in it and the cost of labor in bringing it to the surface, cleansing it, and rendering it fit for consumption; and I undertake to say—there will be more truth in the statement, if not near so much wit as in what we have already heard—that if we had had free salt in this country capital would not have been found to develop what geology and science told us was beneath the surface of the earth in these localities. Large sums are required for it and co-operation of capital. It is a large industry, and to-day it only exists because of the economical management of these industries.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator be kind enough to state how many laborers or operatives are engaged in this industry in the whole United States?

Mr. HISCOCK. I should say in the neighborhood of 10,000.

Mr. VEST. I think not over 3,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. There are 3,000 in my own county dependent upon this industry, and I commence there with the men who raise the brine to the surface of the earth. I also take into account the cooperage, the men who are employed in making the barrels; I take into account the men who are engaged in making the sacks; I take into account the immense factories in which it is ground and prepared for domestic use, as well as those that simply are engaged in evaporating the salt and making a marketable commodity of it, and I will not reduce my figures at all when you estimate the number of men, women, and children engaged in this and kindred industries. I say to the Senator from Missouri that this is a woman's industry; more women and children than men are engaged in the sacking, the making of the sacks, the paper, and all that contributes to it or which is involved in placing it upon the market. I do not think that I have placed the number too high when I say that there are 3,000 people in one county in the State of New York who are interested in the production and manufacture of salt or are engaged in some industry dependent upon it.

No, the Senator is entirely mistaken if he supposes the people complain of this duty under the witticisms or in the face of the witticisms that have been expended upon this industry. I say that you can scarcely make a speech, I care not how eloquent or witty it may be, it may abound in the rhetoric indulged in by the Senator from Indiana the other day, but if he will give me a little time I will dig up from where it is buried in the RECORD language so near that if read upon the floor it would sound like plagiarism.

Mr. VOORHEES. From whom?

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not charging any one with plagiarism. I remember the Senator from Indiana the other day made an argument against this industry of salt, and I was saying that the elocutionary efforts on this subject have been so abundant and have been engaged in so often that they have necessarily thrashed over the same old straw, and they sound exactly alike.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does the Senator from New York allude to me?

Mr. HISCOCK. I was at times alluding to some remarks made by the Senator in reference to salt in a speech he made the other day.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does he say that my remarks were borrowed or taken from somebody else?

Mr. HISCOCK. No, sir; nothing of the kind. I have made no insinuation, much less a charge of that kind.

Mr. VOORHEES. I certainly did not steal anything contained in my few remarks.

Mr. HISCOCK. Possibly what I said might appear to bear that construction, though I think not.

Mr. VOORHEES. It sounded like an insinuation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have made no such insinuation; I certainly had no such intention. What I did say and what I repeat is that the arguments in reference to this industry have been so oft repeated upon the floor, these witty attacks upon the industry have been so oft repeated here, that you may dig out from where they are buried in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD speeches which sound familiarly like them from which one might suppose those who are talking to-day on the subject talked yesterday. All there is of it, Mr. President, is that the same inspiration induced the same effort.

Mr. VANCE. I simply rise, with the Senator's permission, to ask him if anything in favor of protective tariff is repeated?

Mr. HISCOCK. Nothing that the Senator said, I suppose, was a repetition of anything that he ever heard or read in his life. I trust I am making myself clear. It is like a lawyer's arguments upon the same facts, where you will find yourself right in the footsteps of some one who has gone before you, and this again illustrates or emphasizes the intelligence of the people of the United States. This sort of thing has been pounded into them line upon line and precept upon precept for half a century without the slightest effect upon their judgment and their understanding.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I was not going to ask the Senator if he was accusing me of plagiarism. I know he would not do that. I simply wanted to ask him if he supposed that anything said in favor of protection had ever been said before. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. It has been, and we will commence back with the wonderful doctrine emanating from the brain of Alexander Hamilton, given to the American people and to Congress, and in it you find the germ of all that has been said since, and like the stone, I think, that was hewn out of the mountain, it has now nearly filled the whole earth, and it will fill it completely in the process of time, and the prediction made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] the other day, I think, will within the lives of some of us be verified.

Mr. President, the salt industry alone is not quite all there is of it. There is something else that I desire to call the attention of Senators to as connected with it. We will take the sal-soda interest in the United States. Seventy thousand tons of it are manufactured in the United States and manufactured from salt. With a development of the salt production in this country, that industry has come here, and it may be necessary for me to number with those interested or engaged in salt and dependent upon the salt industries those engaged in the production of sal-soda. Practically it is made from salt and limestone. Let us look at the price of it with the development in this country, planted, as it is, side by side with the salt industry, fed from the salt-springs. In 1875, when, I think, there was none or but little made in this country, it was 1½ cents a pound, and in 1887 it was at six-tenths of 1 cent per pound, having fallen gradually during that period.

Of soda-ash, which is another product of salt, 65,000 or 70,000 tons are manufactured in this country, and those engaged in its manufacture are engaged in the salt industry, and it is planted side by side with the salt-spring. I know of an instance in which capital—this much-abused capital that is talked about—went 20 miles and bored 3,000 feet in the bowels of the earth in order to bring up the brine and transport it in pipes to soda-ash factories established under the guaranty of the protection which the law now affords to salt. Soda-ash that was 2.1 cents a pound in 1875, in 1887 was 1.1 cents a pound. I have given the Senate the large amount of it which is produced in this country, and when you strike at the tariff upon salt, you strike equally at that industry which exists in this country, and which will be planted everywhere where it is discovered that there is rock-salt, or salt water in sufficient quantities for manufactures to be established there so as to supply the adjacent market with it.

Soda-ash is a new industry, as is suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], as all these are, commencing about ten years ago.

Of sulphate of soda or salt-cake thirty to forty thousand tons are made in this country. It is principally a new industry. In 1875 the price was 3.2 cents a pound, and in the year of our Lord 1887 it was reduced three-tenths of a cent a pound.

Of bicarbonate of soda, another product of salt, from fifty-five to sixty thousand tons are made in this country, and the price has been reduced from 3½ cents a pound in 1875 to 1.8 cents in 1887.

I say there is no record in reference to any other industry in the United States that more clearly demonstrates the propriety of protection and its effect in lowering the price to the consumer than is exhibited in the case of this industry of salt, which has been developed all over the United States, and, as I have shown, side by side with it have grown up these industries in the production of which salt is the raw material. Nothing but labor and fair interest upon capital are involved to-day in the cost of any of them to the people of the United States. It is no longer a feeble industry depending upon the logic which could be presented and the vote of one man interested in it in the United States to defend it. The results which have come speak for themselves, and a great party to a man stands ready to defend and support it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the unaffected modesty of the Senator from New York is absolutely charming and refreshing. If his argument this afternoon, or the half of it, is to be accepted as true, those of us who are now proposing to put salt on the free-list are almost idiotic.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think so.

Mr. VEST. And our patriotism amounts to just nothing at all.

Now, Mr. President, we have some illustrious precedents upon this question of putting salt on the free-list, notwithstanding the absolutely convincing and irrefutable argument of the Senator from New York. I have heard that argument before. I have read it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg the Senator's pardon. He never did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. There are certain elements and certain facts stated by me to-day for which I claim the credit of entire originality. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. I am certain—and, speaking for myself, absolutely certain—that the right to that patent will never be disputed. [Laughter.] The Senator is welcome to that patent forever, not under the limitations of the statute, but without day.

Mr. President, the portion of the Senator's argument which I said we had heard before is that part repeated ad nauseam every time that a tariff bill comes before Congress for discussion, to the effect that the duty is so infinitesimal that no attention should be paid to it at all, that salt is so cheap that it has become like the dirt beneath our feet, like the rocks and cliffs around us. If that be so, why does the Republican party take off this duty on salt in behalf of the fishermen of New England? Why does it give a rebate to exporters of meats and keep the tariff duty upon those farmers in the West who prepare their meat for the domestic market?

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the Senator want me to answer that question now?

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. HISCOCK. I say that, in my judgment, it ought to be repealed, and I say further than that, there is no logic, in my opinion, which can sustain the law referred to.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator mean that the discrimination now in favor of the fishermen of New England and the exporters of meat ought to be repealed?

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as the exporters of meat are concerned, no; it ought not to be repealed, because it is a principle underlying this bill that upon goods which are exported from this country and go into a foreign market they should be put on an equality with what they have to compete with on the other side. That is a feature in the law and in the bill running through it. So far as the rebate on salt used in curing fish is concerned, in my opinion it ought to be repealed.

Mr. VEST. I understand, then, the Senator from New York to state that he thinks that that portion of the existing law, which discriminates in favor of the fishermen of New England, ought to be repealed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

Mr. VEST. Then it is most remarkable that the Senator agreed to the report of the committee which retained it in this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no, it is not.

Mr. VEST. That identical clause is in this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that identical clause is in this bill, but it is necessary in all cases in the formation of a bill to a certain extent that it should be a matter of compromise. There may be things in this bill very likely that, in my judgment, should be changed. I admit that very frankly—not many, but a few. I always yield to the judgment of those whom I am associated with in the formation of a bill, as I said, to a certain extent.

Mr. VEST. I hope that my innocence and my unsophisticated nature will be excused in this regard, because I assume that when a Senator agrees to a report as to an entire bill, and then defends it schedule by schedule and item by item, he means to take the whole bill and to indorse it before the whole country.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do. I say that I shall vote for this bill and defend this bill. I had an occasion the other day to attack that principle of the bill, but I did not do it. One is not precluded from supporting a bill, where there is no great moral question involved, simply because he does not indorse every line in it.

Mr. VEST. Then, Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New York when he strikes those sections of the bill to which he is opposed mentally will indicate it in some way to the Senate, so that we may know exactly what it is and where he stands.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me a word?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri has on several occasions alluded to the fact that this provision discriminates in favor of the fishermen of New England. I do not understand the bill in that way. It discriminates in favor of, and is, in a certain sense, an indirect bounty to, the fishermen of the United States, and is applied alike to the fishermen of the Southern, and Middle, and Western States, and on the Great Lakes, and is used alike by the fishermen of the entire country.

Mr. VEST. I have not the bill before me with that provision in it, but it speaks of licensed vessels engaged in the fishing trade, and we all know what that means. Where are the fishing interests of this country? They are not out in the West; they are not in the trans-Mississippi department.

Mr. ALDRICH. After the speeches made the other day by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Wisconsin, I think it will not be safe to say hereafter that the fishing interests of this country are not in the West, in Wisconsin particularly.

Mr. PALMER. And in Michigan.

Mr. ALDRICH. And in Michigan and California.

Mr. VEST. Now, Mr. President, there is not an intelligent man in this country who does not know that when we speak of the fishing interests they are the interests upon the northeastern coast. The Senator from New York says he is opposed to that feature of the bill; that it is unjust, and yet his colleague on the committee stands here and says no such feature is in the bill, when specifically, in totidem verbis, it says that vessels licensed in the fishing interest of the United States, in the fishing business, are to have this rebate or have this exemption from the tariff taxation upon salt.

We have heard a great deal about the home market of the United States, and yet here is a man who prepares meat for the foreign market who has a rebate upon the salt he uses, whilst the man who prepares meat for the domestic and home market does not have that privilege at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to read the provision? I think he is certainly laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. VEST. I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is as follows:

That imported salt in bond may be used in curing fish taken by vessels licensed to engage in the fisheries, and in curing fish on the shores of the navigable waters of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and upon proof that the salt has been used for either of the purposes stated in this proviso, the duties on the same shall be remitted.

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. ALDRICH. That applies to all the fisheries.

Mr. VEST. Of course, but the fishing interests upon the navigable shores of the United States outside of the Northeast amount absolutely, for all purposes of argument, to nothing. When we speak of the fishing interests, every intelligent man knows what that means. It means the interests of New England, which have almost involved us in war, and we have now the shadow of a great unsettled question hanging over us on account of our relations with Great Britain by reason of those fisheries.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator had better consult the Senators from Maryland and from North Carolina and from the Pacific coast and the Great Lakes, before he makes such a statement.

Mr. VEST. I do not pretend to deny that there are some fishing interests outside of the coast of New England, but I say this law was put there to protect those interests on the northeastern coast, and if other interests have sprung up and they are flourishing, for the purposes of this argument they might as well not exist, because when we speak of the fishing interests every man's mind instinctively turns to the interests upon the northeastern coast.

Now, as I said, if salt is so insignificant in value, if it to-day is as cheap as the dirt under our feet, why this discrimination at all? Why not make it like the air of heaven, free to all alike throughout this entire country? Why do Senators tell us that it is nothing, it is like the rock, it is like the dirt, and yet preserve these distinctions which must amount to something, or else we are simply making asses of ourselves in passing upon them at all? We know that there is a discrimination in this bill reported here by the majority of the Finance Committee.

But the Senator from New York ridicules any speech made for free salt and says it is simply a tissue of rhetoric and attempted wit, and it amounts to nothing; it is old, stale parliamentary talk in Congress and upon the hustings which he has heard for years—he will hear it again—and it amounts almost to absolute plagiarism. I want to read some votes on this question to show whether or not the men who voted for free salt and advocated it in this country can be charged with any mental deficiency, any want of intellect.

Let me read from the proceedings of the Senate March 28, 1872:

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to strike out "nine" and insert "three," so as to make the duty 3 cents.

This was in relation to the duty on salt.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Blair, Carpenter—

Did anybody ever suppose that Matt. Carpenter was not a man of intellect?

Casserly, Cooper, Edmunds—

Now a distinguished Senator in this Chamber from Vermont; he voted in favor of reducing the duty on this worthless article—

Harlan, Hill, Howe, Logan, Norwood, Patterson, Stevenson, Trumbull, and Vickers—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Davis of West Virginia, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Kellogg, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pomeroy, Robertson, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, West, Wilson, and Wright—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Ames, Bayard, Brownlow, Buckingham, Caldwell, Cameron, Clayton, Cragin, Davis of Kentucky, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, Nye, Osborn, Pool, Pratt, Ramsey, Rice, Saulsbury, Sawyer, Schurz, Spencer, Stockton, Sumner, Thurman, Tipton, and Windom—32.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will move to amend the amendment by adding these words: "And that from and after the passage of this act salt shall be placed on the free-list, and no further import duties shall be collected upon the same."

On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Blair, Cooper, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin——

Mr. COCKRELL. Was that Hannibal Hamlin?

Mr. VEST. Yes, Hannibal Hamlin, formerly Vice-President of the United States.

Harlan, Hill, Kelly, Logan, Norwood, Pool, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Sawyer, Schurz, Spencer, Sumner—

The great leader of the Republican party, Charles Sumner—

Trumbull, and Windom—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Anthony, Boreman, Caldwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Cragin, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Maryland, Kellogg, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Osborn, Patterson, Pomeroy, Rice, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, West, Wilson, and Wright—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Brownlow, Buckingham, Carpenter, Cassserly, Davis of Kentucky, Davis of West Virginia, Edmunds, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Lewis, Morrill of Maine, Nye, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Vickers—25.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. What is the date of that?

Mr. VEST. March 26, 1872. The other was March 28, 1872.

Now, Mr. President, when we come to the House of Representatives we find that some gentlemen there voted in favor of putting salt on the free-list who are not amenable to the charge of mental incapacity made by the Senator from New York. I quote from the House Journal of June 27, 1870.

Mr. Reeves submitted the following preamble and resolution, namely:

"Whereas salt is an article of prime necessity and universal consumption, which, proportionally to numbers, forms a larger item in the domestic economy of families of small or moderate means than it does on those of the wealthier classes, and ought therefore at all times be as lightly taxed as is consistent with a due regard to the revenue needed for an economical administration of the Government; and

"Whereas in any genuine and well-considered scheme of revenue reform, duties which tend directly and largely to augment the cost of such a commodity as salt should be reduced in preference to others which bear less heavily upon the resources of the great body of the people: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means is hereby directed and instructed to report to this House forthwith a bill reducing the present duties on all classes of salt 50 per cent."

And I find voting in favor of that Messrs. DAWES and HOAR, of Massachusetts, KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, the great father of protection, now in Congress, Schenck, of Ohio, and Wheeler, of New York, afterwards Vice-President of the United States. Are these gentlemen amenable to the charge made by the Senator from New York that the American people and all intelligent men have repudiated the idea of putting this worthless article of no value upon the free-list and exempting it from duty?

But again——

Mr. HISCOCK. Allow me to inquire of the Senator, that I may not misunderstand him: Does he mean to say that the last vote he has mentioned was to put salt on the free-list?

Mr. VEST. No; but a reduction in the duty of 50 per cent., and in the line of putting it on the free-list.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it was by that vote, if my recollection is not at fault, that it was reduced to the present rate.

Mr. VEST. It was a reduction upon salt and an indorsement of the resolution that declared the duty should be lowered in order to make it cheaper to the poorer classes of people throughout the country. That is the point in this entire argument; and if our friends on the other side undertake to say that the reduction of the duty does not reduce the cost to the consumer, I want to point them to that clause in their report upon sugar where they say that the reduction of the duty on sugar is necessary to make it cheaper to the people of the United States. If that be true as to sugar, it is equally true as to salt, and it is true as to all the articles of consumption, for the principle is not changed by changing the article.

Mr. DAWES. I have voted since I have been here for the reduction of duties to the amount of $150,000,000 just as I did then.

Mr. VEST. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. DAWES. And I am generally considered somewhat of a protectionist.

Mr. VEST. I am glad to hear that the Senator has conceded that duties ought to be reduced even $150,000,000. Judging from the argument of the Senator from New York the people of the United States have decared against any reduction, notwithstanding that in the platform of the Republican party in 1884 they proposed to reduce duties and reform the inequalities of the tariff.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator of course understands the meaning of the two words "then" and "now."

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes. Of course we always find that time makes a difference in the principle.

Mr. ALDRICH. If free salt is such a sound Democratic doctrine as I understand the Senator from Missouri to say it is, how does it happen that during the period from 1846 to 1861, when the Democratic party a large portion of the time was in control of both branches of Congress and of the Executive, no legislative attempt was ever made to put salt on the free-list?

Mr. VEST. Salt was put on the free-list in 1846.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. VEST. Not in 1846?

Mr. ALDRICH. It never has been on the free-list since 1812, and no attempt has ever been made, so far as I know, by a Democratic Congress, when they had the control of the Government, to put salt on the free-list.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] has misled the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on this subject.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me a moment?

Mr. VEST. I do not know to whom I last yielded, so many Senators have been on the floor.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I will withdraw my request. I see the Senator from North Carolina desires to say something on this subject.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to state that in the compilation furnished us by the Department of the Treasury there is no duty appearing from 1846 to 1861, when the tariff was reimposed upon salt according to this statement at 4 cents per bushel in bulk and 6 cents per bushel in bags.

Mr. ALDRICH. Under the act of 1842.

Mr. VANCE. The act of 1861, March 2, 1861. Up to 1842 it was 8 cents a bushel, I believe.

Mr. ALDRICH. What does the Senator understand the duty to have been under the act of 1846?

Mr. VANCE. None at all; at least this compilation gives none; and, as I stated in my remarks, the act of 1846 and the act of 1861 were both entire tariff acts and were not amendatory of existing law. So, as no duty on salt appears in the act of 1846, and as it reappears in 1861, I infer, according to the statement in this book, that there was no duty from 1846 to 1861.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator still think that is true?

Mr. VANCE. I do. I have no authority for its not being true except the Senator from Rhode Island. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has a great deal better authority here than the Senator from North Carolina or myself, and that is the official reports of the Treasury Department. I will say that from 1846 to 1861 there was a duty collected of 20 per cent. ad valorem, imposed by the act of 1846.

Mr. VANCE. I have given my authority. It may be that this compilation has misled me.

Mr. ALDRICH. It certainly has in this case.

Mr. HISCOCK. The people are not misled. They know how it stands, and how the statutes read.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Missouri except for a word.

When the Senator from North Carolina stated that salt was on the free-list from 1846 to 1861 I thought he was mistaken, and I find that he is mistaken. I find in House of Representatives Executive Document No. 36, Thirty-third Congress, first session, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statistics of salt, which, on January 30, 1854, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

I will read it:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 26, 1854.

SIR: On the 14th of December last the House adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish this House with a statement of the number of establishments, and where located in the United States, engaged in the manufacture of salt; of the probable amount of capital invested in the said manufacture in each State; the average quantity annually manufactured at said establishments; and a table of prices for which the said article has sold under the present rate of duties thereon; and also to inform the House of the annual amount of revenue received from the importation of foreign salt into the United States."

In reply to this resolution, I have the honor to submit the following documents:

A. A table from the Superintendent of the Census, entitled "Statistics of the salt manufactured in the United States for the year ending 1st of June, 1850," purporting to embrace all the salt manufactories in the country whose annual product is $500 or upwards in value.

B. A table from the Register of the Treasury, entitled "A statement exhibiting the quantity and value of salt imported annually from 1847 to 1853, and also the duties which accrued thereon during the same period."

C. A table showing the value per bushel, or per barrel, of the salt manufactured in different counties of different States, according to the statement received from the Superintendent of the Census.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES GUTHRIE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. LINN BOYD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a little further I will call attention to the table and I will ask, if there be no objection, that I may put in the whole document, because it is an old one and it may throw some light on the subject under discussion. The statement of the Senator from North Carolina is that during that time salt was worth 26.4 cents per bushel. That would be about $1.32 a barrel.

Now, Mr. President, not wishing to detain the Senate, I should like to be allowed to put in the RECORD the rest of this executive document No. 36 of the Thirty-third Congress, first session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

The remainder of the document is as follows:

The table does not supply the data for ascertaining the value per bushel, or per barrel, of the salt manufactured in the States of Maine, Massachusetts, New York, and Florida.

Mr. VOORHEES. To test the sense of the Senate, if it will not be intruding upon the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill, I will make a motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting that motion the Chair will lay before the Senate some messages from the President of the United States.

Mr. VOORHEES. I withdraw the motion, to allow that to be done.

DIFFERENTIAL TONNAGE DUES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress and such legislation in respect of the matters therein presented as may seem necessary and proper, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying explanatory correspondence, in reference to the international questions arising from the imposition of differential rates of tonnage dues upon vessels entering ports of the United States from foreign countries under the provisions of the fourteenth section of the act of June 26, 1884, and the later amendatory provisions of the act of June 19, 1886, as set forth in said report.

CONSULAR COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES IN CHINA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Whereas, by virtue of the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 22, 1860 (Statutes at Large, volume 12, page 73), entitled "An act to carry into effect provisions of the treaties between the United States, China, Japan, Siam, Persia, and other countries, giving certain judicial powers to ministers and consuls, or other functionaries of the United States in those countries, and for other purposes," Charles Denby, minister of the United States at Peking, has formally promulgated, under date of August 18, 1888, additional regulations governing the rendition of judgments by confession in the consular courts of the United States in China, the same having been previously assented to by all the consular officers of this Government in that Empire:

Now, therefore, in accordance with section 4119 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, being the sixth section of the act above mentioned, and which directs that all such regulations shall be transmitted to the Secretary of State "to be laid before Congress for revision," I do transmit herewith to Congress a copy of Mr. Denby's dispatch No. 754, of November 5, 1888, containing the regulations so decreed.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 14, 1889.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11785) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation and crossing of certain streets in the city of Washington and District of Columbia by the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, to meet the demands of increased travel incident to the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th of March, 1889; and

A bill (H. R. 12009) to provide for the keeping open of the Potomac River.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1092) for the relief of certain property in the District of Columbia, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had receded from its amendment to the bill (S. 2726) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 5985) to increase the pension of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardiner, and Mrs. Lilla May Pavy to $30 per month; and

A bill (S. 944) increasing the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth G. Scott.

ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATIONS OF NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the annual volumes of the Astronomical Observations of the Naval Observatory for 1886, 1887, and 1888, be printed, and that 1,800 additional copies of each report be printed, of which 300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 800 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

MARGARET S. HEINTZELMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House recede from its amendment to the bill (S. 2726) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No further action is required on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT IMPROVEMENT ASSESSMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1092) for the relief of certain property in the District of Columbia, which was, in line 17, to strike out "1887" and to insert "1888;" which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11785) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation and crossing of certain streets in the city of Washington and District of Columbia by the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, to meet the demands of increased travel incident to the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th of March, 1889, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. 12009) to provide for the keeping open the Potomac River was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 15, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 14, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

MRS. MARY ANN CROSS AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RUSSELL] asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 5985) to increase the pensions of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardiner, and Mrs. Lilla May Pavy to $30 per month, and that the Senate amendment be concurred in. It is merely the change of a single letter in the orthography of a name, an "i" being put in place of an "e." If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. PENINGTON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 104) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1887, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands; when the Speaker signed the same.

HOUR OF ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, and as soon as it is read will ask the previous question on its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the order made on the 11th day of May, 1888, providing that the sessions of the House shall close each day at 5 o'clock, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question.

Mr. PAYSON. Pending that I desire to enter a motion to recommit the resolution with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The proposed instructions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To recommit the pending resolution to the Committee on Rules with instruction to report the same back by to-morrow, or the next legislative day, with this amendment: "That immediately after the expiration of the hour for the consideration of bills as provided by clause 5, Rule XXIV, on Tuesday, January 15 instant, the House shall proceed, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of Senate bill No. 181, entitled 'An act granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors,' and shall continue its consideration in like manner from day to day until disposed of. Such consideration being subject to prior orders, election cases, general appropriation bills, and reports from conference committees. Said bill being attached hereto and made part hereof."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that that is not germane. This is a report touching an order of the House, and is not a change of its rules.

Mr. PAYSON. What is the statement of the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that the proposed instructions are not germane to the pending proposition.

Mr. PAYSON. I would be glad to know on what ground the point of order is made. This is a proposition to change a special order or rule of the House, and the instructions proposed have reference to the same.

Mr. RANDALL. The proposition of the Committee on Rules is to rescind an order fixing an hour for adjournment; and there is a clear and marked distinction between that and another proposition fixing certain bills for consideration, which would of necessity be in effect a change of other rules of the House.

I am, it seems to me, the proper one, Mr. Speaker, to make this point of order in connection with proposed pension legislation, and object to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois coming in in this way; because it is well known to all the members of this House that I have been always and steadily in the advance in the direction of granting pensions or wherever pension legislation has been involved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania it is to abrogate so much of the special order which has become a standing order or rule of the House, adopted on the 11th of May last, as provides that the daily sessions of the House shall terminate at 5 o'clock.

To all intents and purposes that order has the force and effect of a standing rule of the House. It is a standing order under which, since the day named, the House has been operating, and it is proposed now in the resolution reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as I understand his proposition, to abrogate that standing rule. The first phrase of the rule which provided for the meeting of the House at 11 o'clock every day was by unanimous consent, as I recollect, abrogated, but left the remainder of the rule in operation.

Now, if the resolution reported here has for its object a change of that standing order, which has the same force and effect as a standing rule of the House, I insist that it is in order and germane to the proposition to permit the Committee on Rules to make such additional order in connection with the proposed change as in their judgment shall be proper in regard to what character of legislation shall take its place; and the proposition which I have submitted as a substitute for the report of the Committee on Rules it seems to me is necessarily in order.

The SPEAKER. The proposition reported from the Committee on Rules is not a proposition to change any rule of the House; but even if it were the Chair does not think it would be in order to move to amend it by fixing days for the consideration of particular measures of legislation. Suppose, for instance, that the Committee on Rules had reported a proposition changing the rule in relation to the call of committees in the morning, or the call of the States and Territories for the introduction of bills on Mondays, the Chair does not think it would be in order pending such consideration to amend by fixing a day for the consideration of any special bill.

In this case the order which the committee proposes to change is no more than the other order which we have that the House shall take a recess at 5 o'clock on certain days to meet again at half past 7. Suppose the Committee on Rules should bring in now a proposition to rescind that order in regard to the recess, the Chair does not think it would be in order to move to amend it by fixing days for the consideration of special measures. The Chair thinks, in other words, that it is not in order to fix a day for the consideration of bills upon a proposition to change a permanent rule, although such a proposition would be entirely in order when there is pending a proposition to fix days for the consideration of special measures.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Upon a motion to recommit with instructions is the motion amendable?

The SPEAKER. Unless the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. Under existing circumstances, I mean.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has not been ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I offer the following amendment, and to that I offer a further amendment, which I also send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman can not amend his own motion. He can modify it in any way he chooses, and have it stated in that form, or in any form that he sees proper. But the invariable parliamentary practice is that when a gentleman undertakes to amend his own motion it is simply a modification of his original motion. In other words, that the House can not be required to vote upon a modification of his own motion until it is in possession of the original resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that an amendment to the proposition?

The SPEAKER. It is an amendment of his motion, not an amendment to the proposition reported by the committee. The gentleman moved to recommit, and now proposes to modify his motion, the Chair having ruled that the motion already made is not in order.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Would it be in order for any other gentleman upon the floor to move an amendment to the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The proposition to recommit is in order when the previous question is not ordered upon it. The present occupant of the chair has ruled to the contrary, but there have been one or two rulings that it was in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. PAYSON. I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to recommit the resolution of the Committee on Rules, with instructions to report the same back with the following amendment:

That the rescission of the said order of May 11,1888, shall not apply to the sessions on the first and third Mondays of each month, so that the hour of adjournment on each of those days shall be 5 o'clock p. m. as now; and also,

That upon the rescinding of said order, as above provided, on the first legislative day that shall occur thereafter, at the hour of 5 o'clock p. m., the remainder of such legislative day, as well as each succeeding day, after the hour for the consideration of bills reported by committees, shall be set apart for the consideration of Senate bill 181, until the same shall be disposed of, subject, however, to the consideration of prior orders, election cases, general appropriation bills, and reports from conference committees.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order on that part of the proposition as stated by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is all subject to the point of order, except the first part, which provides that the order shall not take effect on certain days.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Rules with instructions as to the first part.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that the motion to recommit is in order, as stated by the Chair, for reasons given by the Chair, but the proposition in the other part is a very different proposition, and is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so ruled, and thereupon the gentleman offers the first part of his proposition, which simply limits the days to which the proposition reported by the Committee on Rules shall apply. It simply provides that the rescission shall not affect the hour of adjournment on the first and third Mondays of the month. The Chair thinks that is in order; and the question is on recommitting with instructions.

Mr. RANDALL. On that I demand the previous question.

Mr. PAYSON rose.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable, because the previous question has been demanded upon the gentleman's proposition. The ruling has been that a proposition to recommit is not debatable, and it has been ruled that it is not amendable; but the Chair thought that an improper ruling, and that an amendment is in order, but that an amendment was not debatable.

Mr. PAYSON. Upon that principle it seems to me that where a proposition is amended the previous question is not operative; and if the previous question is not operative it is debatable, unless there is some specific provision in the rules to the contrary.

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. PAYSON. That a proposition of that character is not debatable? I have not been able to find any rule to that effect.

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is clause 3 of Rule XVII, page 250, at the top of the page.

The SPEAKER. That is not the clause. [Laughter.] It is clause 2 of Rule XIII, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The question of reference of any proposition other than that reported from a committee shall be decided without debate, in the following order, namely: a standing committee, a select committee; but the reference of a proposition reported by a committee, when demanded, shall be decided according to its character, without debate, in the following order, namely: House Calendar, Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Committee of the Whole House, a standing committee, a select committee.

Mr. PAYSON. But, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is not a question of reference, because there is no pretense but that the resolution should go to the Committee on Rules. I agree that a question of reference is not debatable, but this is not a question of reference; it is a question of recommitment, of the recommitment of a proposition which the Speaker decides, and, as I think, decides properly, is amendable, and because it is amendable it is debatable, the previous question not operating upon the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any provision in the rules or any practice of the House which permits debate upon a proposition to refer, whether it be upon an original commitment or a recommitment. It has never been the practice of the House to debate such propositions. The Chair thinks this is not debatable.

Mr. PAYSON. I should like to submit some observations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to hear the gentleman, but the Chair knows of no practice of the House which would make such a question as this debatable. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The regular order is demanded. The Chair has decided the question of order. The question is upon the motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the proposition read again so that we may clearly know what we are to vote upon.

The Clerk again read Mr. PAYSON'S motion to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit; and it was rejected—ayes 56, noes 75.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the previous question upon the report of the committee.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the adoption of the report of the committee. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate, if gentlemen desire to avail themselves of it.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether the Committee on Rules would not think it best to modify this order so as to let the time of meeting be at 11 or half past 10 in the morning instead of extending the daily session at the other end?

Mr. RANDALL. I will say in reply to the question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that I do not remember that the proposition which he suggests was discussed at all in the Committee on Rules. I think I may say that it was not.

The SPEAKER. There are thirty minutes for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. CANNON was recognized.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be recognized before the question is taken upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to my colleague now if he desires.

Mr. PAYSON. I will wait.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say only a few words. I favor the adoption of this resolution. Since the 5-o'clock adjournment order has been in operation we have found in practice that about the hour of 4 many if not most of us, knowing that there must be an adjournment at 5 whatever may happen in the mean time or whatever may be before the House, take our hats and coats and courteously say good-by to those who remain, so that ordinarily an hour or more before adjournment the House is left without a quorum. Now, it occurs to me that it is in the interest of the orderly conduct of the business of the House that a majority of the House should be present, and the exigencies of legislation may sometimes, perhaps frequently, require our sitting beyond the hour of 5 o'clock, and for one I am in favor of any modification of the orders or rules of this House which will enable a majority of the House to legislate. The mere rescinding of this 5-o'clock order is not as radical action on the part of the House as I would be glad to see it take and as I believe it ought to take. I would be willing to go much further. When it is remembered that for ten days past one man in this House has seen proper and has been able, under the rules, to obstruct all business, I think it is perfectly patent—it certainly is so to every one of the minority, and I believe it is to substantially all of the majority—that there should be at least this proposed modification, and, as I said before, that there should be even more radical action in the direction of modifying our rules. So far as I am concerned I am willing to offer at the proper time and to advocate an amendment substantially as I am about to read. If gentlemen will turn to the Manual, page 248, they will find the rule which makes a motion to adjourn, a motion to adjourn to a day certain, or a motion to take a recess in order at any time. I would be very glad to see the House at the proper time, and when we can have that poor privilege under the existing rules, amend clause 5 of that rule in this way:

In line 3, after the word "order," insert "except when they are made as dilatory motions; as such they shall not be in order."

The effect of that amendment would be to cut off dilatory motions whenever it appeared to the Speaker of the House that motions were made as such. That would be granting great power to the Speaker, some may say. True; but all the while the Speaker is liable to be corrected and overruled by the majority of the House, and all the while the public sentiment of the country is liable to be directed unfavorably towards him if his action is found to be arbitrary or otherwise unjustifiable.

So that I not only vote to repeal this order (being the matter now immediately before the House) which requires us to adjourn at 5 o'clock each day, because such repeal tends to enlarge the power of the majority, but I would go still further, if I had power by my vote to do so, and would cut up absolutely by the roots these three motions when they are made as dilatory motions. If that action were had the motion to adjourn could be made; then a motion to adjourn to a day certain, with two amendments, could be made; then a motion to take a recess, with two amendments, could be made. These seven motions could be made, with seven roll-calls, if one-fifth of those present should order the yeas and nays; and upon six of these roll-calls a quorum could be demanded even under the modification of which I speak and which I stand ready to vote for when I get a chance. Then, if the motions were repeated, I would place it in the power of the Speaker to say, upon the point of order being made, that they were dilatory motions, thus allowing the majority to assume the responsibility it was sent here to assume, and to legislate.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Not now.

It may be said that this measure is not pending. That is true; but I would be glad if under the rules I could offer that amendment at some proper time.

Mr. STEELE. Why did you not do so in the Committee on Rules?

Mr. CANNON. Well, if it is proper for me to say what took place in the committee——

Mr. RANDALL. Go ahead; I make no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I would say it was evident in committee that upon this proposition——

Mr. DINGLEY. Which committee—the committee which previously determined what should be done, or the whole of the committee?

Mr. RANDALL. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. CANNON. Let me understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman was referring to what took place "in the committee." My question was whether he alluded to the meeting of the committee of four members with Mr. WEAVER, who determined this matter at first, or to the regular meeting of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. I know nothing of the committee of which Mr. WEAVER is a member. The proposition which is now before the House, being one step toward enlarging the power of the majority, I am for it; and I am in favor of the far more radical steps which I have indicated when I can get the opportunity to test the sense of the House upon that proposition.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether he has ever, as a member of Committee on Rules, made a minority report here, or made any other effort to secure this modification of the rules of this House; and if so, when?

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that I am a member of the Committee on Rules, and in the minority, and am powerless to control the action of the committee.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is one way of making a protest against the action of the majority of the committee, and that is by making a minority report and defending the report.

Mr. CANNON. The Committee on Rules was unanimous in this report, and I believe every other report it has made this Congress. My criticism on that committee is for its failure to report resolutions referred to it, and not for reporting improper resolutions.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to abridge the debate, but I would like to be recognized before the whole of the fifteen minutes are taken up.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the floor when I have said that as one member of the minority of the Committee on Rules I had, on this proposition to do away with the 5 o'clock hour of adjournment, no minority report to make, because, I say again, it strengthens the arm of the majority——

A MEMBER. How?

Mr. CANNON. It enables the majority to proceed beyond the hour of 5 o'clock in the consideration of legislation.

Mr. PAYSON. Does it not allow the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to keep us here all night, if he chooses to do so, instead of cutting him off at 5 o'clock?

Mr. CUTCHEON. And to keep us here not merely one night, but several nights in succession.

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be wise for this House to call itself back to the real question at issue. That question is not one of temper, but one of parliamentary law. For the last ten years—that is to say, ever since I obtained an inkling of what the real rules of this House were—I have been opposed to their general scope and tendency. I have made this manifest in season and out of season through that whole period of time. In this House, in committee, and everywhere, I have striven for such a modification of the rules as would enable the majority of this House to control its business. I am acting in that spirit to-day. I proposed the other day, on behalf of the Committee on Rules, a proposition which would not permit the introduction of bills on two particular Mondays of each month. That was a small, a very small movement in the direction of my belief. Nevertheless I was ready to go for it, because it was in my direction. I believe to-day that the rule which limits the sessions of the House to 5 o'clock is an invitation to filibuster, is an invitation to put obstacles in the way of the control of the majority; and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is of precisely the same character. Believing, then, as I do, on this subject, having illustrated it as I have for my whole Congressional life, is there any choice for me what action I shall take?

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] undoubtedly has in his mind some sort of a traffic which has been entered into by the gentlemen recently obstructing the business of the House. With that I have nothing to do. I do not purpose to stop the business of the House simply because some trade has been made on the Democratic side, because they have taken an unrighteous method of getting out of this difficulty instead of a righteous one. Shall I refuse to do a little right because they have refused to do a great right? No. I stand here to protest against their conduct because it limits the right of the majority.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman is opposed to any bargain between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] and the members of the committee, why does he stand here attempting to perfect the bargain that is said to have been made?

Mr. REED. Because I believe the right of the majority in this House is going to be furthered by the repeal of the 5-o'clock limitation.

Several MEMBERS. How?

Mr. REED. Because I never was in favor of it and never will be.

Mr. PAYSON. How?

Mr. REED. How? The 5-o'clock limitation is just like the limitation of the hour rule in the morning for the consideration of bills. It is an invitation to filibustering, and a man knows he has only to stand in his place from 12 o'clock to 5 o'clock—and any of us is equal to that endurance—to stop the proceedings of this entire House. Every man knows it. Hence the 5-o'clock adjournment is and always has been an invitation to filibustering. It is wrong in principle, it is contrary to sound parliamentary law, and it is one of those things which have tended to the putting of the House in its present demoralized condition. For I venture to say in the last twelve years—and I speak within the limits of my experience—the House of Representatives was never before seen in the condition it now is, and because of these unfortunate and unhappy limitations upon the right of the majority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. Four minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I will reserve the balance of the time.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, the 8th of this month, a resolution from the Committee on Rules, proposing a change of the rules of the House, dispensing with the order of business, the introduction of bills for reference on a call of the States on the first and third Mondays in each month during the session, was recommitted to the Committee on Rules.

The object in view in reporting that resolution for consideration and adoption, although not avowed, but perfectly well understood in the House, was to prevent certain gentlemen who were hostile to certain measures, especially the so-called Oklahoma bill and the Union Pacific Railroad funding bill, from consuming the time on those days when the order of business was the introduction of bills by having all bills read at length, so that the entire day would be thus consumed up to 5 o'clock, leaving no time to move to suspend the rules and pass these to them obnoxious measures, without opportunity to debate or offer amendments to them.

By the adoption of the proposed resolution that method of resisting such consideration would not be possible.

Under the lead of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], who, as is well known, is violently opposed to the funding bill, the adoption of the resolution was resisted by the use of the ordinary dilatory motions and votes thereon, aided by many gentlemen who based their opposition to the resolution upon the ground that it was objectionable, indeed, wholly unjustifiable, to attempt to make any temporary change in the rules of the House of Representatives for the accomplishment of a single purpose, the aiding in passing or defeating any specific bill or bills, and especially under the gag of suspension of the rules, which does not permit any amendment, and only fifteen minutes' debate on each side of an entire bill.

And it should be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that the proposed resolution did not have the approval of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] nor the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], two of the three Democrats on the Committee on Rules.

Day after day was wasted in the attempt to pass the resolution, and without going into details as to what is familiar to us all, the matter was made the subject of a caucus by the Democratic side of the House, and under the lead of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on the 8th instant the resolution was recommitted to the committee and the rules stood unchanged.

On that day, after an hour spent on a special order, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] called up for consideration the contested-election case of Smalls vs. Elliott, and against that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] with others raised the question of consideration. The House voted to consider the case.

Thereupon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asked unanimous consent to have this order made:

Resolved, That Thursday, January 10, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and at 3 o'clock p. m. of said day the same shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon in the committee, and the previous question shall then be considered as ordered upon all such amendments, and upon ordering the said bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and upon the passage of the same, and the votes thereon shall be taken in the House before adjournment and without intervening motions or business.

The SPEAKER. That day is already assigned to another order of business.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will modify the resolution and make it Wednesday, January 9.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CRAIN and Mr. FINLEY objected.

Because of this objection the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] began a series of dilatory motions, and requiring votes thereon, preventing thereby totally the transaction of any public business, except a few conference reports by accident, until Saturday morning.

The gentleman from Iowa made no secret of the object of his filibustering.

The RECORD shows that he asserted that his struggle was to compel consideration of the Oklahoma bill, because of his view of its importance; in other words, Mr. Speaker, he entered upon a campaign of filibustering to compel a yielding by the House to his demand to consider that bill, as against a similar campaign indulged in by some at a prior period of the session to prevent consideration, and because of the recommitment of the resolution to change the rules. I do not debate, Mr. Speaker, the correctness of either course now. I am reciting history only. That is sufficient for my present purpose.

On Saturday the word was passed around that an arrangement of some kind had been made with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] by a conference, formal or otherwise, with the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules, and after filibustering nearly a week, on Saturday the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] ceased operating in that line, and that operation by him was only suspended because of the agreement reached on a meeting or conference between himself and the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules, as is reported, which meeting resulted, as I am advised, in the offering of the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on Saturday last, and which is now reported back from the Committee on Rules, and which I am now opposing.

All over the country, Mr. Speaker, in every newspaper in this land, from the great metropolitan dailies down to the little country papers whose reading matter is known as made up principally of "patent insides," the gentleman from Iowa has a notoriety, not to say reputation, which has not been equaled by the performance of any other gentleman who has occupied a seat on this floor since my public career began. On Saturday last he suddenly ceased his operations. The newspapers, the Associated Press, and the metropolitan papers generally, published articles similar in substance to that which I now send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. STEELE. From what paper?

Mr. PAYSON. The first is from the New York Tribune of yesterday morning.

The Clerk read as follows:

[By telegraph to the Tribune.]

WASHINGTON, January 12.

At a private meeting this morning a bargain was made between Mr. WEAVER and the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules, in consequence of which Mr. WEAVER permitted the House to transact some business to-day. There were present at the meeting Speaker CARLISLE, Mr. RANDALL, Mr. MILLS, and Mr. WEAVER. The terms of the agreement were that WEAVER should cease to filibuster, and in consideration of this the Speaker agreed to recognize a motion to pass the Oklahoma bill under suspension of rules on the next "suspension day," and if the opponents of the bill filibuster to prevent a vote, the House shall be kept in continuous session from day to day until a vote is taken on the passage of the bill. A necessary prerequisite was that the rule requiring an adjournment daily at 5 o'clock should be rescinded. In compliance with the agreement Mr. RANDALL offered a resolution in the House to-day to abolish the order of adjournment at 5 o'clock, and asked immediate consideration, but objection was made, and this part of the scheme can not be carried out until the Committee on Rules reports the resolution and the House adopts it.

Mr. PAYSON. The next is from the Post of yesterday morning.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE DEADLOCK BROKEN.—AN AGREEMENT WITH MR. WEAVER REGARDING THE OKLAHOMA BILL.

The deadlock in the House was broken yesterday, Mr. WEAVER having made an arrangement entirely satisfactory to the friends of the Oklahoma bill, and which would result in the consideration of the bill. The agreement between Messrs. CARLISLE, RANDALL, MILLS, and WEAVER was that Mr. WEAVER should cease to make dilatory motions and Speaker CARLISLE would recognize a motion to pass the Oklahoma bill on suspension day, and that if dilatory tactics are resorted to by the opponents of the measure to prevent a vote by wasting the day, WEAVER shall have every proper facility allowed under the rules to prolong the legislative day from day to day, until a vote on the bill is reached. The latter part of the agreement can only be carried out by taking a recess from day to day, instead of adjourning, or by holding a continuous session night and day.

To facilitate the execution of the agreement, also to rid the House of a standing order which has given a great deal of trouble, Mr. RANDALL offered a resolution yesterday to rescind the order which requires the House to adjourn daily at 5 o'clock.

Mr. PAYSON. All over the land has been sent the same item of news. The same publicity has been given to this alleged bargain that was given to the details of the contest. I wish to be understood as saying that as to the accuracy of these allegations I have no personal knowledge, but the same publicity has been given to the agreement or understanding, or whatever it may have been, which I believe to have been made all over the country, and it has not been disputed here on the floor of the House that such an agreement was made with the gentleman from Iowa. Nobody connected with the Committee on Rules—and that is a corroborating circumstance in favor of the truth of the allegation—has denied it since this matter has been so published, and it has become so notorious that it does seem to me that it can not have escaped their attention. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], in his place in the House, on Saturday morning, made use of the following language, which I will read myself, as my time is rather limited:

Mr. WEAVER. I merely want to say that I have refrained from making parliamentary motions this morning because I have been waiting for the report from the Committee on Rules of the resolution which has just been offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and referred to that committee. That is why I am not making motions now.

[Laughter.]

The gentleman from Iowa permitted a little business to be transacted on Saturday, and to-day comes in this resolution pursuant to the alleged agreement.

It makes, sir, a most conclusive case; and the question is, shall the House ratify it? I am opposed to it. I am opposed on principle to a coercing of the House by the activity of a single member into a change of rule to aid or injure any pet measure. The House, in my judgment, can not afford to indorse such action.

The rules should be general and for all alike; if defective in general application, amend them because of that defect, but not because one individual member, or a minority, making themselves obnoxious to the body, demand concessions in favor of their favorite bill. If that shall be done for one day, it may properly be asked for another to-morrow.

I have thought the dependent-pension bill was of greater public importance than this bill, or many others which have been considered, and have made effort, persistent but ineffectual, to secure its consideration, but never attempted to coerce an agreement like this and in this manner. A large majority of the House, I am convinced, agree with me; and not only that bill, but the educational bill, and many others, are of paramount importance to this, but we can not secure consideration of them because of non-action of the Committee on Rules on this floor.

I am opposed to the principle of such concessions by change of rule. If the practice of filibustering is wrong, change the rules so as to prevent it as to all bills. It can easily be done if the Committee on Rules and the House desire it.

This resolution does not reach the evil; it simply permits an increase of the length of suspension day, which under this resolution may be extended till March 4, if so desired.

The opportunity to filibuster is as great, precisely, as it was before, and in practical operation on the case in hand simply changes the burden, that is all.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] filibustered to compel consideration of his measure; now he is to be relieved; and the opponents of the bill must filibuster to prevent consideration. His luck is their misfortune.

Nothing is to be gained in the dispatch of the public business if the other side is determined; nothing can help the situation except, as I have said, a radical change of the rules to prevent the practice.

But outside of this, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, in the present application, the question now presented is one involving only a question of human endurance. When any gentleman undertakes to do as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has done, all he will have to do, if this rule should be adopted, is to submit this House to the inconvenience of remaining in perpetual session until he and those acting with him shall succeed in pressing to a vote a few favored measures. There is no use of undertaking to disguise two or three things. One is that the action of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is solely with reference to the consideration of the Oklahoma bill, and it is well understood the Oklahoma bill, the Pacific funding bill, and the copyright bill are the three measures which are to be pressed on the consideration of this House, in case this resolution should pass, on the next suspension day.

And whether there is an actual agreement as alleged or not, it does not matter. One who sits in this Hall and does not know that there is some understanding satisfactory to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] that on the next suspension day the Oklahoma bill will be called up for passage under a suspension of the rules, is in my judgment a poor observer.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Not now. Let the gentleman listen to me.

Mr. NELSON. Is it any misfortune to pass that bill under a suspension of the rules?

Mr. PAYSON. I was coming to that, but I will come to it now. Yes, sir, it is a misfortune. It would be such a misfortune to pass the bill in its present shape that any man who would vote for it with the understanding of what is possible under it as now offered (and I will explain this to the House in the course of the next five minutes), would do an act he will certainly regret, as I think; and if the gentleman from Minnesota will give me his attention for three minutes I will demonstrate it.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Illinois is simply defending the position of another branch of the minority.

Mr. NELSON. I would like to know in what respect a man would injure himself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will remember that the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill has been pending for a considerable time.

Mr. PAYSON. I understand that, but under the rules as they stand, with the bitter opposition heretofore shown, the bill can never be considered on suspension day and may not be called up, though pending. That course has been followed more than once, and would be again but for the adoption of this rule, as I think, and so, notwithstanding the fact that it is pending, it requires aid to enable its friends to get it considered; and therefore if this resolution now proposed shall not pass it will be impossible to consider it if the opponents of the bill as it stands now do their duty.

Mr. SYMES. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. SYMES. My point of order is that if we are going to discuss the adoption of the amendment to the rules I do not desire to take any part in that discussion, but I insist we should confine ourselves to that question, and I make the point of order that if the Oklahoma bill is going to be denounced in such language as the gentleman has just uttered I am going to take a part in the discussion and show that his statements in that respect are not correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYSON. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SYMES. I would like to have a ruling on the point of order whether the Oklahoma bill is up for consideration. The gentleman from Illinois takes advantage of a little time given him to speak to a resolution reported by the Committee on Rules to amend the rules, so that the House may be enabled to transact a little necessary business, to denounce the Oklahoma bill. He does it because he thinks there will be no opportunity to reply to his unfounded criticisms. The gentleman states he is not opposed to the consideration of the bill in a parliamentary way. If that be so he is very unfortunate in the company he has kept during the consideration of this bill in the Committee of the Whole during the several days it has been under consideration. His friends and the opponents of the bill with whom he has acted during such times have persisted in filibustering against the measure.

As amendment after amendment has been offered they have demanded tellers and made the point of no quorum for the sole purpose of killing the bill, as I understood them to admit.

The gentleman from Illinois offered amendments, and I do not remember that he ever protested against his friends filibustering to prevent those amendments being disposed of. Had it not been for the filibustering tactics resorted to by those acting with the gentleman in opposing this bill it would have been fully considered, section by section and paragraph by paragraph, long ago, and at the last session. The gentleman has had many opportunities to point out the iniquitous character of this bill when it was being considered in Committee of the Whole, but has never done so. This has suddenly dawned upon him this morning when pretending to speak to the question of amending the rules, and he thought there would be no opportunity offered those familiar with the bill to reply. The objections specified by the gentleman can all be shown to be unwarranted if he and his friends will only stop filibustering and allow fair discussion of it when it comes up. And all these alleged objections would have been explained or amended in detail to conform to the judgment of the House had it not been for the filibustering tactics resorted to by the opponents of this bill to defeat its full and fair consideration.

The Oklahoma bill is one of the most meritorious measures before Congress. Millions of the best people in the great West are demanding its passage. The gentleman from Illinois can not cover up his continued opposition to this bill, which will create a great Territory, and in due time a great State in this Union, by pretending he is for the bill if proceeded with in the regular way. It has been proceeded with in the regular way many days. But the opponents who act in concert with him have resorted to irregular filibustering to defeat not only its passage, but its full and fair consideration, and proper amendment if required.

Mr. Speaker, I will not follow the example of the gentleman and discuss in detail the merits of this important bill under the guise of pretense of speaking to the question of amending the rules. I will say to the gentleman that when the Oklahoma bill comes up in the regular way (and he says he does not object to its so coming) he will have a good opportunity to explain and defend some of his inconsistencies in matters pertinent to that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Illinois, in discussing the propriety of agreeing to the proposed resolution, may proceed to show its effect on pending matters of legislation if agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, let it be understood once for all, for myself, that I am not opposed to the consideration of the Oklahoma bill in the usual parliamentary way. I have never taken any part in any filibustering against it, and do not expect to. More than that, sir, I have never engaged, during the eight years I have occupied a seat here, in any filibustering operations involving a proposition of a lesser degree of magnitude than the right of a member to a seat on this floor; and I hope I may be permitted to say, therefore, that I am utterly amazed to hear the remarks just uttered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

He asserts that when the bill shall come in the regular way I will have an opportunity to explain some of my inconsistencies in regard to the bill; that others, with myself, have resorted to irregular fili-bustering to defeat its fair consideration and proper amendment; that I have presented amendments, and this practice was indulged in to prevent my amendments being disposed of; that I have had many opportunities to point out defects in the bill, but never have done so; that it has suddenly dawned on me this morning to assert defects in the bill; and concludes by asserting in terms that I have used dilatory tactics to prevent its consideration in the regular parliamentary way.

Now, Mr Speaker, I say it respectfully, but earnestly, that there is not a shadow of foundation for a single assertion the gentleman has made.

In the proceeding contemplated by this resolution, as the gentleman well knows, under suspension of the rules only fifteen minutes are allowed to all the opponents of the bill, and so there is no intention to have me given an opportunity to show other defects in the bill.

I repeat again that I have never engaged in a filibuster to defeat consideration, and the gentleman has no warrant for the charge.

That I have presented amendments is true; that they have not been disposed of because of dilatory motions is not true, and my friend's lack of knowledge on the point is lamentable, for every amendment I have offered, except the pending one, namely—

It is expressly provided that the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors in the late civil war to make homes on the public lands under the existing homestead laws shall not in any degree be impaired by the passage of this bill; and the right of such honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors to make homestead entry and perfect the same by occupancy under the existing homestead law shall extend to any and all lands which shall be open to any settlement by the provisions of this bill—and which has not yet been fully debated under the five minute rule, with one exception, has been adopted and made part of the bill; and more than that, every amendment thus adopted of mine has had the approval of my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], he expressing the hope they would be adopted before the vote was taken. I think this is so in every instance.

He says I have had opportunity to argue all the defects of the bill. He knows we have only reached section 7 of the bill, and there are nineteen sections in the bill proposed to be passed under suspension.

The most vicious section of the bill, as I think, is section 9, to which I shall presently address myself, and it has never been discussed, nor has there been opportunity to discuss it for amendment yet, and the remark of the gentleman that it has suddenly dawned on me this morning to assert this defect is entirely gratuitous.

I have had an amendment in my desk for weeks to that section, which I shall refer to later, only waiting an opportunity to present and discuss it, and I canvassed that section with many gentlemen about me weeks ago.

The trouble is, Mr. Speaker, several of these gentlemen seem impressed with the idea that their bill as reported is absolutely perfect, and that any amendment proposed to it is an evidence of hostility to the purpose of opening this land to white settlement.

The adoption by the House, and with the full concurrence of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], of many substantial amendments offered by myself and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], based on our experience in public-land matters, is conclusive proof that the bill so far as considered was far from perfect as it was reported, and that the usual method of consideration was the only proper one, and because of the necessity for the ordinary consideration and with opportunity for amendment, and because the bill which is being pressed is in many ways utterly different from the bill as reported, containing several more sections and different provisions, and more than all, that which to me is inexplicable, omits, as I read it, every amendment which has been thus far agreed to by the Committee of the Whole.

I ask gentleman to tell us why these amendments which were conceded to be proper and needful when presented and adopted—why are they omitted from the "suspension bill?" Because of my entire belief of the defects so far cured by the Committee of the Whole, but appearing again in their bill to be pressed under suspension if this resolution shall pass, I am opposed to the passage of this bill under a suspension of the rules. I am opposed to its consideration under a suspension of the rules, because of the fact that I do not believe the bill is in such shape as that it ought to pass as presented. I believe it to be an iniquitous measure, susceptible, as I shall demonstrate when the time shall come, and I can have the opportunity on full debate——

Mr. PERKINS rose.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman will not interrupt me now I will agree to give to the gentleman from Kansas and to the House a demonstration of the accuracy of that statement whenever it shall be possible.

Mr. PERKINS. Have you not had several opportunities to demonstrate that?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir. The pending question on the Oklahoma bill to-day is an amendment of mine giving Union soldiers the right to make homestead entries, and that is to section 7. The worst feature of the bill is in a later section, not yet reached or touched upon.

Mr. PERKINS. Has not the House heard you upon that?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; that amendment is still pending, with several gentlemen yet to speak in favor of it, and a vote to be taken. The debate on my amendment was not concluded on December 14, the last day the bill was up, and it had not been passed on by a vote. I have wondered many times since this bill has been presented what the secret of it was that incited gentlemen to come to Congress to sit in these galleries month after month and year after year, and importune members with reference to it, and to press the consideration of this bill and secure its passage in its present form. I think I know now. I believe that I know now. We have had ever since 1864 in the statutes of the United States a provision of law in reference to the location of town sites. It is section 2387 of the Revised Statutes, and it provides in substance that a town site may be located at $1.25 per acre to the Treasury and in trust for the occupants of the town, and all matters of the disposal of the lots and the proceeds of the sales shall be for the use and benefit of the occupants thereof. Another section of the statute provides for town sites the proceeds of sales, at a minimum price of $10 per lot.

The law seems to have been framed to prevent speculations in town sites, and for their location on the public lands for the benefit of the inhabitants, and under the control of the legislative authority of the State or Territory. This would, as it has, insure a good fund for public purposes, and the community which gives the added value to the land should have the benefit of it in the sales of the property above $1.25 per acre.

That the necessary profits, the increase in value of land within, arising out of the location of town sites and the sale of lots surveyed from the public lands, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of the locality.

Mr. PERKINS. In the towns?

Mr. PAYSON. In the towns. It is a statute that has worked successfully since 1864, and there has been no attempt since that has been incorporated on the public-land laws to amend it, so far as I know. Now, Mr. Speaker, what do you find in this bill? A section providing that in the location of town sites in this great area of country, an area two-thirds as large as that of the grand State in which I live, containing the only arable land that is left in this country, and which is gridironed by railroads built and authorized more than any other section of the country, and upon the whole of it there is not at this hour a valid town site anywhere—that locations of town sites shall be by any "legally organized company" on payment of $20 per acre.

This bill that comes from that committee, and which it is proposed to pass under a suspension of the rules, allows any legally organized corporation, whether organized in Maine, Illinois, or any other State of the Union, and without regard to any provisions in its charter, to locate cities and towns, to take the profits of the sale of the lots in such sites upon the payment of a pittance into the Treasury of the United States, to be held for school purposes, and that the vast profits growing out of this business shall go to men who have no connection with creating it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has spoken ten minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. Upon the payment of a pittance of $20!

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I will use the other five minutes of my time.

Now, an acre is 210 feet square, and there would be eight or ten residence lots in an acre, and more than double that of business lots of ordinary size.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. The point of order I make is whether the time in support of the proposition under discussion shall be consumed by the gentleman from Illinois, and whether he is speaking to that proposition.

The SPEAKER. It is argued by the gentleman from Illinois that the effect of the change under this rule would be to permit a vote upon a bill which he says ought not to pass, and he is proposing to show, therefore, that the report ought not to be agreed to; and the Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. PAYSON. This is not to come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, I appeal, Mr. Speaker, to the gentlemen on the other side of the House, to whom the word "monopoly" has been "a sweet morsel to roll under their tongues," how is it that they stand here asking for a suspension of the rules, without discussion, to allow a proposition to repeal the town-site act of 1864, with reference to the sale of all the town sites of this great area of country and upon all these public lands, making an industry, if you will permit it, in the location of cities and towns that will be stimulated by an immigration into this Territory that has never been equaled in the United States? Towns to the number of hundreds will be needed in that Territory when opened; its fertile soil guaranties a large population; and thriving towns are always hand in hand with such general prosperity. And I should be glad to know who originated the idea in this section, to place in the hands of "legally organized" corporations alone all the town sites to be located for the necessities of such a population as will be supported by this great Territory?

Corporate rapacity could not ask for a larger or a finer field for operation, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] and my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] do not propose to permit an examination or amendment to the proposal.

I trust they are ignorant of the effect of the section, and I ask them for a direct answer to this question.

Why should not the proceeds of the sales of the lots composing all these sites be devoted to public and especially school purposes in the locality, and for the benefit of building up that Territory and adding to the greatness and grandeur of this country instead of their being given to favored railroad directors and those they may choose to take in with them upon payment of the comparatively small sum named in the bill, about $2 per lot? We all know that in favored localities, as soon as a town shall be laid out, business lots will be worth hundreds of dollars each, and residence lots in proportion.

Why should not the people have the benefit of this?

I appeal to any gentleman to answer me that question.

The amendment which I have prepared as a substitute for section 9 of the bill is this:

SEC. 9. Town sites upon any public lands in said Territory shall be located under the provisions of chapter 8, Title XXXII, Revised Statutes, entitled "Reservation and sale of town sites on the public lands." The money so received from the sale of lots in each town site, except such amount as may be required to be paid to the Indian tribes, as provided in sections 5 and 6 of this act, shall be held by the Secretary of the Interior as a separate school fund for the benefit of the people of such town, and shall be expended under his direction for the erection of school buildings and the support of schools therein: Provided, That town sites actually occupied on the Public Land Strip at the date of approval of this act by not less that one hundred bona fide inhabitants may be patented under section 2387, and with the protection of rights to parties in possession or who have made improvements, as provided in section 2381 of the Revised Statutes, said sites to embrace the amount of land provided by law: Provided further, That all surveys of town sites in the Territory of Oklahoma shall contain reservations for parks of substantially equal area if more than one park, and other public purposes, embracing in the aggregate not less than 10 nor more than 20 acres; but no deduction shall be allowed on this account in the amount to be paid for said town sites as provided in this section; and patents for such reservations to be maintained for such public purposes shall be issued to the towns respectively when organized as municipalities.

This substitute, I insist, is worthy of consideration. I have no time to go into details with reference to it.

Through the Territory are these numerous railroads, fourteen lines in all, without a valid town site on them, on the lands embraced in the bill, and the hundreds which will be located as soon as settlement begins, and which by the mere act of settlement of the country and their location will be worth millions of dollars. This added wealth, the result of natural processes in the growth of a country, can and should be saved to the people there rather than given to "any legally organized" corporation which shall apply for it.

Let us discuss this, debate the principle and adopt it if right, and not foreclose all discussion, useless if this resolution be adopted, because amendment to the bill will not be in order.

Recurring to what I have before alluded to, will gentlemen remember that the bill which is now pending, as offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], is not the bill containing the amendments this House has voted into the bill up to the time that that motion was made? Do gentlemen forget the argument which was made here by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as well as myself, that this great area of public land should be preserved as lands for the landless and homes for the homeless; and upon my amendment, which was incorporated in this bill, providing that no man who was the owner of 160 acres of land in any other part of the Union should be entitled to land under the provision of this bill? That provision, almost unanimously agreed to in committee, does not appear in the bill which it is proposed to be passed under a suspension of the rules. Why is that omitted?

Another thing. An amendment was made here with reference to the extent of the Territorial government. By the last section of this bill, as offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], it is provided that the Territorial government under this bill shall operate only upon the neutral strip—the Public Land Strip—an area about as large as the State of Rhode Island or the State of Delaware, and not, till years shall intervene in all human probability, on any other part of the Territory.

Still another thing, Mr. Speaker; ought there not to be a measure of certainty as to all provisions with reference to the disposition of this vast area of land? There is a dispute now between the members of the committee as to what this bill means in that respect, as to what will be its effect upon the Public Land Strip, an area, as I have already said, larger than two of the States of this Union. The gentleman from Illinois, my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], a member of the committee, insists that the present homestead law is applicable to settlement upon that Strip. Other gentlemen, members of the committee upon this side of the House, are equally certain that the homestead principle does not and ought not to apply to that great area of land; and that question is to be left uncertain if this bill is passed under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. Speaker, it ought not to be permitted that a bill of this character, involving an empire of area and the only arable land that is left, involving so many important provisions, to a few of which I have adverted here, should be considered with but fifteen minutes' discussion, and no opportunity to amend, and disposed of under a suspension of the rules. It is a parody upon legislation to say that that is "consideration" at all. It is worse than a parody; as is suggested by my friend from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] sotto voce, it is a burlesque upon legislation; and I hope that this side of the House, and gentlemen upon the other side of the House who are in favor of doing this thing, but doing it right, will vote down this proposition from the Committee on Rules and let the Oklahoma bill be considered in the ordinary, orderly, and parliamentary way.

Mr. RANDALL rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, it may not be amiss at this time to call the attention of the House briefly to what I may term the surface facts in this connection, so that undue credence may not be given to the allegations which have been made here by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] touching the introduction of this proposition. On the 11th of May, 1888, the order which it is now proposed to rescind was made. On the first Monday in August a suspension of the rules of this House was moved on the Oklahoma bill, and has remained as the unfinished business from that day to this and has been in order when that class of business has been up on the first and third Mondays of every month. Therefore the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] that a bargain has been made that on the next suspension Monday the Speaker of this House shall recognize some friend of the Oklahoma bill has not the semblance of truth to justify it. On the contrary, the bill stands beyond the control of the Speaker of this House, or of any member of the House, as the unfinished business on said days.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is it not competent on any one of the suspension Mondays by the introduction of bills to prevent the House from reaching that bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I will touch that point later. This matter ran along. When the effort was first made by the friends of the Oklahoma bill—and I know that I am not unduly either its friend or its enemy, but willing to give it fair play—when the effort was made by the friends of the Oklahoma bill to have it considered they were confronted with a species of filibustering which was, as some thought, unwise, injudicious, and I might use a yet stronger term and say unjustifiable under the circumstances. Then came a proposition from the Committee on Rules to relieve the friends of the Oklahoma bill. That was introduced on the 4th day of January, and on the 8th was referred back to the committee. Then it was that obstruction commenced against all propositions and business. And here I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I never had any interview with General WEAVER on these subjects, and, so far as I am advised, there never has been any meeting with that gentleman by the members of the Committee on Rules. There may have been honorable conference, but nothing of the character that has been attempted to be represented to this House. Nay, more. I want to say that the honorable Speaker and I, as members of the Committee on Rules, had come to the conclusion many days before this matter was thrust upon the House, in the absence of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] (who was sick, and whose return we decided to await), that we would ask the committee to report a proposition providing for the abrogation of the 5 o'clock adjournment order, for the reasons stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], both of whom are members of the Committee on Rules. And I wish to say further in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that the friends of the Oklahoma bill have never asked of the Committee on Rules any favor, and, so far as my judgment goes, they have received none. They have been simply remitted to the powers which they possessed before the mode of obstruction was resorted to, which, at a subsequent period, the judgment of the Democratic side of the House has declared to be vicious.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that fifteen minutes more be allowed upon each side for debate on this question. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE]? [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BAYNE. Then, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of such an opportunity for debating this question, I ask unanimous consent that such members of the House, including myself, as may desire to print remarks in the RECORD upon it may have leave to do so.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I give notice that I shall print a few remarks in reply to those of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 60.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 49 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 156, nays 85, not voting 82; as follows:

Mr. SENEY with Mr. PUGSLEY, for this day.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. BRUMM, on this vote.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. BELDEN, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARGARET S. HEINTZELMAN.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I present the following conference report; and on its adoption ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2726) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to the Senate bill, and agree to the same.

J. LOGAN CHIPMAN,
THOMAS L. THOMPSON,
A. C. THOMPSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

C. K. DAVIS,
D. TURPIE,
H. W. BLAIR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement, under the rule, by the House managers was read, as follows:

Statement to accompany the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2726) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman."

The original bill proposed a pension of $100 per month. It was returned to the Senate with an amendment by the House reducing the amount of the proposed pension to $75 per month, and the committee of conference now report in favor of the original proposition, granting a pension of $100 per month.

J. LOGAN CHIPMAN.
THOS. L. THOMPSON.
A. C. THOMPSON.

The report was adopted.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RALPH T. MOSES.

Mr. SOWDEN. I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be authorized to employ Ralph T. Moses as an assistant folder in the seal-room of the House at a compensation of $2 50 per day for the present session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, the compensation to take effect from December 3, 1888."

The Committee on Accounts, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, authorizing the employment of Ralph T. Moses as an assistant folder in the seal-room of the House, having considered the same, and finding that there is no necessity for the employment of the said Moses, report back the resolution with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The report was adopted.

Mr. SOWDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Are these matters privileged for this day?

The SPEAKER. They are.

ADDITIONAL MESSENGER, BUTLER BUILDING.

Mr. SOWDEN. I am also directed by the Committee on Accounts to submit the following report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be authorized to appoint one additional messenger, who shall also act as night watchman, at a salary of $100 per month during the remainder of this session, said messenger to be assigned to duty with the committees of the House of Representatives located in the Butler Building, and who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House."

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, authorizing the employment of an additional messenger to be assigned to the Butler Building, have considered the same, and finding no necessity for the employment of said messenger, report back the resolution with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The report was adopted.

Mr. SOWDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I demand the regular order.

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to submit a privileged report.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope my friend will yield to me to have a resolution printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will yield for that purpose.

REPEAL OF INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief resolution from the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

MANUFACTURERS' CLUB OF PHILADELPHIA,
No. 1319 Walnut street, Philadelphia, December 24, 1888.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We beg leave respectfully to submit to your honorable bodies the following preamble and resolution unanimously adopted by the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia at its regular meeting on December 17, 1888:

Whereas the collection from the people, by the Federal Government, of taxes which are not required to enable the Government to meet its obligations is indefensible upon any grounds of justice or public interest; and

Whereas the taxes collected by the Internal Revenue Bureau are in fact the only Federal taxes certainly and wholly paid by the American people; and

Whereas such taxes have never in the history of the Government been imposed excepting to meet the emergencies of war, and have always heretofore been speedily removed upon the return of peace; and

Whereas the customs service has been in the past and may without peril to the nation's interest be in the future the dependence for the national revenues, without continued maintenance of a bureau which expends annually $4,000,000 for collecting money which the Government does not need; and

Whereas the removal of the tax upon whisky will enable American manufacturers to obtain, free of excise, alcohol, one of the most important of all the raw materials of industry, whilst it will permit the State governments to exercise full control over the liquor traffic; and

Whereas removal of the internal taxes will at once solve the problem of the reduction of the surplus revenue in a manner most conducive to the interests of the whole body of the people: Be it therefore

Resolved by the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, That Congress be, and hereby is, respectfully and earnestly requested to adopt measures for the early abandonment of the entire internal-revenue system.

THOMAS DOLAN, President.
CHAS. HEBER CLARK, Secretary.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. DIBBLE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 251) to provide for electric lights and call-bells in the House wing, Rotunda, and Tholus of the Capitol at Washington; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, is this a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. It has always been held in the House that matters relating to the comfort and convenience of members, such as lighting and heating the Hall, the arrangement of seats, etc., was privileged. The Chair thinks that this comes within the practice heretofore established.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask that the joint resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read of course.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to provide for electric lights and call-bells in the House wing, Rotunda, and Tholus of the Capitol at Washington.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of providing the power and plant, fixtures, and appurtenances necessary for the electrical lighting of the House wing, Rotunda, and Tholus of the Capitol at Washington, and of providing electrical call-bells for the said House wing, according to plans and specifications prepared by John E. Powell, electrical engineer, under direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, by virtue of resolution of the House of Representatives adopted July 24, 1888.

That the said work shall be carried on under the supervision and control of a commission of three members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, Fiftieth Congress, who shall be also members-elect of the House of Representatives, Fifty-first Congress, and who shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Fiftieth Congress; and that the said commission when appointed shall have full power and authority to accept bids, make necessary contracts, employ a superintendent or superintendents, who shall be an electrical engineer or engineers, and to fix his or their compensation, not to exceed for the whole of such service the sum of $10 for each day of actual service (and if such superintendent or superintendents happen to receive pay from the Government on same days for any other official service, the per diem for such other service to be deducted from the pay for such days), and to do and take all action in the premises by them deemed necessary for the complete and expeditious accomplishment of the purpose and object of this joint resolution. That the said commission shall also have full power and authority to audit and approve all accounts, which shall be paid out of the appropriation herein provided upon the order of the said commission or a majority of the members thereof.

That the Architect of the Capitol is hereby authorized and required to provide in the House wing of the Capitol the space necessary for the location of the power, plant, and appurtenances required by the plans and specifications aforesaid.

That the said commission shall report to the House of Representatives their acts and doings in the premises, together with a full and complete account of all moneys expended under this joint resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that this resolution must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that the report and accompanying documents be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The report, with accompanying documents, is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which was authorized and directed by the resolution of the House adopted July 24, 1888, to employ an electrical engineer to make plans and specifications for the lighting the House wing of the Capitol by electricity and for a system of electric bells, and also to advertise and solicit proposals for the work, respectfully submit the following report:

They employed Mr. John E. Powell, an electrical engineer, who prepared plans and specifications embracing the House wing, Rotunda, and Tholus of the Capitol in a complete system of electric lighting, and a call-bell system for the House, all which were considered and approved by the committee; and the said plans and specifications were printed, and bids were invited in accordance therewith by advertisement in the Electrical Review and the Electrical World, published in New York, and the Western Electrician, published in Chicago. Twenty-seven sets of the plans and specifications were sent out on applications therefor, and ten bids were received in response to the advertisements, some of which were bids relating to the plant alone, or parts thereof, and others relating to the fixtures, apart from the plant and power. The bids for power and plant range from $41,400 to $94,775, and for fixtures from $9,500 to $31,000.

The committee calls attention to the specifications prepared by Mr. Powell and to the necessity of the immediate passage of the joint resolution, in order that the work be commenced and be in progress during the coming spring and summer months.

The House resolution of July 24, 1888, the report of Mr. John E. Powell, and the specifications prepared by him are appended to this report, and are reported as a part of the same, to be duly printed; and a set of the plans made by Mr. Powell, showing the location of the machinery and location and kind of fixtures, is submitted for the information of the House, to be filed with the Clerk.

The committee has incurred expenses as follows: For expert service, $575; for printing plans and specifications, $208; for advertising, money-orders, postage, etc., $33.98.

The committee recommend the passage of the joint resolution accompanying this report.

[Resolution passed by the House of Representatives July 24, 1888.]

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are hereby authorized and directed to employ an electrical engineer to make plans and specifications for the lighting of the House and the committee-rooms with electricity, and for a system of electric bells, and also to advertise and solicit proposals for this work, and to report as soon as practicable to the House, and that a sum not exceeding $1,000 is hereby appropriated for the payment of said engineer and for the expenses of said advertisement out of the contingent fund of the House.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your approval the plans and specifications for the installation of an electric-light plant for the House wing, Rotunda, and Tholus of the Capitol, and for a system of electric call-bells for the various House committee-rooms. These plans are in accordance with the decision of your committee to have the plant located in certain rooms under the terrace, shown on accompanying plans.

The said rooms will require certain alterations in the walls thereof, removal of some, and erection of others, and the supporting of the roof of terrace by iron columns, etc., so arranged as to permit the location of the present designed steam plant. Certain other details in the furnishing and fitting of the rooms with doors, floor, and plastering of walls and ceiling are also necessary.

A flue shown on plan, intended to be used a smoke-stack, will require to be carried up above the roof of the building, an extension of about 25 or 30 feet. All details relating to these matters have not been included in the specifications, as I deem it best, and do so recommend, that all the foregoing work be done in accordance with plan and specifications prepared or approved by the Architect of the Capitol and under his direction. The number of incandescent lamps required is 810 of 32 candle-power each, and 2,500 of 16 candle-power each. This number provides for the substitution of electricity in place of gas almost absolutely.

To secure fixtures conforming in design and artistic excellence to the general character of the building, I recommend your committee invite manufacturers of the same to submit proposals for this separate branch of the work, accompanied by designs and specifications thereof, indicating upon a schedule the rooms and corridors to be supplied with fixtures of certain designs, and price thereof. The awarding of fixtures by separate contract will secure the best result, and is now the practice of the Treasury Department to furnish fixtures for the public buildings by separate contract, apart from the electrical service, and the plan is found to work well.

The acceptance of proposals for fixtures to be determined by their relative merits of design, adaptability, and price.

A work of the magnitude and character proposed should be placed under the supervision of a competent person, employed by the Government as an inspector, to see that the work is performed according to contract and decide minor issues.

Without such intelligent supervision, vexatious delays and embarrassments are likely to arise, and that exact knowledge of the manner in which the work is being performed, and which it is the duty of the Government to possess, can not be obtained.

I recommend the appointment of a properly qualified person as a supervisor of the work at a compensation of —— dollars per diem until the acceptance of the plant by the Government.

The estimated cost of the work may be generalized as follows:

Engines, boilers, shafting, heater, pumps, and settings	$30,000
Dynamos and switch-board	18,000
Lamps, sockets, shades, wiring, labor, and other material	28,000
Fixtures	18,000
Electric call-bell system	750
	94,750

The above is a liberal estimate, except in the matter of fixtures, which, if of very superior design, may be from 10 to 20 per cent. higher.

Very respectfully,

J. E. POWELL,
Inspector Electric Light Plants for United States Treasury Department.

Hon. SAMUEL DIBBLE,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SPECIFICATIONS FOR AN ELECTRIC-LIGHT PLANT AND THE INSTALLATION THEREOF IN AND FOR THE HOUSE WING OF THE UNITED STATES CAPITOL, WASHINGTON, D. C.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1888.

Sealed proposals will be received until 12 o'clock m. Thursday, January 10, 1889, for supplying and installing, in accordance with the plans and specifications furnished by this committee, an electric-light plant.

Proposals must be submitted for furnishing all the materials, supplies, devices, and labor necessary in installing the electrical and power portion of the plant and electric-bell system in the manner described in the specifications, and must be for a specified sum, expressed in writing.

Proposals must be sealed and marked on outside of wrapper or envelope "Proposals for electric-light plant." They must state specifically and in detail the name, character, make, and type of the engines, boilers, pumps, feed-water heater, and minor appliances it is designed to furnish, with all data relative to their construction, capacity, and power necessary to determine their relative merit.

Proposals for supplying combination and electrical fixtures and their erection in the manner described in the specifications and of the number and location, as shown in accompanying plans, will be received from manufacturers of fixtures. Designs and specifications of each style of fixture (with price thereof) proposed to be supplied, with the location by number or name of room in which it is contemplated to place them, must be submitted.

Proposals must be accompanied by a schedule showing the number of fixtures of each design and the price of same, expressed in writing, with the total price of the entire bid, also in writing.

The acceptance of proposals for fixtures will be determined by their relative merits of price and design.

Proposals must be signed by the person, company, or corporation making them. If by a company, by the signature of each member thereof; if a corporation, by an officer duly authorized to sign, and accompanied with a copy (under seal of said corporation) of his authority to contract for and bind the corporation.

All proposals must be accompanied by written guaranty, signed by not less than three responsible persons, that the bidder shall, within ten days after notification so to do, execute a contract with terms of bidder's proposal and give bond as hereinafter required; certification of the responsibility and sufficiency of guaranty signers to be made by an United States judge, United States attorney, or the clerk of a court of record at or nearest place of residence of bidder.

The work must be commenced within thirty days and completed within twelve months from date of signing contract.

All that portion of the work, both electrical and fixture, located in the Chamber of the House, its galleries, corridors, lobbies, and rooms adjacent—i. e., all work on the principal floor of the building—must be performed during the recess of the House next ensuing after the award of the contract and perfectly completed before the next regular session of the House. Reference is here made to the period known as the long recess—March to December. In the event of an extra session and shorter recess work must be completed in the Chamber of the House, its galleries and lobbies, during said short recess.

Should the contractor for any portion of the work fail to prosecute the same in such manner and at such a rate of progress as shall be deemed necessary by the ——— to insure its completion within the time limit of contract, a notice of the same shall be served upon the contractor for said work, giving him twenty days from date of notice in which to remedy the delay. Upon his neglect or refusal to provide a remedy the ——— shall have the authority to suspend the contractor and employ other parties to complete the work, and any excess of cost over and above the contract price will be charged against the contractor and the sureties on his bond, who will, jointly or severally, be held liable therefor. If by circumstances beyond control of contractor, and through no fault of his, he be prevented from commencing or completing the work within the time specified in contract, such additional time may be allowed in writing upon his application therefor as, in the judgment of the ———, may be just and reasonable.

The right is reserved to suspend the work during the determination of any question at issue between the contractors and the Government, and the time of such suspension, if it be the fault of the contractor, shall be considered as in and part of the contract time. Such questions are to be determined as hereinafter provided.

Contractors for the electrical and power plant and its installation will be required to give bond in the sum of $25,000, with at least two responsible sureties, in which they shall covenant and agree that in case the said contractors shall fail to do or perform all or any of the covenants, stipulations, and agreements of said contract (except in the matter of the time of completion of the work which is hereinafter provided) on the part of the said contractor to be performed as therein set forth, the said contractor and his sureties shall forfeit and pay to the United States of America the sum specified in said bond; for which said forfeiture the contractor and his sureties shall be jointly and severally liable as fixed, settled, and liquidated damages (and not as a penalty), to be sued for in the name of the United States.

Such sureties shall justify their responsibility by affidavit showing they severally own and possess property of the clear value, in the aggregate, of double the amount of the above-mentioned forfeiture, over and above all debts and liabilities and all property by law exempt from execution, to be sworn to before a notary public, district or circuit judge of the United States, and to be approved by him or a Presidential postmaster. The contract will also provide that if at any time during its continuance the sureties or any of them shall die or become irresponsible the ——— shall have the right to require additional and sufficient sureties, which the contractor shall furnish, to the acceptance of the ———, after fifteen days' notice, and in default thereof the contract may be annulled at the option of the ———.

In the event of the contractor failing to perform the work in the stipulated time, and the authorized extensions of the same, the aforesaid contractor and his sureties shall forfeit and pay to the United States of America the sum of $50 for each and every day, including Sundays, beyond the stipulated time and the authorized extensions thereof which they shall require to complete the installation, for which said forfeiture the said contractor and his sureties shall be jointly and severally liable as fixed, settled, and liquidated damages, to be deducted from the payments due contractor on said work by the Government, said deductions to be made on certification to the proper accounting officer by ———.

Contractors for fixtures will be required to give a bond similar in all conditions and requirements except the amount of bond, which shall be $10,000.

The Government (or committee) reserves the right to reject any and all bids, to waive technical defects, and to accept any part of any bid and reject the other part, if in its judgment the interests of the Government shall require it; also the right to annul the contract if in its opinion there shall be a failure at any time to perform faithfully any of its stipulations, or in case of a willful attempt to impose upon the Government articles inferior to those required by contract.

SPECIFICATIONS.

Boilers.—Contractors shall provide and erect, in boiler-room indicated on plan, four (4) boilers, of the following-described type, dimensions, material, etc., with settings and trimmings:

Type.—Boilers to be of type known as horizontal tubular.

(Proposals will also be received for supplying, in lieu of the above-mentioned type, any of the standard and well-known make of sectional boilers, as Babcock & Wilcox, Abendroth & Roots, etc., but said proposals must be for equal power, capacity, and general style of finish, trimmings, etc., as indicated in the hereinafter-described horizontal tubular boilers.)

Dimensions.—Each boiler shall be 18 feet long and 72 inches in diameter, and contain not less than ninety (90) 3½-inch lap-welded wrought-iron flues or tubes.

Dome.—Each boiler shall be provided with a steam-dome 42 inches in diameter, 36 inches in height.

Materials.—Shell of boilers shall be of steel plate three-eighths of an inch in thickness and of not less than 60,000 pounds tensile strength per square inch of section, the same, with manufacturer's name, to be stamped on each sheet and on heads of boilers and domes.

Heads.—Heads of boilers shall be five-eighths of an inch thick (same character of material as shells) and well braced in steam space. Dome shall be constructed of same material as shells, heads well braced to side of dome.

Seams.—All longitudinal seams shall be double riveted, girth seams single riveted. All seams to be chipped and calked with blunt tools. Seams where domes join shell shall be double riveted.

Shells of boilers will require to be put together (i. e., sections or courses riveted up) in proposed boiler-room, doorways not permitting passage of constructed shell. This objection does not pertain to sectional boilers. Riveting must be done during recess of House.

Man-holes.—Each boiler shall have a man-hole in front head under tubes; also a hand-hole in back head under tubes, and a man-hole in shell of boiler in rear of steam-dome; the above to be supplied with the usual fittings.

Brackets.—Four cast-iron brackets shall be riveted to each side of shells, 1¼ inches thick, 14 inches wide and 16 inches projection, resting on iron plate of not less than 1 inch margin, fitted with steel expansion rollers.

Bracing and rivets.—All braces to be of refined iron and rivets of A1 quality.

Fire-fronts.—A cast-iron fire-front shall be supplied each boiler equal in design and general finish to the present battery of boilers in south wing of Capitol.

Fire-doors.—Each front shall be supplied with two fire-doors and two ash-pan doors, all to swing right and left, and to be fitted with revolving registers, and fire-doors to have perforated baffle-plates.

Cleaning-doors.—Each boiler shall be provided with a cleaning-door and frame 14 inches by 20 inches placed in rear wall back of each boiler. Frames to be securely anchored in walls by lugs or straps and placed with upper surface of lower portion of frame flush with top of flame bed.

Upper doors.—Similar doors (14 inches by 12 inches) set in rear wall above flues (over return diaphragm).

Front connection doors.—Front connection doors (double) to swing right and left.

Grate.—Full set of rocking grate-bars, equal to Kirkwood, Lanhann, or National, shall be provided each boiler, area of not less than 36 square feet each boiler.

Binders.—Full sets of heavy wall binders, four on each side, and anchor rods for rear and side walls. Rods of rear walls to be tied through boiler fronts; binders to have truss-shaped web.

Settings.—Foundations for settings shall be not less than 2 feet 6 inches in depth and 2 feet wide, of hard brick, laid in good cement mortar.

Sustaining or side walls (to be of good hard brick) 18 inches thick, with 2 inches air space, the outer faces to be of smooth brick, close joints. Walls to be tied every third course.

Rear walls.—Rear walls 2 feet in thickness and solid.

Direction of setting.—Setting shall provide for passage of smoke and flame under bottoms of boilers, thence through tubes, and return over top of boilers (to breeching as provided below) through a flue constructed of cast-iron T bars extending from wall to wall (side walls) of boiler; setting and bottom of said bars not less than 14 inches above highest point in crown or shell of boiler. On said T plates shall be laid two courses of brick in mortar, topped with 1 inch cement.

Access to man-hole.—Provision to be made for access to man-hole back of steam-dome by an aperture in top of said flue, said aperture to be covered with cast-iron plate, fitted with ring-bolts to serve as handles for same, two in each plate.

Return diaphragm.—The return flame diaphragm at back of each boiler shall be constructed of arched iron bars, ends of bars formed to receive the outer or end bricks of fire-brick arch, said arch to consist of two courses of fire-brick.

Furnace walls.—Furnace walls and inside face of rear walls below diaphragm to be lined with the best grade of fire-brick laid in fire-clay.

Flame bed.—The flame bed under boilers shall extend from rear and crown of bridge wall to inside face of rear wall; have fall of 18 inches from bridge wall to bottom frame of lower cleaning-door; to be made of earth filling topped with two courses of brick laid in mortar, faced with 1 inch thickness of cement. Upper surface of flame bed to conform to arc of boiler.

Gauges.—Each boiler shall have one steam-gauge, brass case, to register not less than 175 pounds, with 10-inch dial. Gauges shall be fastened to their respective boiler fronts, with air-space not less than one-half inch between them and surface to which attached. All gauges to be siphoned and have drain-pipes therefrom to ash-pits.

Drain-pipe.—All drain-pipes from gauges, either water or steam, must extend down boiler fronts to at least 10 inches inside of ash-pits. Pipe to steam-gauges must lead from boiler domes and have small stop-valves therein (between gauge and dome).

Gauges for engine-room.—An automatic registering steam-gauge, equal to the Edson, must be placed in engine-room and connected to register pressure from each boiler, whether used independently or collectively.

Feed-water pipe.—Each boiler shall have one 2-inch brass body check-valve; one 2-inch brass body straightway valve on feed pipe, and placed between check-valve and boiler; also one 2-inch brass body straightway valve between check-valve and juncture of feed-pipe with main feed.

Blow-off.—One 2-inch straightway valve brass body blow-off.

All blow-off pipes, drain pipes from feed-water heater, pumps, injectors, etc., must extend to and into the nearest sewer, and are in no manner to be connected with or interfere with the operation of any pipes of similar service now in place. Pipes of this character in boiler-room are not to be laid in floor or concrete, but in a brick-lined trench to their point of entrance to sewer hereinbefore provided. Said trench to be laid in rear of boilers and to be covered with cast-iron plates.

Intermediate or stop valves.—For each boiler there shall be provided and placed one 6-inch intermediate, brass body, yoked, stop-valve, flanged to steam dome. All steam pipes to lead into a common equalizer or distributing pipe, from whence the steam-supply pipes to engines shall proceed; equalizer to be cylindrical (12 inches diameter) and extend entire length of battery of boilers, fitted with drain pipes; shell of lap-welded boiler-flue tested to 150 pounds per square inch; tensile strength of material, 60,000 pounds per square inch of section; equalizer to be braced at ends to prevent expansion strain on steam piping.

All joints of piping or stop-valves must be flanged and packed with three-ply wire insertion, rubber packing.

Connections.—All connections, either of steam, feed-water, or blow-off, are to be made so that each boiler may be used independently or the entire battery at the same time.

Pressure test.—The foregoing-described boilers must be inspected and subjected to a hydrostatic pressure test, after their erection and connection with engines, etc., of 150 pounds per square inch. Pressure test to extend to and include all steam piping to engines and equalizer, and equalizer also. The test to be applied before any steam is permitted to be raised on said boilers, and the test to be made by an United States inspector of steam-vessels, whose certificate of test must be filed with the authorities in charge of the work prior to raising steam.

Drying boiler walls.—Slow fires are to be kept in the furnaces of said boilers every day at least two weeks before steam is raised thereon.

Ash-pans.—The ash-pans under each boiler to be two courses of brick (common) laid in and topped with cement, having drop of 2 inches from back to front. Doors thereof to swing clear of floors by at least 1 inch.

Safety-valves.—For each boiler there shall be provided and placed one 7-inch iron body, brass trimmed, flanged safety-valve, lever pattern, with weight. An escape shall lead therefrom into smoke breeching at some point beyond damper of its respective boiler. Escape pipes and valves to be drained. All piping above boilers to be suspended from ceiling by iron hangers or supported on trusses above boiler shells, as may be deemed most advisable. Hand chains are to extend from safety-valve levers over suitable pulleys to boiler fronts, terminating at height easily reached from the fire-room floor. Iron cleat on each front to secure chain to. Pulleys to be of iron.

Water column.—Each boiler shall be provided with one cast-iron water column; body to have clear inside diameter of not less than 4 inches; connecting pipes thereto shall be not less than 1¼ inch, with T's at each bend; open end of T to be closed with screw plug (not cap), with square stock or nipple, and at outer lower angle of lower connecting pipe a 1-inch globe-valve, with drain-pipe thereto extending not less than 6 inches inside of each ash-pit.

Water glass, etc.—Each column to have one ¾-inch heavy brass water-gauge, with Scotch glass tube; three ¾-inch gauge-cocks, with stuffing boxes and wooden handles.

Setting.—The lower try-gauge to be not less than 2 inches above the upper surface of the upper line of tubes; bottom of water-glass 1 inch below lower try-gauge; a brass or copper drip-pan to be supplied each column, with drain-pipe extending to ash-pit; a drain-pipe also to extend from bottom blow-out cock of water-glass, and connect with drain of column; at some point between blow-out cock of water-glass and junction of its drain-pipe with drain of column a three-fourths inch brass-body globe-valve is to be placed.

All the above is to be securely strapped to boiler fronts to insure steadiness.

Fire-floor.—A fire-floor, consisting of corrugated cast-iron plates, shall be provided, extending not less than 8 feet from boiler fronts.

Flues.—A flue of No. 10 wrought-iron shall connect boilers to stack. Each section of flue shall have an area equal to the area of the flue surface of its own boiler plus that of the others whose smoke and flame pass through it.

A cleaning-door shall be placed near entrance of flue into stack, and also one midway its length. Above-described flue to be circular and to be hung by straps from ceiling. A damper to be placed in each boiler's breeching and be operated by an automatic governor or regulator equal to Peerless, etc. The present floor flue from boilers can be utilized for new battery, but it is to be carried by contractors into the present air-flue marked on plan; said flue is to be made into smoke-stack for proposed battery by the Government, contractors to connect thereto.

Feed-pump.—A duplex steam-pump equal to Worthington, Dean, Knowles & Co., size 10 by 7 by 10 inches, with a discharge of 300 gallons per minute at a piston speed not to exceed 100 feet per minute, with a 4-inch discharge to boiler-feed pipes (each and all), and said pump to be fitted with brass plungers, rods, and rings, located as directed by Government's agent, set on brick foundation, capped with a cast-iron dished sole-plate, extending 8 inches beyond ends and sides of pump, with drain pipe from said plate to ash-pan of nearest boiler. Steam-pipe of pump to be arranged to receive steam from each or all boilers, separately or collectively. Exhaust to discharge into siphon condenser; also to main exhaust elsewhere provided. Pump also to have a discharge pipe, suitable for and provided with fire-hose connection.

Lubricators.—Pump to be fitted with sight-feed lubricators attached to steam-pipe (equal to Detroit). Feed-water or discharge pipe of the pump must be arranged to supply boilers both through the feed-water heater and out and around or independent of said heater, with all necessary stop-valves.

Feed-water heater.—A feed-water heater equal to Baragwanath or Berryman shall be provided, containing not less than 400 square feet heating surface; tubes of O. S. seamless brass, with drain-pipe from overflow or safety release to sewer.

Efficiency test.—All relief or overflow valves to be prompt in action and seat tightly. Said heater, when working with 80 pounds pressure on boilers and temperature of supply-water at 50° Fahrenheit, shall deliver its feed-water, at point of said heater's discharge, at a temperature of not less than 210° Fahrenheit.

Contractors shall place in feed-pipe, at or near points of entrance and discharge from heater, T's, to receive thermometers; size of thermometer stock, three-fourths inch. Exhaust-pipe of engine is to be arranged similar to feed-water supply pipes—i. e., discharging both through heater and also independent of said heater to condenser by intervention of suitable stop-valves.

Injector.—An injector, equal to Korting's double tube, of 400 horse-power capacity, and to be connected to work from and discharge to each boiler separately and all collectively.

Ladder.—A light iron ladder is to be provided and secured to either side wall of battery for access to top thereof.

Firing tools.—A set of firing tools, consisting of two slice-bars, two hoes, and two large coaling-shovels, shall be supplied.

Steam-flue.—Also one steam-flue cleaner for said boilers, fitted complete with steam connections, hose, clamp, etc., all attached ready for use.

Fire-hose.—Also 50 feet of 1½-inch 3-ply hydrant hose (with reel and nozzle), connected to city water supply, for wetting down ashes, filling boilers, etc. A connection to discharge-pipe of steam-pump for fire purposes is to be provided.

Joints.—All steam piping joints, etc., shall be tested with hydrostatic test of not less than 150 pounds per square inch, and all defects, leaks, etc., remedied before steam is turned on.

A working plan.—A set of shop or working plans, showing boiler setting, location of heater, pump, connections, etc., shall be submitted by the contractors for the approval of the inspector and person placed in charge of the work and before the work is commenced.

Water connections.—The water supply for the entire plant shall be made from the nearest point of city service on south side of Capitol building (about 75 feet from face of southern terrace) and must be independent of any similar service in the building. The supply-pipe to be of double extra strong lap-welded wrought-iron and 8 inches in diameter. Sod over trench for same to be carefully relaid, and pipe to be laid in brick-lined trench throughout its course in the building.

Discharge of siphon condenser.—The discharge of siphon condenser shall be delivered into the large sewer at point marked "sewer" on plan.

ENGINES AND SHAFTING.

Engines.—Contractors shall supply and erect as per plan submitted, two engines, of the type known as high-speed, automatic cut-off, self-contained engine, of the best construction in all their parts, and equal in general efficiency and finish to any of the well-known makes, as Armington & Simms, or Porter-Allen, N. Y. Safety, etc. Proposals submitting other types of engines of slower speed, as any of the well-known forms of Corliss, must be accompanied by sketch plan showing proposed method of driving main shaft, and the space to be required by such arrangement must not exceed the area shown on accompanying plan of location of engine-room and general arrangement of engines and dynamos.

Horse-power.—They shall be capable of delivering with a speed of not over 250 revolutions per minute, with an initial pressure of 80 pounds per square inch, and cutting off at ½ stroke, 200 horse-power each, with a consumption of coal of not more than 3 pounds per hour per horse-power. They shall be placed upon hard brick foundations, capped with sole-plate or stone, unless engines are built upon solid bed-plates of their own, in which event the stone or plate may be omitted. Engines of slower speed, as above referred to, must exhibit an equal efficiency. Foundations are to be laid in cement and laid complete not less than thirty days before the engines are placed thereon. Bed-plate of engine to be rust-jointed to foundations at outer edges. All shaft foundations to be laid similar in depth and character.

Running.—Engines must run smooth and without heating in any of the frictional parts. They are to be supplied with automatic sight-feed lubricators.

Connections.—Each engine shall be connected by means of a 200 horse-power friction-clutch coupling equal in efficiency and general construction to the improved Frisbie or Moore & White Co.'s, etc., to a section of 6-inch shaft, with fast and (bracketed) loose pulleys as per plan submitted.

Auxiliary engine.—An auxiliary engine of not less than 50 indicated horse-power under former expressed conditions, must be provided and placed with necessary belting, piping, etc., as indicated in general engine plan.

Valves.—Steam and exhaust connections are to be made by means of suitable intermediate valves in such manner as will permit of operating engines singly or collectively.

Indicator attachments.—All engines must be provided with complete devices for indicator attachments and for back-pressure gauge attachment on exhaust side.

Trimmings.—Engine must have cylinders lagged with fancy wood, brass-banded or finished in equal style, frames and bed-plate painted and striped in an artistic manner. Trimmings to be nickel-plated. A full and complete set of polished wrenches for each engine, mounted upon black walnut wrench-board and secured to engine-room wall, shall be supplied. Two complete sets of oil-cans, squirt-cans, and trays shall be supplied.

Shafting.—Main connecting shaft between engines shall be in three pieces of hammered wrought-iron bearings, as per plan, 18 feet long, of best pattern, babbited; there shall be supplied said shaft and placed as per plan, two friction clutches capable of transmitting not less than 200 horse-power; each of said clutches must be operated by wheel and screw, with bell-lever arm, and run at their maximum load without slip, heating, or jamming. Proposal must state style and name of clutch proposed to be used.

There shall also be provided (placed as per general plan) two jaw-clutches worked by similar means; jaws to be steel-faced.

Pulleys.—There shall be placed upon said shaft six main driving-pulleys, 10-inch face, 86 inches diameter, with bracketed loose pulleys, same dimensions, for carrying belt while idle. Loose pulleys will revolve on bracket bearing of substantial pattern bolted to foundation plates.

Shoes.—Cast-iron shoes (water-tight) for fly-wheel and pulley-pits are to be provided for main line of shafts.

Lubricators.—All bearings are to be supplied with drop-feed lubricators and have drain-pans provided for collecting drippings.

Railing.—A brass railing, with posts of polished cast-iron, brass mounted, acorn tops and collars, to extend as shown on plan; railing 1½-inch brass, single rail.

Foundations.—Foundations for engines, shaft bearings, loose-pulley brackets, etc., dynamos, feed-water heater, pumps, etc., are to be of brick laid in Portland cement.

Piping (steam).—All live-steam piping to engines from boiler must be not less than 20 per cent. in area in excess of the combined throttle area of all engines, and contain expansion device, by joint or otherwise, to prevent strain upon engine connection, with necessary drain pipes and valves. In engine-room all steam and exhaust piping must be laid in covered brick trenches beneath floor.

Exhaust.—Exhaust piping from engines must be not less than 20 per cent. in excess of the combined area of all engines from the point of their junction to heater. It must also, by means of proper connection, be arranged to discharge into condenser without passing through heater. Exhaust pipes through engine-room must be laid in a brick-lined trench and covered with removable cast-iron lids or plates. Pockets of same under engine must be bricked and concreted. Trenches to be of sufficient size to allow jacketing or covering pipes.

Outside exhaust pipe.—In addition to exhaust connection to siphon condenser, hereinafter described, an exhaust pipe, extending not less than 20 feet above roof, with muffler and drain, shall be provided, the same to be connected with intermediate valve to condenser referred to; to be securely braced and stayed to sides of building and run up inside of air-flue, on plan, proposed to be used as smoke-stack; to be of double-extra, lap-welded wrought-iron; fitted with drain pipe and valve at bottom.

Drain piping.—All necessary drain piping from engines, heater, and other appliances shall be provided and laid in trenches to point of discharge into sewer.

Condenser.—A siphon condenser shall be provided sufficient in size to receive the exhaust of all engines and pump working unitedly at their maximum capacity and with a condensing temperature of 70° Fahrenheit in water supply to produce a vacuum of not less than 26 inches. Discharge from condenser to be into adjacent sewer. Condenser in construction to be similar to and discharge in same sewer as one now in the building. Discharge to be in some point in terrace.

Auxiliary exhaust discharge.—Connection is to be made from exhaust of condenser to exhaust to atmosphere, rendering the two systems interchangeable.

Covering.—All boiler domes, live-steam pipes, all exhaust pipes to heater and feed-water heater are to be covered with a non-radiating material of sectional pattern equal to the magnesia sectional covering.

Electrical dynamos.—There shall be provided six dynamos, each to deliver, when driven at normal speed, sufficient current, having an E. M. F. of not less than 50 nor more than 120 volts, to maintain five hundred incandescent lamps each (of 16 candle-power each), at a rate not greater than 4 watts per candle—i. e., each dynamo must have an output of not less than 32,500 watts.

The armature must run cool on its bearings without use of water, be well balanced, have hard copper collector sections, and allow but trifling sparking, carrying maximum load.

Dynamos shall discharge their currents in multiple arc to reservoir bars upon back of switch-board, and thence by circuit levers, as hereinafter described, to various parts of the building.

Foundation.—They shall be placed upon brick foundations laid in cement and mounted upon frames of oak, ash, or other hard wood, fitted with adjusting levers or wheel and screw for belt-tightening. Journals shall be supplied with automatic sight-feed (drop) lubricators.

Rheostat.—There shall be supplied, should the dynamos not be self-regulating to their maximum capacity, one individual or balancing rheostat for each dynamo, the same to be placed on and form a part of main switch-board, hereinafter provided, and a large or universal rheostat for the entire system (controlled by an automatic regulator or motor) and of sufficient capacity to govern the entire system at its maximum rate of operation. All the above to be protected by incombustible casings.

Potential indicator.—A potential indicator for entire system shall be supplied and form part of the switch-board and connected at some remote part of system. A similar indicator shall be placed in the office of the chief engineer of the House of Representatives, and both calibrated to correspond. Drop or potential fall must not exceed 5 per cent. between reservoir bars of switch-board and any lamp in any part of the building, plant running with maximum load.

Amperemeters.—Individual amperemeters for each dynamo shall be supplied and built in switch-board.

Switch-board.—A switch-board of hard, fancy wood (mahogany or walnut, etc.), built in heavy panels to allow for shrinkage, shall be provided. It shall be of artistic design, and, in addition to containing appliances previously mentioned, it shall also be furnished with a heavy lever switch for each dynamo in addition to that provided usually upon dynamos and of such design as will prevent accidental closing of the dynamo circuit. All switches, plugs, or other current-carrying devices placed upon the switch-board are to be insulated therefrom by glass, asbestos, or other non-combustible material as will effectually prevent or protect the same from fire; switch-board to be located at such point in dynamo-room as may be selected by Government's agent.

Circuit switches.—Lever or switches of other pattern shall be arranged upon face of the board to control circuits of the following places, namely, all lamps in sub-basement. All lamps upon other floors (basement, principal story, and attic) shall be divided into two circuits, each controlled by switch on said board, except that all lamps in the House Chamber shall be upon a separate service controlled by switch, as hereinafter described; also all lamps in Tholus. Fusible safety strips or plugs shall be placed in each "leg" of all circuits back of switch-board. Lamps in House Chamber shall be controlled by a group-switch for the galleries, another for lamps in gallery face, and another for special "bowl" fixtures in ceiling, all to be controlled by one main switch.

Names, letters, or numbers.—Dynamos shall be lettered or numbered, and each fusible strip, box, or plug, main-circuit switch, dynamo switch shall be lettered or numbered to correspond to the dynamo or circuit to which it is attached.

Names, numbers, or letters to be in black letters on nickel-plated strips of metal.

Wiring.—All lamps to be wired in multiple arc, and wires for mains and distributers shall be of copper, conductivity not less than 96 per cent., and insulated with rubber or okenite, in addition to a layer of rubber next wire, which must be unvulcanized, and all wires are to be wrapped with insulating tape, and the insulation must be of such character in its physical composition as shall permit it to sustain a temperature of 212 degrees without deterioration structurally. It shall be equal to the best grades of okenite or Grimshaw's white core, and contractors must submit specimens of the wire they propose to use (a specimen of each size), together with a statement of its resistance per thousand. No wires of any inferior grade than those required as above and accepted with contractor's proposal shall be admitted in any part of this work. Wires about engine and boiler rooms must also have wrapping or braiding of asbestos braid or tape.

Molding.—All wires in the building shall be concealed from view, except in such cases as specially provided. Wires concealed in plastering must be lead-incased. All other wires must be concealed in pine or poplar moldings, the same to be of well-seasoned material and free from knots or liability to shrink or warp. The molding shall consist of a back board, grooved for the necessary number of wires, grooves of such size as will allow wires to lie easily therein without jamming, the wires to be fastened with fiber staples; the face strip of molding to be grooved or beaded on its exterior face and fastened by screws to the back board. A short section of face strip shall be placed over each joint and marked with a star, painted or stamped thereon.

All screw holes are to be countersunk and puttied, and the face of all moldings is to be painted or stained to match the surface to which they are attached. Paint in all instances to be of best lead and not less than three coats or more if necessary to match surfaces adjoining. In damp places, back board of molding must be kept at least one-eighth inch from wall or ceiling.

Blind molding.—All molding carried from cornice to chandeliers must be continued "blind" from chandelier to opposite cornice.

Frescoed ceilings.—In rooms containing frescoed ceilings, such as room of Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, moldings may be dispensed with and silk-covered duplex wire may be run direct from cornice to chandelier.

Ornamental plaster-work, center-pieces, etc.—Where chandeliers are suspended in the midst of ornamental center-pieces the wires from main to said chandelier shall be lead-covered and laid in grooves cut in the plaster of ceiling to center-piece, and across center-piece they shall be tucked or stowed in the least observable manner to chandeliers; lead casing of wire to be painted to match center-piece. The above is to be the method of wiring all chandeliers in corridors of basement, principal story, and attic, and all rooms in the building having ornamental plaster center-pieces. Contractors' attention is specially directed to this provision: Grooves are to be subsequently filled with plaster and painted to match ceiling through which they run. This feature of the work will be specially enforced. Chandeliers in corridor of attic story may be wired from floor-ing above.

Insulating joints.—All gas fixtures, piping, stanchions, or metal fixtures of any character whatever to which wires are attached are to be insulated from "earth" by means of insulating joints or other device. On fixtures all insulating joints must be placed between point of contact of wire with fixture and gas connection. Each fixture is to have in its base, or at some convenient point near it, a double-pole safety device with incombustible base.

Wires from dynamo to board.—All wires leading from dynamos to switch-board must be lead-covered and laid in covered brick trenches from each dynamo to said board.

Wire passing through walls, door-frames, ceilings, etc., must be inclosed in hard rubber tubes, securely closed at ends to wire.

Joints.—All joints or splices of wire to be heavily soldered and wrapped with insulating tape; on mains, in addition to tape, a rubber sleeve secured with insulating tape at each end is to be placed over every joint.

Safety plugs or other devices of this character must be covered with removable lids and have incombustible bases. They must be plainly marked with the number of 16 candle-power lamps they are intended to carry, and in all cases be readily accessible.

Rise of temperature.—No safety device will be permitted on any line which (device) will allow a rise of temperature in said line of more than 30 degrees above the surrounding atmosphere. Such devices are to be placed at every point where size of wire for any purpose is reduced.

Calculations relative to the distribution of the current must take into consideration the probability of there being subsequently required a service sufficient for the maintenance of two hundred 32 candle-power lamps (bowl fixtures) for use in lighting ceiling of House Chamber.

Proposals must submit a separate bid for performing this service, supplying the lamps (not the fixtures), sockets, and wiring and making necessary connections thereto.

Electrical contractors must supply all lamps and their sockets for fixtures, make all connections hereinafter referred to in fixtures, furnish all cable drops, with their lamps, sockets, shades, and holders, and wall or ceiling blocks, as hereinafter described.

Lamps.—There shall be provided incandescent electric lamps of 16 candle-power each and of 32 candle-power each, as per number on plans submitted, namely, about 810 lamps of 32 candle-power each and 2,500 (a few more or less) 16 candle-power. All lamps shall be provided with key sockets, except those in Tholus, in the Chamber of the House of Representatives, and those on special fixtures in Rotunda over paintings, but each fixture in places thus referred to shall have a key or switch for the number of lights therein.

Tholus.—Lamps for special fixtures in Tholus are to be provided of following colors, namely:

Colored lamps.—Red, blue, and white—i. e., sufficient lamps as per special fixture design of each color for each circle. Fixture in Tholus is to be wired with three mains, one for each circle of lamps, and each to be controlled by a separate switch placed in the dynamo-room. Lines leading thereto are to be concealed in moldings until they reach a point in upper frame-work of Dome, when they may be run on porcelain knobs to Tholus. Corrugated-metal reflectors are to be provided for Tholus, one for each space between windows thereof (8); reflectors to be full length of windows, and to be supplied by electrical contractor.

Shade-holders, shades, etc.—All lamps are to be provided with shade-holders and shades. In sub-basement they are to be plain porcelain, flat disk for cable drops, and where above desks, etc., to be bell-shaped.

Shade and shade-holders.—Lamp shades or globes in basement are to be cable drops, flat disk; in chandeliers in corridors, ornamental etched glass; in committee-rooms, of glass in fancy designs, flower or lily-shaped, crimped edges. On the principal floor and attic the same provisions are to be made as described for basement, except in the matter of lamps on fixtures in the House of Representatives. These are to be provided with shade-holders, with shades of slightly-tinted or opalescent glass, flower pattern, crimped edges, and all lamps are to be made of slightly ground or frosted glass in Chamber of the House.

Lanterns or bowls.—Lamps overhead are to be inclosed in lanterns formed of corrugated or diamonded opalescent glass bowls; said bowls are to be inclosed in fine wire mesh or net, secured to frame of bowl to prevent accidents from breaking.

Lanterns continued.—Lanterns: Forty, as per drawing submitted or similar thereto, above floor of House are to be placed at intersection of beams of ceiling and arranged to lower from above, by means of safety chains, to within 7 feet of floor. Wires leading to said lanterns are to be run on upper side of beams (in the skylight or lantern space above) and put in wooden moldings; the bottom molding strip to be kept clear of iron beam by short pieces or cleats underneath.

Electrical connections to these lanterns are to be such as to permit of their easy detachment for purpose of lowering lamp, and also to be protected from dampness or dust. Design submitted is simply to show general plan. A convenient device for raising and lowering these lamps within 10 feet of floor and a handy method of making electrical attachment thereto must be provided.

Proposals for fixtures must contain a separate bid for supplying and placing of these fixtures. The Government reserves the right to accept such bid at such time as it may determine.

PRESS GALLERY.

The fifty-three special fixtures, as per design submitted, for press-gallery desks are to be made of heavy sheet brass, inside face nickeled, supplied with strong hinge and key to socket of each lamp; all wiring thereto to be carefully concealed.

Lamps on terrace.—The gas-lamps on balcony of terrace (30) are to be fitted with one 32-candle power each, wires thereto to be lead-incased. All lamps shall be interchangeable in their sockets.

Fixture specifications.—All materials used in fixtures must be of the best of their respective kinds, and drawings and specifications submitted herewith or submitted by contractors and accepted as part of their proposal must be executed in their true intent and meaning. Curved pieces must be true and regular, free from kinks and bruises, brazed joints when practicable, finish of fixtures to be polished "old brass," fixtures to be wired with same character of wire as that provided for other portions of the work. The fixtures are to be placed in position by the fixture contractors, but all of the electrical connections—at the ceiling or on walls, in the bodies of the fixtures and at the sockets—will be made by the contractor for the performance of the electrical work. They (electrical contractors) will supply all sockets and cut-outs necessary.

Submitting designs.—Contractors must submit designs and specifications thereof in addition to those provided in these specifications. Specifications must be full and explicit, both as to sizes, material, and general equipment of fixture.

NOMENCLATURE.

All combination fixtures on plans are to be understood as having an equal number of electric lights and gas-jets (each) to that expressing the number of fixture, namely: One 8-light combination chandelier is to be understood as meaning 8 electric lamps and 8 gas-jets on said fixture.

CABLE DROPS AND BLOCKS.

All cable drops and their shades and lamps will be furnished by the electrical contractor. They will furnish suitable wood blocks and place the same in position at the back of all electric brackets, and to hang all electroliers from. These blocks are to be in keeping with the fixtures.

HEIGHT OF STORIES.

The height of stories may be taken from the drawings on file in the Architect's office, and must be verified by the contractor.

In general the chandeliers and pendants will hang at the following heights from the floor (measurements are to tip of burner):

Office rooms, 7 feet 4 inches.

Corridors, if ceiling is 14 feet or less in height, 7 feet 8 inches.

Corridors, if ceiling is more than 14 feet in height, 8 feet.

All work must be finished in a thorough manner, and ornamental work in the most artistic style.

All combination fixtures must be furnished with 5-foot burners and lava tips, chandeliers to be supplied with necessary lengthening pipe and casing.

Drawings.—Full-size working drawings of each fixture must be submitted by contractors to the Government agent supervising the work within thirty days from acceptance of proposal, this requirement also to relate to such designs as, having been submitted by contractors in proposal, shall have been accepted in preference to those herein described.

Shades of clear etched glass and holders of same must be supplied for gas service of combination fixtures. Cup-burners may be substituted for the same in sub-basement or other portion of building which, in the judgment of the Government's agent, does not require glass globes.

Chandeliers must be suspended at a true vertical, using ball joint if required.

The fixtures will be subject to inspection by an agent of the Government during their construction.

Contractors for supplying fixtures will remove the present ones as necessary in the progress of the work, from time to time, and store them in such locality in the building as may be assigned for that purpose.

Test.—A test of thirty days' run shall be made on completion of the plant in all its details.

First ten days.—The plant during the first ten days of said test is to be run at the rate of the ordinary requirements of the service at that period.

Second ten days.—During second ten days of test period it shall, in addition to the regular requirements of the service, be run at its maximum capacity on alternate days for periods of not less than eight hours each.

Third ten days.—During third or last ten days of test, in addition to the regular requirements of the service, it shall be run at such rate and under such conditions as the agent of the Government may prescribe at various periods to permit of such determinations of horse-power, electrical efficiency or output, number and candle-power of lamps, etc., as stipulated in the specifications.

Belting, oils, etc.—The contractors will furnish all necessary belting, equal to Schultz's best A1 solid leather, oak-tanned, short-lap, and during test will furnish all oils necessary for lubricating engines, shafting, dynamos, etc.

Electrical supplies.—The contractors shall furnish all electrical supplies required during the test—i. e., lamps, slips, brushes, etc.—and at the end of test they are to have all broken, defective, or high-resistance lamps removed and replaced with new ones.

Repairs.—If at end of prescribed test the plant is otherwise satisfactory to the Government, any damage to any part of the plant caused by its operation is to be repaired and all defects remedied by and at expense of contractors.

Powers and electrical determinations.—The E. M. F. and Q. of current, candle-power of lamps, number per horse-power and indicated horse-power of engines, and all other requirements relating to the performance of the plant, as described in these specifications, are to be determined by a properly authorized agent of the Government.

During the installation of the plant the transaction of public business is not to be retarded in any manner or interfered with by the persons making the installation, except by permission from the Government's agent in charge of the work.

Placing fixtures.—Combination fixtures must be put in place in such order as not to deprive any large number of rooms or length of corridor entirely without gas. Fixtures provided for Chamber of House must be placed during recess of the same.

Pump test.—All combination fixtures must be submitted to pump test before erection.

Instructors.—The contractors must at their own expense provide sufficient men of proper qualifications to instruct the employés of the Government during the test in the management of the dynamos, engine, and all appurtenances of the plant.

Débris.—The contractors shall remove all débris resulting from the performance of the work herein described from the Capitol, engine, and boiler rooms, and repair all damage done to the premises in the best possible manner.

Notice.—They shall file formal notice with Government's agent of their readiness to begin test.

Suspension.—Should any question arise as to whether the contractors are carrying out these specifications in their true intent and meaning, either during the installation of the work or the period of test, the Government reserves the right to suspend the work of installation or the test of the same until the same shall be determined by the Government.

Finally, these specifications and drawings are meant and intended to include everything essential to a first-class installation of the capacity and style herein specified, and any minor details omitted are to be included as if they were specified.

Changes.—The Government reserves the right to make any changes, additions, or deductions to or from same, at a price to be agreed upon between the contractors and the Government before the same shall be begun.

Completion.—The entire plant, in all its details, shall be completed and ready for test twelve months after the awarding of the contract therefor.

ELECTRIC CALL-BELL SYSTEM.

Call-bells.—Contractors shall supply electric call-bells (diameter of gong, 3 inches) to the number and in the locations as indicated on accompanying plans.

Circuit-closing device.—Said bells are to be operated by means of a commutator switch or other device of similar character, operated by lever or crank, so connected as to ring each and every bell successively; said device to be neatly incased in black walnut box and placed adjacent to seat of Doorkeeper of House of Representatives.

Ground return will not be permitted.

Individual-call board.—An individual-call board, arranged for sixty-four push-button calls, shall be supplied; said board to be of fancy wood (cherry, mahogany, etc.), of artistic design, and not to exceed in area 4 square feet, i. e., 2 feet by 2 feet. The push-buttons shall be flush with surface of said board, and the name of room or place with which it is connected shall be placed directly over it on nickeled plate in black enameled letters, all to be covered with hinged glass door, lock, and key, to be placed convenient to seat of Doorkeeper. Calls upon board to operate same bell in each room operated by commutator switch previously described (except bath-rooms), to which connection need not be made from board.

Bells.—Electric bells shall be mounted upon walnut back-boards, magnets and armatures covered by walnut box, all in smooth finish and varnished; gongs to be nickeled and have clear tone.

Wiring.—Wires for bell service are to be of the same character, both as to insulation and conductivity, as that of similar sizes supplied for electric-lighting circuits; all joints to be soldered; no cleats allowed.

Molding.—They shall in all instances be neatly molded, and, whenever practicable, they shall run in the same moldings concealing parallel service of electric-lighting system. Moldings specially provided for call system are to be painted or stained to match surface to which they are attached.

Battery.—An electric battery, composed of not less than twenty cells, ten in series by two in multiple, shall be provided. They shall be of the kind known as open-circuit batteries, equal in efficiency to the Le Clanche or Gassner. They must be neatly inclosed in a suitable walnut case or box, with cover, lock, and key, secured to wall of room now used by electrician for dynamo of gas-lighting service.

Sealed cells.—All cells must be sealed to prevent evaporation.

INFORMATION.

All communications relative to the work or requesting information thereof must be addressed to—

JOHN DOUGHERTY, Clerk.

By order of the committee.

SAMUEL DIBBLE, Chairman.

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will this joint resolution retain its privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not decide now whether it will retain its privileged character or not. It is a privileged report, and is privileged for consideration if the House should consider it now. The Chair will examine the question suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DIBBLE. If the resolution is to lose its place, I prefer to withdraw the report.

Mr. RANDALL. I give notice that if I should be here, I shall again make the point of order; but I submit that the report can not now be withdrawn, having been referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers not to decide a question of the kind suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina until it is presented practically. The Chair will examine the matter to determine whether under the practice of the House——

Mr. DIBBLE. I prefer to withdraw the report.

Mr. RANDALL. It can not be withdrawn, having been already referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to the withdrawal of the report.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to know what it is. It has not even been printed.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion is in order. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the privileged report.

The motion was not agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

Mr. WHEELER introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Wednesday, the 16th day of January, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the following bills reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, to wit: Bill (H. R. 8189) to determine the final balances of accounts due to and from the United States Government, and for other purposes; bill (H. R. 6127) to determine and increase the pay of watchmen in the Treasury Department; H. Res. 164, for the appointment of a joint committee of both Houses of Congress to inquire into existing irregularities, if any, in the compensation of the officers and employés of the Executive Departments and bureaus of the Government; bill (H. R. 9518) providing for leave of absence for officers and employés in the service of the Government who receive per diem compensation; bill (H. R. 9767) authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint a board of engineers to investigate certain claims for damages done to planted oysters in Raritan Bay in 1881; bill (H. R. 11392) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to establish signal stations on the West India Islands; bill (H. R. 11530) to establish camps of refuge during yellow-fever epidemics; and if one day be not sufficient time in which to dispose of said bills, this shall be a continuing order from day to day until they are disposed of.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House that from and after this date the House convene daily at 11 o'clock a. m.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. ROGERS introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the propriety of amending the existing laws regulating the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, in order to correct the practice reported to exist in some of said courts of allowing suits to be maintained therein by assignees of choses in action, not made by a corporation, which could not have been maintained therein if no assignment had been made; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

SAN LUIS OBISPO A PORT OF ENTRY AND DELIVERY.

Mr. VANDEVER introduced a bill (H. R. 12102) to extend the privileges of immediate transportation to San Luis Obispo, and to constitute said place a port of entry and delivery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MONTEREY HARBOR, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. VANDEVER also introduced a bill (H. R. 12103) to authorize the purchase of land in front of Point Pinos light-station, at the entrance of Monterey Harbor, California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MANAGER OF NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. MORROW (by Mr. MCKENNA) introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 252) appointing James A. Waymire, of California, a manager for the national soldiers' homes for disabled soldiers, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William Blanding; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, introduced a bill (H. R. 12104) to extend the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and for other purposes, to the Indians residing upon the Klamath River reservation in California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SANITARY INSPECTOR, MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

NATIONAL MILITARY AND NAVAL MUSEUM.

Mr. TOWNSHEND introduced a bill (H. R. 12111) to establish a national military and naval museum in the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INTEREST-BEARING DEBT, UNITED STATES.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (H. R. 12112) to provide for refunding the outstanding interest-bearing debt of the United States, and to make provision for retiring national-bank notes and substituting therefor United States Treasury notes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask by unanimous consent that the entire bill be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to provide for refunding the outstanding interest-bearing debt of the United States, and to make provision for retiring national-bank notes and substituting therefor United States Treasury notes for currency.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue in sums not exceeding in the aggregate $1,000,000,000, and not to exceed so much thereof as may be required to refund the present interest-bearing debt of the United States which is now represented by coupon or registered bonds bearing 4½ and 4 per cent. interest, in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $50, or of some multiple of that sum, payable in coin of the present standard value, and redeemable at such time and in such manner as is hereinafter prescribed. Said bonds to bear interest as hereinafter provided, such interest to be payable quarterly in each year, and all bonds so issued, together with the interest thereon, shall be free from taxation in any form, under any State, municipal, or local authority, and shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States.

SEC. 2. Of the bonds so as aforesaid to be issued there shall be two classes. One class shall be payable, at the pleasure of the United States, at any time after the expiration of public notice given to the holders thereof in the manner hereinafter provided; and on this class of bonds the interest shall be at the rate of 2½ per cent. per annum, payable as provided in section 1 of this act; but bonds so issued, bearing such interest, shall not be available for the use of national banks for banking purposes, as is now provided for by law or as may be provided for in this act.

The other class of bonds authorized in this act to be issued shall bear interest at 2 per cent. per annum, payable as provided in section 1 of this act, and shall be redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the same or any portion of them shall cease to be required or used by national banks in the manner hereinafter provided, and shall be registered in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury shall offer the bonds so as aforesaid provided for at par and accrued interest, and at no less, and shall receive for the same United States Treasury notes, notes of solvent national banks, gold and silver coin of the United States, and certificates of the same as now issued, or which may hereafter be issued by the United States Treasury at their par value; and he shall also receive in exchange for said bonds any interest-bearing obligations of the United States now outstanding which bear interest at 4½ or 4 per cent. per annum, such bonds to be received at par and accrued interest.

SEC. 4. Whenever and as soon as the sales of bonds herein provided for shall reach the sum of $10,000,000, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to call in and redeem, in the order and manner now provided for by law, an equal amount of the now outstanding bonds of the United States at par and accrued interest, and the bonds so called shall be canceled and discharged in the manner now provided for by law. And in like manner the said Secretary shall continue the sale of the bonds as provided for in this act, and shall redeem and refund the present outstanding 4 and 4½ per cent. bonds until all are redeemed, refunded, or paid.

SEC. 5. That every association now formed for the purpose of banking under existing laws of the United States, or which may hereafter be formed under the same or amendments thereto, may, in the manner provided for by law, deposit with and transfer to the Treasurer of the United States the bonds issued under the provision of this act, and bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum, in sums of $10,000 or any multiple thereof, and shall receive from the Treasury Department an equal amount of Treasury notes at their face value, in all respects like the Treasury notes now in circulation, which shall be for that purpose issued by the Treasury Department in the manner provided for by law.

SEC. 6. That the bonds transferred to and deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, as hereinbefore provided, by any banking association for exchange for United States Treasury notes shall be held for that purpose and for the benefit of such banking association; and such association shall have the right, at the expiration of any quarter in which the interest on said bonds becomes due and payable, to repay to the Treasury any portion of the amount of United States Treasury notes received by such banking association for the bonds so deposited, equaling the par value of any bond or multiple thereof, whereupon such bond or bonds shall be exempt from the custody and control of the Treasury Department, and shall be subject only to the custody and control of such banking association: Provided, however, That said banking association may, at any subsequent time during its corporate existence, again deposit with and transfer such bonds, or any of them, with the Treasurer and receive in lieu thereof United States Treasury notes subject to the conditions provided for in this act.

SEC. 7. That from and after the delivery by the Treasury Department to any banking association provided for in this act, or to any banking association formed under the laws now in force, of Treasury notes now issued as provided for in section 5 of this act, and until the return of such Treasury notes by said banking association, such association shall accept and receive from the United States 1 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly, in full payment for interest on the bonds remaining deposited by it as security for Treasury notes so as aforesaid delivered to such banking association: And it is further provided, That the one-quarter of the 1 per cent. thus allowed to the banking association shall be retained annually by the Treasury Department and held in trust for the benefit of all the banking associations that shall accept of the provisions of this act, and the same shall constitute a fund to be known as the depositors' fund.

SEC. 8. The depositors' fund, provided for in section 7 of this act, shall be used as follows: Whenever any banking association doing business under this act, or any act to which this is amendatory, shall fail to pay its depositors in full, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency to appoint a receiver for such association in the same manner as is now provided for by law in cases where banking associations fail to redeem their notes of issue; and if after disposing of all the assets of such association, and exhausting the liabilities of its directors under existing law in the manner now provided, it shall be found that the proceeds of such assets are insufficient to pay in full and discharge such liabilities to depositors, then the deficiency shall be made good so far as possible from the depositors' fund, as aforesaid provided.

SEC. 9. It shall be lawful for the holders of any of the bonds bearing 2½ per cent. interest, issued under the provisions of this act at any time previous to the call of the said bonds for redemption by the Treasury of the United States, to exchange the same for bonds bearing 2 per cent. interest, authorized in this act at par and accrued interest for each class, and any 2 per cent. bonds so issued for the redemption of bonds bearing 2½ per cent. interest shall be subject to the same conditions as the 2 per cent. bonds first issued under this act.

SEC. 10. Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury has received the notes of solvent national banks in payment for bonds issued under the provisions of this act, he shall hold the same for redemption by the banking associations issuing the same, and said associations may, under such rules and regulations as the Treasury Department shall prescribe, exchange any bonds now held by the Treasury and belonging to any banking association for bonds bearing 2 per cent. interest, to be issued under the provisions of this act; and the Treasury Department shall, if so required by any such association, provide for and carry into effect any exchange of Treasury notes for national-bank notes that may be necessary to retire such bank notes by substituting therefor Treasury notes, as provided for in this act.

SEC. 11. That the maximum amount of United States notes outstanding and to be used as a part of the circulating medium, as provided for in section 6 of 'An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of national-bank currency, and for other purposes," passed June 20, 1874, be, and hereby is, authorized to be enlarged by such an amount as may be required to substitute such United States notes for national-bank notes, and to furnish to national banks a circulating medium for the amount of bonds deposited by national banking institutions, as provided for in this act; but nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to authorize the retiring of the United States Treasury notes now outsanding from circulation, as provided for by law.

SEC. 12. From and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for any banking association to issue national bank-notes, and as soon as such notes now outstanding are retired in the manner provided for in this act, they shall be canceled and destroyed in the manner provided for by law.

SEC. 13. All banking associations organized under the provisions of this act, or which, being now organized, may at any time surrender the bonds of the Government owned by them and held by the Secretary of the Treasury as security for the circulating notes of such banking association for the purpose of exchanging the same for the 2 per cent. bonds authorized by this act, and which shall receive Treasury notes for the purpose of circulation, shall be governed in every respect by the laws now existing for the government and regulation of national banks, except so far as relates to national-bank notes; but all laws relating to the redemption and cancellation of national-bank notes shall remain in full force and operation as long as any such national-bank notes are outstanding unredeemed.

SEC. 14. That section 1 of an act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes, passed July 12, 1882, be so amended as to read as follows: "That any national banking association organized under the acts of February 25, 1863, June 3, 1864, and February 14, 1880, or under sections 5133, 5134, 5135, 5136, and 5154 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, may, at any time within the two years next previous to the date of the expiration of its corporate existence under the present law, and with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, to be granted as hereinafter provided, extend its period of succession by amending its articles of association for a term of not more than twenty years from the expiration of succession named in said articles of association, and at the expiration of such extended corporate existence such banking association may in like manner extend its succession for the further period of twenty years, and shall have such succession for such extended period, unless sooner dissolved by the act of shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some violation of law, or unless hereafter modified or repealed."

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Treasury may make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as in his judgment may be required for carrying into effect the same.

SEC. 16. All laws and parts of laws now in force contrary to the provisions of this act are hereby repealed. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG-SIGNAL, CHICAGO.

Mr. ADAMS introduced a bill (H. R. 12113) for the establishment of a light-house and steam fog-signal on the outer breakwater at the harbor of Chicago, Ill.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

STEAM-TENDER FOR GREAT LAKES.

Mr. ADAMS also introduced a bill (H. R. 12114) for an appropriation for the construction of a steam-tender for the service of the Great Lakes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

R. 12117) to amend and re-enact section 5 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Louisiana into two judicial districts," approved March 3, 1881; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LONG introduced a bill (H. R. 12118) concerning the service of members of Congress in connection with charitable institutions in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

STEAM-TENDER FOR GREAT LAKES.

Mr. CUTCHEON introduced a bill (H. R. 12119) making an appropriation for the construction of a steam-tender for service of the Great Lakes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF TORPEDO-BOATS.

Mr. CHIPMAN introduced a bill (H. R. 12120) for the construction of four semi-submerging torpedo-boats with armored, protected, deflective decks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BELDUKE COMBINATION PROPELLER.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. 12121) for testing the Belduke combination propeller; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONSIDERATION OF PRIVATE PENSION BILLS ON SATURDAY.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas this House has designated Friday evenings until half past 10 o'clock as the time for the consideration of private pension bills; and

Whereas, by reason of the non-attendance of a quorum on those evenings, action on said bills is impossible; and

Whereas, also, it is the duty of Congress to grant the reasonable relief sought by the veteran soldiers of the Republic: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That during the remainder of the session, on Saturday of each week, after the reading of the Journal, all bills on the Private Calendar relating to private pensions shall be the first and only business until they are disposed of.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE IN THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HOOKER introduced a bill (H. R. 12122) to provide for an additional judge in the State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

FREE COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. BLAND introduced a bill (H. R. 12123) for the free coinage of silver, and other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR ST. CHARLES, MO.

Mr. HATCH introduced a bill (H. R. 12124) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the mouth of the Femme Osage Creek and a point 2 miles above the city of St. Charles, in the county of St. Charles, in the State of Missouri;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION AND EQUALIZATION, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. MCKINNEY (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 12125) to reorganize and equalize the rank and pay of the personnel of the United States Navy, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG-SIGNAL IN PRINCESS BAY, NEW YORK.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL introduced a bill (H. R. 12126) for the establishment of a light-house and a fog-signal at Old Orchard Shoal, in Princess Bay, State of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS ARTICLES ON PASSENGER STEAMERS.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. 12127) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes, regulating the carriage of dangerous articles on passenger steamers, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. TRACEY introduced a bill (H. R. 12128) providing for the enforcement of the eight-hour law on Government premises; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TRACEY. I ask unanimous consent to have that bill printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to have the bill which he has just introduced printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any contract is made by or on behalf of the Government of the United States with any corporation, person, or persons, for the performance of any work, the contracting party or parties shall agree that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics while employed on premises owned or occupied by the Government of the United States at work required by such contract.

DANGER TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. FARQUHAR (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 12129) to prevent dangers to ocean, lake, and river navigation from rafts of logs or timber; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

FORBIDDING CLERKS, ETC., OF COURTS ACTING AS RECEIVERS, ETC.

Mr. FARQUHAR also introduced a bill (H. R. 12130) to amend act of March 3, 1879, chapter 183 (Supplement to Revised Statutes, page 464, paragraph 2); which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. COWLES introduced a bill (H. R. 12131) to amend the internal-revenue laws.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. COWLES. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I do so for the reason that on the 17th day of last December I introduced a resolution to that effect which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, but that resolution has met with no response.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. COWLES. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that it contains verbatim et literatim the provisions of the Mills bill relative to the internal revenue.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN (interrupting the reading). The statement of the gentleman from North Carolina is sufficient, and I do not insist on the further reading.

Mr. COWLES. I desire to make a verbal amendment in the bill as read. I desire 1888 made 1889. It is corrected in the other parts of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think the question properly goes to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so decided; but the gentleman from North Carolina moves to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations. Of course it is in the power of the House to send it wherever it chooses.

The question was taken on referring the bill to the Committee on Appropriations; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COWLES. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; when the Speaker announced that 36 gentlemen had arisen in support of the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The other side.

The other side was counted.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-three gentlemen have arisen on the other side, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. MACDONALD. I desire the reading of the bill.

The bill was read for information.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon referring this bill to the Committee on Appropriations. Upon this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 126, nays 91, not voting 106; as follows:

So the bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, on all political questions, until further notice.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. COWLES. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to refer was agreed to; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Upon that I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House provide that a bill which has been referred to a committee can not be brought back to the House by a motion to reconsider.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 10323) to incorporate the American Historical Association;

An act (H. R. 10869) to construct a road from Florence, S. C., to the national cemetery adjacent thereto; and

An act (H. R. 10023) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FRENCH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for two days, on account of important business.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING, GREENSBOROUGH, N. C.

Mr. BROWER introduced a bill (H. R. 12132) appropriating the sum of $20,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the United States Government building at Greensborough, N. C.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF TOBACCO TAXES.

Mr. BROWER also introduced a bill (H. R. 12133) to repeal the tax on tobacco in all its forms, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWER moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BROWER, and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BROWER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 42 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 117, not voting 105; as follows:

ADMISSION OF UTAH.

Mr. DUBOIS presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho, against the admission of Utah as a State; which was read, and by unanimous consent ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

House joint memorial No. 1.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the council and house of representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho, most respectfully represent:

That the proposed admission of the Territory of Utah as a State would be a calamity, not only to every loyal gentile citizen of the Territory, but to the general public, and especially to those States and Territories adjacent to Utah.

That the admission of Utah would place the government of the State directly in the hands of the leaders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church, an organization treasonable in its teachings and practices to the United States Government; that many of said leaders are now, and have been for months past, fugitives from justice, and under indictment for crimes against the laws of the United States; others are serving terms in the penitentiary for similar crimes.

That the members of this treasonable organization, known as the Mormon Church, largely outnumber the loyal gentile citizens in said Territory, and consequently will, and for many years to come would, have absolute control of all elections therein.

That all pretenses of an abandonment of bigamy, polygamy, and other crimes against the laws of the United States are pretenses only, made for the purpose of deceiving persons unacquainted with the abhorred practices of the Mormon Church, and thus create a feeling favorable to the proposed admission of said Territory of Utah.

That the turning over of a State government to said Mormon Church or the leaders thereof would be unsafe and unpolitic, because said church is composed by a large majority of the lowest and most densely ignorant classes of the Old World peasantry, who are in no way Americanized and who have nothing in common with our aims or our republican institutions. They are serfs, and serfs only; slaves to the most tyrannical and despotic organization in existence. They are absolutely under the control of their leaders, and the use of the ballot in their hands would be entirely under the direction of their leaders and a travesty on the election franchise. That there is no severance of church and state in Utah, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

That the admission of Utah and additional power thus given said church would create a dangerous condition of affairs in Idaho and would endanger the welfare of our social and moral institutions.

We, you, memorialists, would therefore respectfully pray that the Territory of Utah be not admitted as a State; and we do further pray that a legislative commission be created for the government of said Territory; and the secretary of this Territory is hereby requested to cause a copy of said memorial to be transmitted at once to the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to Hon. Fred. T. Dubois for presentation in the House of Representatives.

And your memorialists will ever pray, etc.

Passed the house on the 19th day of December, A. D. 1888.

H. Z. BURKHART,
Speaker of the House.

Passed the council December the 20th, A. D. 1888.

J. P. CLOUGH,
President of the Council.

A true copy:

E. J. CURTIS,
Secretary of Idaho.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask the reference of this memorial to the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. It seems to me that properly this memorial should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the memorial could be referred either to the Committee on the Territories or to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that it go to the same committee to which has been referred the proposition for the admission of Utah into the Union as a State.

Mr. DUBOIS's motion was agreed to; and the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

FORT ELLIS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. TOOLE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 12148) to grant to the Territory of Montana the abandoned Fort Ellis military reservation in said Territory for educational purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MONTANA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CROW INDIAN RESERVATION, MONTANA.

Mr. TOOLE (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 11150) granting to the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company a right of way through a part of the Crow Indian reservation, in Montana Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY, FORT CUSTER MILITARY RESERVATION, MONTANA.

Mr. TOOLE (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 12151) granting to the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company a right of way across the Fort Custer military reservation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE.

Mr. MCCREARY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Thursday, 24th day of January, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of measures reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in such order as may be presented by said committee, not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills, and if in any case whatever said day shall not be so used, this order shall continue from day to day until a day is occupied.

ENOS'S MACHINE FOR COUNTING AND RECORDING VOTES.

Mr. COGSWELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be directed to inquire and report on the expediency of introducing a machine into the House, patented by John A. Enos, for the purpose of facilitating the counting and recording of votes.

JUDGMENTS OF CONSULAR COURTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Whereas, by virtue of the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 22, 1860 (Statutes at Large, volume 12, page 73), entitled "An act to carry into effect provisions of the treaties between the United States, China, Japan, Siam, Persia, and other countries, giving certain judicial powers to ministers and consuls or other functionaries of the United States in those countries, and for other purposes," Charles Denby, minister of the United States at Peking, has formally promulgated, under date of August 18, 1888, additional regulations governing the rendition of judgments by confession in the consular courts of the United States in China, the same having been previously assented to by all the consular officers of this Government in that empire:

Now, therefore, in accordance with section 4119 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, being the sixth section of the act above mentioned, and which directs that all such regulations shall be transmitted to the Secretary of State "to be laid before Congress for revision," I do herewith transmit to the Congress a copy of Mr. Denby's dispatch, No. 754, of November 5, 1888, containing the regulations so decreed.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 14, 1889.

DIFFERENTIAL RATES OF TONNAGE DUES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress and such legislation in respect of the matters therein presented as may seem necessary and proper, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying explanatory correspondence, in reference to the international questions arising from the imposition of differential rates of tonnage dues upon vessels entering ports of the United States from foreign countries, under the provisions of the fourteenth section of the act of June 26, 1884, and the later amendatory provisions of the act of June 19, 1886, as set forth in said report.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 14, 1889.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask consideration of the bill H. R. 11785, Report No. 3639. I will state that it relates to the laying of tracks at the Baltimore and Ohio depot for the purpose of the inauguration.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11785) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation and crossing of certain streets in the city of Washington and District of Columbia by the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, to meet the demands of increased travel incident to the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th of March, 1889.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Against that I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. ATKINSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINSON. My point of order is this, that Rule XXVI provides as follows:

That the second and fourth Mondays in each month, after the call of States and Territories, shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

This rule, sir, is imperative, and it is not competent to antagonize the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia by raising the question of consideration.

I desire further to call the attention of the Chair to the wording of the other section of this same rule:

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by the House.

Fridays therefore may, by the rule, be taken by some other committee, or they may not be set apart for the consideration of private business, but this particular day is reserved, by the express language of the rule, for the Committee on the District of Columbia, and nobody has a right to antagonize the business of the committee on the days so specified.
